He quoted Admiral Dewey's opinion that the force of the enemy in the engagement was superior. He then addressed himself to the question as to whether all the elements constituting the opposing force should be taken into consideration, arguing, of course, the affirmative of the proposition. There were four elements—the torpedo boats, the warships, the shore batteries, and the submarine mines. Each of these elements, he insisted, was a menace to the success of Dewey's fleet.

CASE OF THE CLAIMANTS.

The case of the claimants to the double bounty, Mr. King said, rested upon the fact that unarmored ships had passed shore batteries, over submarine mines, to attack a fleet of a greater number of vessels, little inferior in gun power, protected by forts equal to our ships in gun power, and had succeeded in utterly demolishing them. He cited some precedents in support of his contention, among them the case arising out of the running of the forts below New Orleans by Farragut, in which the court had decided that all the elements should be taken into account—the forts and obstructions as well as the naval force captured.

Mr. Micou, who followed Mr. King, devoted himself to an exposition of the statute to show that the bounty was to be paid as a reward for gallantry.

Assistant Attorney General Pradt argued against the claim for $200 "head money," taking the ground that the statute expressly stipulated "vessels," and contained nothing as to "land batteries."

The statute said:

"A bounty shall be paid by the United States for each person on board any ship or vessel of war belonging to an enemy at the commencement of an engagement which is sunk or otherwise destroyed in such engagement by any ship or vessel belonging to the United States or which it may be necessary to destroy in consequence of injuries sustained in action, of $100 if the enemy's vessel was of inferior force, and of $200 if of equal or superior force, to be divided among the officers and crew in the same manner as prize money."

"From this," said the Assistant Attorney General, "it will be seen that the lesser bounty is to be given in case the enemy's vessel (or undoubtedly vessels) was of inferior force, and the greater bounty if of equal or superior force.

"I must admit that the reason which lies at the foundation of the statute is against this view. It would certainly seem that the amount of the bounty to be awarded was intended to be governed by the relative strength of the opposing forces. But if we are to be governed by a strict reading of the statute, may not the conclusion be reached that there is therein simply a failure to provide for the contingency of the co-operation of land batteries with the naval forces destroyed? If so, of course, the court is powerless to supply the omission. And, following the contention of the claimants, may it not be extended to the conclusion that if land forces are to be read into the statute for any purpose, the claim of bounty might extend to any such land batteries destroyed during the engagement by the victorious fleet? Yet that would come very near to reducing the claim to an absurdity."

SUPERIORITY THEORETICAL.

He then advanced the suggestion that the superiority claimed for the enemy in guns as a whole was but a theoretical superiority, saying:

"I ask this question in view of the fact that when the battle was over, the enemy's vessels were either all destroyed or captured and the land batteries were all silenced, and this with very heavy loss in killed and wounded, whereas on our side there were none killed and only seven men slightly wounded, while our squadron was practically in as good condition as it was before the battle. Certainly, if we may be permitted to judge by the results, it seems to be demonstrated that the effective superiority was all on our side.

"In making this suggestion; I, of course, do not, in the slightest, attempt to discount the daring and gallantry of our forces. Neither Commodore, officers, nor men had any right to believe, nor did any one believe otherwise than that they were taking most perilous chances and going into the veritable jaws of death; and if this case is to be decided on the question purely of the gallantry and heroism of our forces, I concede without argument that they are entitled to the larger bounty claimed, but it can hardly be said that that element is the only one to be considered."

EX-SECRETARY HERBERT CLOSES.

Ex-Secretary Herbert closed the case for the claimants. In concluding he said:

"It does not matter in counting the forces on either side in a battle whether some of them are separated from the others by physical distance or by time. Who speaks of the seven days' fight around Richmond as seven distinct and separate battles? Though the fight occupied seven days, it was one great battle for the relief of Richmond, beginning on the 7th of June, when Jackson and Longstreet attacked McClellan's army, until it ended in the dreadful charge at Malvern Hill.

"So with the battle of Manila. It began when the gunners at Boca Grande fired on Dewey's ships. If these ships or any of them had been destroyed, who would have said the battle did not then and there begin? These guns were the Spanish outposts, and from the moment Dewey was discovered and fired upon by them until that other moment when he said, 'You may fire now, Gridley, if you are ready,' the movement was incessant.

"It does not seem to me necessary to argue this question further, for I cannot think that this great tribunal, one of the most dignified of American courts, will for a moment lend itself to the task of minimizing this great American victory by dividing and separating and considering piecemeal the guns and forces which took part in that engagement. Farragut's victory at New Orleans and Dewey's at Manila were substantially alike. Farragut and his brave boys had their reward and the people said Amen. Why should not Dewey and his gallant fleet have also their reward?"

"Open Door" Negotiations Continue.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The negotiations looking to the maintenance of the "open door" in China have now passed to the mail stage. The agreement having been reached through the agency of the cable, it becomes necessary now to resort to the mail to exchange the definite notes in view of the importance of avoiding anything like clerical error or misunderstanding in the last phases of this important negotiation. Therefore it is learned that at least two weeks' time, or perhaps more, will be consumed in the winding up.

THE UNITED SERVICE.

Army.

Capt. John Anderson, upon his own application, is detailed as Professor of Military Science and Tactics at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, Amherst, Mass.

Major Gen. William R. Shafter, United States Volunteers, accompanied by one of his aides-de-camp, will escort the remains of the late Major Gen. Henry W. Lawton, United States Volunteers, from San Francisco to Washington.

Navy.

Naval Cadet A. W. Johnson is ordered to duty on the Texas Jan. 16.

Lieut. Commander E. B. Barry is detached from the Amphitrite Jan. 10, without waiting for relief.

Lieut. Commander U. R. Harris is detached from the Indiana Jan. 15 for examination for promotion at the Washington Navy Yard Jan. 16, thence home and wait orders.

Lieut. Commander L. L. Reamey is detached from the navy yard at Washington, and ordered to the Texas Jan. 15 as executive.

Lieut. Commander A. C. Dillingham is detached from the Texas Jan. 15, and ordered immediately to the Indiana as executive.

Capt. Benjamin P. Lamberton is ordered to duty at the navy yard at Washington as member of the naval retiring board.

Postmasters Nominated.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The President to-day nominated the following Postmasters:

New York—John Heald, Wappinger Falls.

New Jersey—Charles C. Jessup, Woodbury.

Connecticut—William H. Kenyon, Moosup; A. G. Isinp, Danbury.

Fourth-class Postmasters.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—The following fourth-class Postmasters were appointed to-day for New York offices: Fisher's Landing, Clarence Bretsch; Sammonsville, E. A. Wer ale.

THE CASE OF PUERTO RICO.

The inaction of Congress with reference to Puerto Rico is not creditable. It is positively and distinctly discreditable. Gen. DAVIS's testimony does not raise that point. It merely and powerfully enforces the point.

Of course, we do not expect much of Congress in the way of speed or unanimity of action in respect to any question which is or which is capable of being made a party question. What we do expect and what we have a right to expect is that Representatives shall partake the feelings of their constituents, and give effect to the average sentiment on a question which is simply a question of the credit of the country. And eminently such is the question of Puerto Rico.

The plain fact is that here is a community which is distinctly worse off by reason of coming within the "disposition, government, and control" of the United States than it would have been if it had remained a Spanish possession. And it has suffered this injury although the inhabitants of it welcomed our soldiers with joy and have been, ever since our ocupation, anxious to forward every just and reasonable wish of the invaders.

This is a state of things which no patriotic American can contemplate without some self-reproach. And, as we say, we have a right to assume that Congress is composed of patriotic Americans. We have even a right to assume that Congress is composed of Americans of average intelligence. Yet how do the facts square with this assumption?

Congress has been in session for five weeks. When it met it was greeted with a message from the President, explaining the Puerto Rican situation, and adding, by way of recommendation: "Our plain duty is to abolish all customs tariff between the United States and Puerto Rico and to give her products free access to our markets."

It has been demonstrated over and over again that this was what was necessary to Puerto Rico, what was our duty to the people of Puerto Rico, and what was to our own interest and duty as the power which had assumed control of the destinies of Puerto Rico. Half a dozen magazine articles, written by persons of authority, had pointed out our duty. The Secretary of War had argued the case in his report. The President had adopted his conclusions and based upon them a recommendation. The Merchants' Association of New York had supported the argument and the recommendation in an elaborate and convincing report. The case had been shown to be extremely urgent. The Senate had a Colonial Committee. The House had a Comittee on Insular Affairs, before which Gen. DAVIS has been summoned to give his cumulative and superfluous testimony about a matter which, in decency and humanity, admits of no delay. What is Congress waiting for? Why is not the provision putting Puerto Rico on the same footing with the territory of the United States, as regards the disposition of her products, not already part of the law of the land?

There is no answer to this question which will save at once the patriotism and the intelligence of Congress. The inaction of Congress, in so clear a case, is calculated to strengthen the hands of those who maintain that the debating society which sits in the Capitol is, by its nature, unfit to deal with dependencies, and that the way to deal with these is to make "crown colonies" of them, and govern them without reference to the National Legislature. If Congress is not prepared to acquiesce in this conclusion Congress had better make much more haste than it has shown any disposition toward making in securing a rational disposition of the urgent case of Puerto Rico. The question is scarcely less urgent for Congress itself than for the island.

TELL THE WHOLE STORY.

It is to be hoped that the President will see his way clear to send to the Senate all the information called for by Senator HOAR's resolution concerning the Philippines. It would be fortunate if he felt free to send in a good deal more than the resolution calls for. In that way he would not only furnish a complete answer to the Senate's inquiry, but he would enlighten many minds that are now a prey to darkness and error.

The delusions of anti-imperialism are in many cases incurable, no doubt. Some of the Boston cases, for instance, are quite hopeless. But the very great majority of the men who still believe that we should scuttle out of the Philippines, regardless of our obligations and the safety of the orderly people of the islands, are victims of misinformation or of the lack of information. The Administration cannot tell the people too much about the work it has undertaken in the archipelago. The misconceptions upon which the contentions of anti-imperialism are based and the fog of error and prejudice with which the subject has been enveloped will be swept away by a frank exhibition of the nature of the Administration's undertaking in the Philippines and of the motives of its policy.

Nothing would disgust the leading anti-imperialist agitators so much, and nothing would do their deluded followers so much good, as a full compliance with their demands for light. It would be a mistake to keep anything from them that can be printed without prejudice to the public interest. Really, there must be very little that the people cannot be permitted to know, hardly anything that need be kept back. In particular, the President would do well to clear up the Aguinaldo myth. An attempt has been made to create the belief that by the acts of DEWEY or MERRITT or some other commander or by the negotiations of some Consul of the United States we are bound to the rebel chieftain by the ties of alliance. The falsehood has been often enough exposed, but an authoritative denial from the Executive Department would dispose of it forever. Senator HOAR appears to have some curiosity on that subject. Why not gratify it to the full?

The more voluminous and comprehensive the President makes his answer to the Massachusetts Senator's resolution the less trouble he will have with the anti-imperialists in future.

WAR AND TRADE.

A statement from one of the owners of the German East Africa Line has been made public in Hamburg and cabled here, which ought to attract the notice of the British Foreign Office, as well as of the Lords of the Admiralty. It contains this sentence: "We cannot help considering the actions of the British as chiefly intended to prevent the German East Africa Line from continuing its service, on account of the competition we have made against the English lines."

We have no belief that the explanation thus suggested is by any means the true explanation of the action of the British with reference to neutral commerce destined, at least primarily, for Delagoa Bay. So far as the seizures of American flour are concerned, our National susceptibilities were not directly involved. The ships which carried these American products were British. At least they were not American. "The flag" was not in question at all. If the captors were willing to act on the principle laid down in the Jay treaty, and pay for "occasional contraband" its full value, with a mercantile profit, nobody had any grievance. Still, since the Transvaal is not suffering for food, it would apparently be impolitic for the British to seize food. The only real justification of the seizure would be the discovery of unquestionable contraband.

In the case of German ships this justification is still more necessary. To seize a neutral ship and unload her some hundreds of miles from her destination, as was done in the case of the General, is without question a "high-handed" act. The high-handedness can be justified only if search reveals that the captors were acting upon trustworthy evidence. Evidently in this case they were not, or we should have heard of it before this. A belligerent who annoys neutral commerce to this extent, and finds no justification in what he seizes, subjects himself to the charge of this German shipowner that, under pretense of exercising his belligerent rights, he is making an unfair interference with fair competition. That is a suspicion under which Great Britain, of all nations, cannot afford to labor. Those who approve her enormous colonial acquisitions do so upon the express ground that where she goes anybody else may go and compete with her merchants and shippers on even terms. In this respect she must keep herself above suspicion. So it seems that it would be well for the Admiralty to revise its instructions to British naval officers.

THE STRENGTH OF ENGLAND.

Yesterday we commented on the pitiful plaint of the Clerical organ in Quebec and its far from Christian rejoicing in the difficulties that for the moment surround the Government of Great Britain. We called attention to the fact that it was not as the representative of the French Canadian population of the Dominion that this organ spoke, nor even as the representative of the Catholic ministry, but only in the name of a portion of that ministry, unable and unwilling to grasp the actual situation or to understand either its oportunities or its duties.

Quite independently of all sectarian controversies the sentiment of the more intelligent French Canadians has found eloquent expression in the Courrier du Canada, the journal of the French Conservative Party, edited by the Hon. THOMAS CHAPAIS. It protests against any feeling of rejoicing at the "cruel reverses that the English arms have received in South Africa." It declares that anything that threatens the prestige and power of England can be a cause only of alarm for the French Canadians, and it points to the immeasurable benefits that have come from the English connection. After quoting a pastoral letter of Mgr. PLESSIS, issued in 1812, in which he declared that "many States formerly flourishing, now subjugated, would consider themselves happy if they had the tenth part of the advantages that we have had," the Courrier du Canada asks:

> Is there not greater reason to pronounce these words to-day? For sixty years we have undoubtedly been one of the happiest people on the face of the earth. While in all parts of the Old and New World nations have been engaged in disastrous and bloody wars, we have rejoiced, under the new régime, in prosperity, peace, and liberty. Why so? It is because we form part of an empire whose strength and the respect it inspires in all have protected us from hostile enterprises and international complications. While France witnessed three successive revolutions in forty years, while dynasties and thrones tumbled here and there with sinister echoes of civil wars, or wars between the different nations, reddened with blood—Germany and France; Italy and Spain; Russia and Turkey; the United States and Mexico; Chile and Peru—while several crises and political turbulations successively desolated almost all the countries in the world—in the midst of all these upheavals the happy Canadian farmers peacefully tilled the fields of their fathers and quietly knelt in their churches under the protection of the British Crown, without any uneasiness for the present and without anxiety for the future.

And the Courrier du Canada concludes with these words:

> Our loyalty is not a vain word; not the mere oratorical vaporings of an exhausted speaker; not a tie of rhetoric. It depends on protection received; franchises granted; interests protected; peace guaranteed; expansion favored on a union of powerful, high, and patriotic motives.

The picture given by this clear-headed Englishman of French blood is substantially correct of every community under the rule of British law for the last half century. We are far from saying that the rule of that law has been faultless, or that injustice has been made by it impossible. Errors have been made and wrongs permitted, as is only too plain in the recent history of South Africa. But the vital principle of the English law is such that there is a powerful and steady tendency to undo error and wrong and bring about the right. What England has done for the French Canadians she has in effect done for all her colonists. She has made them self-governing at home while shielding them by the strong arm of the empire from assault or injury from the outside. And in the meanwhile she has firmly adhered to the policy of absolute freedom of commerce for them so far as they chose to avail themselves of it. She has opened her markets to their products and claimed no special privileges in theirs. No wonder that the intelligent among her colonial citizens look with dismay on the possibility that her strength may be diminished or her security threatened. It would be the most cruel blow that the fates could permit to fall upon them.

THE INDUSTRIAL CRISIS IN SPAIN.

The cable dispatches have but vaguely informed foreigners concerning the industrial troubles in Spain which marked the first steps in the policy of reconstruction adopted by the Silvela Government. To be sure, people learned, over a month ago, that Spanish warships had been sent to collect the taxes at Barcelona. Then came the news that the affair had been amicably settled between the trade guilds and the Government. That was all. Even the Spanish papers have been far from definite in explaining what the trouble was about or what was the nature of this extraordinary understanding entered into between a Government and private corporations which had refused to comply with the law of the land and had succeeded in maintaining their refusal. The whole question is fraught with deep meaning for the future of Spain.

The problem that confronted Señor SILVELA and his colleagues was certainly difficult. It was a problem from which every Liberal statesman shrank. SILVELA, the Conservative leader, undertook the task of mastering it. He thought that the national finances could be repaired, at least for a time, by allowing the export taxes to remain in force, and by augmenting them with an industrial tax. He believed that the former colonies of Spain would continue for some years to come to absorb the manufactured articles and food products of the mother country, and that an increased traffic could be depended upon for a time at least. He was mistaken. And the disastrous results of the mistake fell most heavily upon the manufacturing and commercial classes of Catalonia, whose principal market had been the colonies and whose spirit of enterprise had been actively awakened by the prophecies of the new Conservative Ministry. A few figures will serve to indicate the situation.

Prior to the Spanish-American war, Spain for many years had annually sent to her colonies about $40,000,000 worth of exports. In 1896 she had sent manufactured goods amounting to $29,202,192; provisions, $12,664,525, and raw materials, $299,331. In that year Cuba alone took $26,892,335 worth of commodities, three-quarters of which were manufactured articles. After the close of the war this traffic, instead of increasing, as had confidently been expected, fell off to an alarming degree. Official figures are not yet obtainable, but the crowded warehouses of Barcelona offered mute but convincing evidence of SILVELA's mistake. And the industrial and commercial classes of Catalonia were called upon to pay taxes on commodities for which they could find no market. Then came the crisis, news of impending revolts, and the ultimate settlement. What was the nature of this settlement which has apparently restored confidence to a province on the verge of revolution?

A careful examination of the subsequent relations between the industrial guilds and the Government tends to establish the belief, in spite of Conservative denials from Madrid, that a "concierto economico" has been effected which will ultimately result in the fiscal autonomy of the department of which Barcelona is the capital. Whether such a concession, granting that it exists, will affect the political unity of Spain depends partly upon the patriotism of the Catalonians and partly upon the strength of the Silvela Cabinet. The existence of the concession need not necessarily weaken either the monarchy or the dynasty. It is not unprecedented in Spain. For several centuries the Basque provinces have enjoyed the privilege of raising their quota for the support of the National Government in the ways best suited to their people.

But whatever may have been the means by which the Government has restored confidence in Catalonia, and whether the Cortes will ratify its policy or not, one thing cannot be denied. Señor SILVELA has rectified a grievous mistake in a salutary manner, so far as immediate exigencies demanded. This may be the first step in a policy of reconstruction which has in it a new and inspiring future for Spain.

S. DANA GREENE.

The untimely death of S. DANA GREENE is more than a personal affliction to his family and friends; it is a real public loss, for he was of a type happily not uncommon but of the highest value.

He bore worthily a name of historic association. Both his father and his grandfather rendered to their country distinguished service in the war for the Union. By descent and by nature he came to that nobility that imposes obligation rather than confers privilege, and he was ready and constant in the recognition of the obligation. Graduating at the head of his class at the Naval Academy, he decided against the pursuit of his profession in time of peace, but was prompt to offer his services as soon as they were needed in time of war, and he gave much time and attention to the development of the State Naval Reserve. His scientific and administrative abilities opened for him a career of great promise in the business in which he was engaged, but his interest never flagged in matters of public concern for which his training prepared him. Any emergency would surely have found him ready. Cut off in the prime of his young manhood, under circumstances peculiarly distressing, his loss will be widely and sincerely regretted.

The National Bank act should be repealed, and the supervision of banking restored to the States, without allowing the banks to exercise the Government function, which they have for so many years usurped, of creating paper money. Then we shall have an exclusively Government paper money as we have exclusively Government coin, and the costly Bureau of Currency at Washington can be abolished.—New York Sun, Jan. 6.

"An exclusively Government paper money" differs from "exclusively Government coin" in that it depends wholly on the honesty and sagacity of the Legislature, which, our history shows, may be at times a pretty poor dependence.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Under the impressively comprehensive heading of "England and America" The London Saturday Review prints a letter that is simply running over with useful and interesting information. As a prefatory revelation the genial correspondent announces that "newspapers in America, more than elsewhere, are commercial undertakings—they write what they think will suit their readers." A prolonged—and enforced—familiarity with the English papers had not suggested to us that they are appreciably less "commercial" than those of this country, but judging from much of the matter that appears in them and the laboriously unattractive form in which it is presented, we had long ago credited the London editors with a disregard for the convenience and taste of their readers which is certainly not possessed by their American cousins. But the letter under consideration treats other than journalistic topics. Its author knows our army as well as our newspapers, and after a touching reference to "reports of the mistakes the Americans made in Cuba and are still making in the Philippines," he bids us remember that though the British Generals have not yet attained any great success in the Transvaal, (sic,) criticism is entirely out of place, because—just think of it!—because the British "are only experimenting so far." Then the dear fellow goes on as follows: "Our Generals have no actual experience (the only school) of white warfare and little of modern weapons. Doubtless they will learn their lesson. Let us hope they may never have to profit by it against the promoted butchers and bakers and candlestick-makers whom Tammany puts in charge of what America, or its yellow press, is pleased to call its army." Evidently Tammany has been betrayed again, and further efforts to conceal that organization's commanding influence in army circles will be useless.

—Efforts not altogether judicious, perhaps, are making by some of the Washington correspondents to prove that while Lieut. GILLMORE was suffering the hardships of captivity among the Filipinos the Navy Department officials were treating his anxious wife in a decidedly ungenerous, not to say niggardly, way. According to the story as told in The Philadelphia North American, the Lieutenant, prior to his departure for the Far East, arranged for the payment each month of a part of his salary to Mrs. GILLMORE. The plan was carried out until last July, and then the department officials announced that they considered themselves forced, owing to the high probability that Lieut. GILLMORE was dead, not to dispense any more money as his salary. For three months the friend through whom the money had been collected continued to pay it out of his own pocket, rather than tell Mrs. GILLMORE that hope of her husband's survival had been given up. At last it became necessary to reveal the situation as it existed to her. As she expressed perfect confidence that her husband was still alive, a final appeal to the department was made. Paymaster LEMLY actively interested himself in the case, and after much deliberation it was decided to continue to award the allotted amount on condition that Mrs. GILLMORE would sign a paper stating that in the event it turned out that her husband was dead she would refund to the department the money paid to her in excess of what she should have received as a pensioned widow. Of course the tale is not exactly a pleasant one, and, considering the circumstances, it does seem that the department might have waited a little longer for proof of the Lieutenant's death before cutting off the supposed widow's supplies. The officials showed themselves not too harsh in the end, however, and presumably they had to follow the rules in such cases made and provided. Mrs. GILLMORE herself, it is pleasant to notice, has refused to discuss the matter in any way.

—While WINSTON CHURCHILL was imprisoned, or rather while he was a prisoner, in Pretoria, he had many long conversations with prominent Boers, and was able to form decided opinions, both as to their ideas and their strength. His views, written out after he reached Durban, are not calculated to inspire a belief in the speedy ending of the war. The Transvaal Government, he asserts, is vilely corrupt, but it is devoting its entire energy to military operations—presumably from a clear appreciation that with defeat will come the end of opportunities for personal enrichment at the expense of the foreigners. As to the individual Boer, Mr. CHURCHILL thinks him an enemy to be dreaded, and, when mounted and in a familiar country, worth from three to five regular soldiers. Continuing, this observer said: "The power of modern rifles is so tremendous that frontal attacks must often be repulsed. The extraordinary mobility of the enemy protected his flanks. The only way of treating them is either to get men equal in character and intelligence as riflemen, or, failing the individual, huge masses of troops. The advance of an army of 80,000 men in force, covered by 150 guns in line, would be an operation beyond the Boers' capacity to grapple with, but columns of 15,000 are only strong enough to suffer loss. It is a perilous policy to dribble out reinforcements and to fritter away armies." According to Mr. CHURCHILL, there is work cut out in South Africa for 250,000 men, and he rather unkindly asks, "Are the gentlemen of England all fox hunting?" Surely, he has had a chance to see that more than a few of them are otherwise engaged.

—A reader who admits that it is more reasonable to consider 1900 the end than the beginning of a century, yet enters a mild but evidently sincere protest against treating people of another way of thinking with ridicule or severity. "The whole question," he very truly asserts, "hinges upon the point whether, when the present system of numbering years was adopted, the first year was considered Year 1 or Year 0." That is indeed all there is to it, but we cannot see that the fact lends any support at all to the further declaration that "there is no intrinsic absurdity in supposing it was called Year 0." There is intrinsic absurdity in such a supposition, because in never a history published is an event set down as happening in either A. D. or B. C. 0, and no dictionary of dates recognizes the need of such a chronological starting-point. It is not a question of what folks might or might not have done, but of what they really did. On that point there is a vast amount of negative evidence, and not a little distinctly positive. On the whole, therefore, we are not inclined to withdraw a single epithet, derisory or comminatory, that we have applied to the upholders of a baseless theory. The most we will consent to do is to admit again that if real happiness would be bestowed upon a multitude of amiable but rather silly people by pretending that the twentieth century has already begun, then there would be no particular harm in yielding to their mysterious desires. With which we declare the controversy closed, so far as this column goes, and will refuse to open it again, except under the sternest compulsion.

—When Gen. SCHWAN entered Novaleta the other day his men found in the insurgent trenches and the uniform of a Filipino Major, an ex-member of the Sixth United States Artillery. His name, they say, was JOHNSON, and he was dead. JOHNSON was evidently an anti-expansionist, who, for a wonder, was willing to do more than talk. As JOHNSON saved trouble by getting himself well killed, it is only fair and charitable to say that he had some good points—or at least one.

THE GAS AND POWER MERGER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The bringing together of the gas and electric light and power interests in New York should result in great advantages to the public and to the interests so combined, provided the latest developments in gas and electric engineering are investigated and availed of. Among the numerous questions affecting the health, comfort, and convenience of the citizens of New York (and of all communities, in fact,) are three of especial importance, viz.:

The disposal of garbage, the abatement of the smoke nuisance due to the increasing use of bituminous coal for steam power purposes, and the securing of an adequate supply of water.

From statistics there appear to be created daily in New York about 500 tons of garbage, or at the rate of one-half pound per capita. Such garbage is about 20 per cent. carbon and 80 per cent. water. By a process which has been well demonstrated on a small scale, and which is being rapidly brought to a commercial basis, all of this garbage can be economically, and without offensive odor, converted into a fuel gas of great value. In the same apparatus and by the same process soft coal can be made into a gas suitable for power and heating purposes.

The fuel gas made from garbage and soft coal can be used to drive gas engines with electric generators, and the electricity thus produced can be used for light and to drive motors to the exclusion of the thousands of steam engines and boilers which make such demands upon the water supply, since the gas engine central stations can be so located that the water needed for engine-cooling purposes can be taken from the river.

Bearing upon these questions, and of especial importance, are the partially executed plans of the electric power and light corporations, viz., the Metropolitan, Third Avenue, and Manhattan Elevated Railways, and the New York Gas and Electric Light, Heat and Power Company and the United Electric Light and Power Company. If their present plans, which are fairly well known to the engineering profession, are carried to completion, each will have one large steam station on the East River between Twenty-ninth Street and the Harlem River, with about 75,000 horse power of engines, boilers, and electric machinery, making an aggregate of 375,000 horse power, and which may be largely increased when the underground rapid transit railway is completed, and still further when the electric locomotive is used on all steam railways within the city limits.

If these corporations, which might as well buy electricity as the machinery, coal, and water with which to produce it, were to unite in a common plan to provide the electricity needed in their operations by the adoption of the best available methods, the saving to each in capital expenditure would be very great, and the decreased cost of their supply of electricity would make an important addition to their earnings applicable to the payment of dividends; while, most important of all, the citizens of New York would have solved for them the garbage, smoke, and very largely the water questions.

I believe the contemplated plans of the corporations above named, which can be shown to be based upon an imperfect knowledge of the subject, will stand in the way of vast public interests, and, so believing, I have said to representatives of some of those companies that the near future would demonstrate the projected power stations and systems of electrical distribution incidental to the character of such stations, to be as far from the best as are the old cable systems for the propulsion of cars.

I write this letter because I believe these subjects are just now worthy of investigation, discussion, and elaboration.

SEND THEIR EARNINGS ABROAD.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent issue of your paper I notice a statement regarding the great amount of money sent abroad through the Post Office as "Christmas gifts." From this statement it appears that the amount sent away this Christmas has been larger than ever before, aggregating $5,000,000 from New York City alone.

It is a mistake, however, to describe this money as "Christmas gifts." Some of it, no doubt, is, but by far the largest portion represents the yearly hoardings of a very small part of the vast army of migratory immigrants that we have in the United States, and if our financial experts will turn aside from their ridiculous guessing long enough to investigate this matter they will stumble upon a more lucid explanation of the gold exports, and the present money stringency than those other explanations that they have been wearying the public with during the past few months.

According to the testimony contained in the official reports there are nearly 500,000 of this class of aliens here from Canada, Mexico, Europe, and Asia, and estimating their individual hoards at an average of $250 each, the total amount absorbed by the whole number reaches the enormous sum of $118,000,000 yearly.

Of course, all this money is not sent through the Post Office; most of it is sent away in the form of drafts. There are about eighty Italian bankers in New York City alone, who do a prosperous business sending home the savings of their countrymen. One of these bankers stated before the Senate committee in 1893 that his firm sent away $2,000,000 the year before.

Fully one-third of this army of aliens finds work in and around New York City. Of the 5,299,000 immigrants who landed here between 1880 and 1890, about 2,000,000 declared New York City as their destination; and yet the census shows an increase of only 380,000 foreign-born persons for the whole State.

These facts help to explain why it is that, although there are eighty-odd million dollars more money in circulation than at this time last year, the New York banks hold $20,000,000 less. They also help to explain why it is that the money stringency is more severe here in New York City than it is in the interior. With nearly 200,000 of these alien vampires draining the city of at least $50,000,000 yearly, it is difficult to see how it could be otherwise.

Why More Appeals Are Not Taken.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Concerning the subject of reversal of appealed cases, I note the remarks of your correspondent Mr. Scrugham, in which he questions the fairness of your comments thereon in THE TIMES of Jan. 1.

Mr. Scrugham seems to assume that cases that are not appealed are not appealable, or, putting it affirmatively, all cases that are appealable are appealed. He speaks of "the thousands of cases in which the decision of the trial court is accepted as final," implying that such acceptance means the concurrence of the parties to the suit in the soundness of the judgment. I do not think that such assumption will stand probing. If he will add to his list of appealed cases those which are not appealed solely because the aggrieved party has no means wherewith to further contest his rights, or, having the means, he has no inclination to waste any more of them on an incompetent or dishonest attorney, he will swell his list immensely, and the percentage of reversals will doubtless grow proportionately. Such cases are unquestionably very numerous, and are "accepted as final" because the client learns "'Tis better to bear the ills we have than fly to those we know not of." An attorney who mutilates his case in the first instance can be depended upon to murder it in the second. And of such is a disgracefully large percentage of the profession, as the best element thereof will frankly admit. Of all fools, the most dangerous and disgraceful to the community is the ordinary bookmade lawyer, and frequently, if not generally, he will be found as deficient in moral integrity as in mental sense. All of which makes an appeal to a court of law for the righting of a wrong a very uncertain, unsafe, and unsatisfactory business, as many a sufferer who has tried the experiment can testify.

These observations are not particularly complimentary of the honored profession, but I think they are entirely just and true, and therefore justifiably uttered. A. E. O.

Pronunciation of Bethphage.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Have the actors and managers of the play "Ben-Hur" some new authority not generally familiar to the public, or are they simply unaware of the accepted pronunciation of such a name as Bethphage? Phyfe, who is no mean authority himself, very positively commands us not to say 'Beth'faj, and quotes Walker as saying, "This word is generally pronounced by the illiterate in two syllables." Now, no one can accuse so accomplished an actor as Mr. Morgan of being illiterate, so I am curious to know his authority as against both profane and Biblical dictionaries.

One or two other words used in the play struck me as peculiar, inasmuch as they are at least not the usual pronunciations. One of these is Sheik. The more scholarly sound is used, that of long a, but the average person seldom or never hears that pronunciation in school or elsewhere. I cannot find Messala in any of my dictionaries, hence I have nothing to offer against calling it Messalla, but I should prefer the accent on the first syllable. Still another word given an unusual accent, though fully authorized, is Balthaser. Where there is a permissible difference would it not be better to use the one people commonly hear from the lips of cultured people?

But the word I am really worrying over is Bethphage, given by every authority known to me as Beth'faje. Why should the actors change this?

The Cuban Policy for the Philippines.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

To try to persuade that my long experience in the Orient both justifies an expression of my opinion and renders it not valueless, I venture to point out that if my advice in favor of a protectorate for the Philippines published in your issues of Dec. 5, 1898, and later dates, and in The Washington Post of Jan. 4, 1899, had been promptly followed, it is now evident that there would have been no war. I again advise that promptly applying the Cuban policy to the Philippines, by passing the Bacon joint resolution that excludes only those Filipinos fighting us, will end that war honorably and satisfactorily.

TROUBLE DOWN T' GROS'RY.

Holman F. Day in Lewiston Journal.

Don't ye hate to get a-talkin' with a flub,
With a feller who is talkin' all to nub?
—With a crab who thinks he's cunnin',
sort of leaves his mouth a-runnin',
—Don't do nothin' but just set around and fub?

When I git to takin' comfort at the store,
Jeero-crismus if it doesn't make me sore
For to have my meditation busted all to thunderation
By a gibble, gobble, gabble sort of bore.

I've set there on a salt box forty years,
And critters come along and use my ears
To dump their chitter-chatter, 'bout a dern fool private matter,
'Bout their fambly, or some horseflesh, or some steers.

There are humstrums who have nothin' much to say,
Who'll set and chawnk terbacker, Suh, all day;
And they'll glibber off some hazy sort of talk that makes yer crazy
To smash 'em once and knock 'em out the way.

They'll spend the day a-talkin' round a pin;
Their brains is just a porridge—mighty thin—
—They'll tell ye all their trouble, tell ye once and tell ye double;
Then take a breath and tell it all agin.

They think that they're the biggest with big B,
They yammer on to prove the thing to me.
They'll tritter, tritter, trotter, in a half an inch o' water,
And reely think they're drownin' in the sea.

For thunder sakes will nothin' keep 'em shet?
Why can't they let a quiet critter set?
I'm a mod'rit kind o' feller, but I'll crack 'em on the smeller
If they don't pull off and leave me, now you bet.

The chap that's always dribblin' brummagem,
With nothin' down their gullets, Suh, but phlegm,
Would suit the neighbors better if they'd only stop and let a
Chap remember that there's som' 'un else 'sides them.

Don't ye hate, Suh, to git cornered by a flub,
Who thinks the world's a wheel and he's the hub?
When he spouts his langwidge fountain I'm goin' to climb a mountain,
'Cause the law won't let me mash him with a club.

CANAL BILL IS NOT DEAD.

Diet Learns New Measure Will Be Introduced—The Kaiser's Communication Considered Weak.

BERLIN, Jan. 9.—At the opening of the Diet to-day Prince Hohenlohe, the Imperial Chancellor, read the speech from the throne, wherein it was shown that the finances of Prussia are in a satisfactory condition. The year of 1898-9 closed with a considerable surplus, and the current year, the Chancellor said, was expected to give favorable results. The estimates for 1900 maintained an equilibrium, and the revenue of the State railroads continued satisfactory.

The speech from the throne also announced the introduction of a bill for the construction of light railroads, the reintroduction of the Rhine-Elbe Canal bill after the completion of the proposed waterway for large ships between Berlin and Stettin, and other river improvements, and the intention of the Government to make the port of Emden available for transoceanic steamers, with the object of rendering the Rhenish commerce independent of foreign ports.

The speech concluded with promising the greatest possible attention to the interests of agriculture.

The Reichstag was reopened to-day. The business transacted was mostly formal, such as the verification of elections and the reading of petitions.

The budget will be discussed to-morrow.

The speech from the throne is generally regarded as weak and colorless. Without doubt it was intentionally non-committal, so as not to offend the Conservatives on the subject of a new Canal bill. This supposition is strengthened by the passage in which hope was expressed that the Government and people would labor together harmoniously and in which aid is promised to suffering agriculture.

The leading Conservative paper, the Kreuz Zeitung, says: "The speech from the throne contained no political surprises, the passage about the canal being conciliatory."

The Vossische Zeitung says the speech was "dry and sober, containing nothing new."

The Berliner Tageblatt remarks that the speech, "in its businesslike soberness, follows Prussian traditions."

The Deutsche Tageszeitung says: "The Government will please keep in mind the fact that, if the Agrarian delegates again reject the Canal bill, they will do so in the exercise of their constitutional rights."

The National Zeitung says: "The speech was characterized by a total lack of that political directness which has been the rule of the Prussian Government since the canal crisis last Summer."

A BABY COMES TO ROYALTY.

Princess Henry of Prussia Gives Birth to Another Son.

KIEL, Prussia, Jan. 9.—Princess Henry of Prussia was safely accouched of a son this morning.

Princess Henry of Prussia was born in 1866. She was Princess Irene of Hesse, third daughter of the late Louis IV., Grand Duke of Hesse. She was married to Prince Henry, younger brother of Emperor William of Germany, on May 24, 1888. The child just born makes the third, both the others also being boys. They are Prince Waldemar, born in 1889, and Prince Wilhelm, born in 1896.

Two years ago Prince Henry was placed in command of the Asiatic squadron of the German Navy.

THE KAISER ON SOCIALISM.

For the First Time Speaks Openly of the Movement—Does Not Address High School Students.

BERLIN, Jan. 9.—Emperor William, when receiving the Rectors of the three technical high schools to-day, for the first time spoke openly about Socialism, saying:

"Social Democracy I regard as evanescent; but you must make plain to your students their social and economic duties toward the workingmen."

His Majesty spoke at length about the growing importance of technical sciences, asserting that German technology enjoyed the greatest reputation abroad, even in England, where he had heard he said, many appreciative remarks. Twice he emphasized the fact that men graduating from technical high schools exerted enormous influence upon the development of social questions.

This summary of the Emperor's address was given this evening at the centenary of the Berlin Technical High School by the Rector of the institution, Prof. Kiedler, and the students showed a keen appreciation of the imperial teachings.

Owing to the poor acoustics of the hall and to a slight hoarseness which attacked him yesterday, the Emperor modified his original programme and did not deliver a speech before the students themselves.

The celebration was attended by a number of the highest Prussian officials, the Minister of the Interior, Count Posadowsky-Wehner, Baron Rheinbaben, and others, as well as by the entire Faculty in gorgeous new robes of office. The conferring of the first doctorate upon Prince Henry of Prussia was accompanied by a brief eulogy, instancing the Prince as a promoter of technical sciences just now returning from an important naval diplomatic mission. The Prince will receive a series of the highest ovations when he arrives.

FRENCH CHAMBER RECONVENES.

The Presiding Officers of Both Houses Are Re-elected.

PARIS, Jan. 9.—The Chamber of Deputies was reopened to-day. M. Deschanel was re-elected President of the House by 308 votes against 221 cast for M. Brisson, who represented the advanced Republicans. The result was a foregone conclusion.

At the formal opening of the Senate, M. Failières was re-elected President of that House.

The Provisional President of the Chamber of Deputies, M. Turigny, senior Deputy, delivered the opening address, urging the Chamber to end the "oppressive contradiction which is stifling the country," and expressing the hope that "sterile agitations would cease." The address met with a mixed reception.

BRAZIL'S NEW RAILROAD.

Will Assist in Development of the Country by Foreigners.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Dec. 20.—The Sao Paulo and Rio Grande Railroad, 220 kilometers of which were recently opened, will connect Rio de Janeiro with Rio Grande do Sul. It will commence at Itavare, on the frontiers of Parana and Sao Paulo, where the Sorocaba Railroad terminates, and will end on the banks of the Uruguay River, on the frontiers of Parana and Rio Grande do Sul, making a junction there with the Southwest Brazilian Railroad. The new line, when completed, will have a total length of 900 kilometers.

It is then proposed to build a strategic frontier line connecting Parana with Matto-Grosso, thus furnishing the means of transportation by land from all points in the Southern and Central States to the extreme border States, now only reached by means of sea and river by way of Montevideo, Buenos Ayres, and the Paraguay River.

The States of Rio Grande do Sul, Sao Paulo, Santa Catharina, Parana, and Minas-Geraos are gradually filling up with foreign elements, and the new railroads will probably assist very materially in the development of those regions, which are considered the only ones in Brazil suitable for European colonists.

TEST OF A NEW CRUISER

The Albany Gets Her Official Trial at Newcastle.

EXCEEDS CONTRACT SPEED

Ship Was Purchased by the United States from Brazil Before the Spanish War.

NEWCASTLE, England, Jan. 9.—The United States cruiser Albany, formerly the Brazilian cruiser Admiral Abrouali, purchased by the United States Government shortly before the beginning of the war with Spain, while under construction here, was given a successful official trial off this port to-day. She developed a speed of 20.87 knots, showed thorough seaworthiness, and exceeded her contract conditions.

The trial was under the supervision of a United States naval board, consisting of Lieut. Commander Colwell, the United States Naval Attaché; Chief Engineer Norton, and Constructor Gilmore. Once out in the North Sea, the Albany began to tune up. Four times she steamed past the measured mile, running under natural draught at a mean speed of 19.6 knots, which was .6 above contract speed. Then came the crucial test. Forced draught was brought to bear against the tide and wind. The Albany, which had previously not made any fuss, began to throw up seas from her ram to the bridge, but she cleared the waves as steadily as possible until she reached a speed of 20.87 knots. Her mean speed over the four measured miles, under forced draught, was 20.50. Her contract speed was 20 knots. But the Albany is easily capable of an additional knot.

Lieut. Commander Colwell, in speaking of the trial, said: "I am delighted with the ship. She is one of our fastest cruisers, and comes up to all the requirements."

Engineer Norton declared the engines worked like clockwork, and without a hitch.

The guns will be on board the new cruiser, ready for her American crew, in six weeks. She still has to undergo her endurance trial of six hours at 17 knots, natural draught.

The constructors claim that to-day's tests show the Albany is the equal of any vessel of her class afloat.

Coming up the Tyne the cruiser flashed her new Cowper-Coles searchlights, experimenting for the first time with metallic instead of glass reflectors. The results were satisfactory. She was greeted with cheering from the harbor vessels, and the crew of the British training ship Wellesley cheered her heartily.

The Albany is a sister ship of the New Orleans, formerly the Brazilian cruiser Amazonas. She was launched at Newcastle Jan. 14, 1899. She has a displacement of 3,600 tons, and her engines have an indicated horse power of 7,500 under natural draught, which is expected to give her a speed of more than twenty knots. She is 320 feet over all, with a molded breadth of 43 feet 9 inches, and a maximum draught of 16 feet 10 inches.

The new cruiser is schooner-rigged, has fighting tops on both masts, and a signal-yard on the foremast above the military-top. Her two funnels are placed amidships, and she is fitted with tubular boilers. The engines are of the triple-expansion, direct action type, each capable of generating an indicated horse power of 3,750. Her coal capacity is 850 tons, giving a steaming radius of 8,000 knots, sufficient to enable her to cross and recross the Atlantic.

The armament is arranged similarly to that of the Cincinnati, and consists of six 6-inch rapid-fire and four 4.7-inch rapid-fire guns in the main battery. These are placed forward and aft on the main deck. The secondary battery consists of ten 6-pounders, four 1-pounders, and four Maxim rapid-fire guns. All the guns are of the latest type of rapid-fire rifles. The cruiser is also fitted with three submerged torpedo outfits. She has no armor, in the ordinary sense, but her machinery is protected by an arched steel deck just below the waterline, varying in thickness from 1.2 to 3.5 inches, and the guns are protected over their positions by armor 4½ inches thick.

The Albany was built from Brazilian specifications, which the United States Government approved when she was purchased. American naval experts subsequently introduced a few American ideas which were developed during the war.

Typhoon in the Caroline Islands.

BERLIN, Jan. 9.—Mail advices from the Carolines say that a typhoon on Nov. 9 destroyed much property in the islands, especially in the Island of Yap. The German warship Jaguar narrowly escaped destruction.

TRACK LAYER'S HEAD SEVERED.

Fatality Due to Collision on the Brooklyn Elevated Road.

As the result of a collision between two Brooklyn elevated trains on the Broadway line yesterday afternoon, Patrick McGuire, thirty-two years old, a trackman, living at 32 Franklin Avenue, was instantly killed, his head being completely severed from the body. At the time of the accident McGuire and other men were at work on the structure laying a third track between Aberdeen Street and De Salles Place. A section train, drawn by Engine 16, in charge of Engineer Frank W. Brown, stood on the down-town track waiting to be unloaded, when a passenger train going toward the Brooklyn Bridge, and drawn by Engine 73, crashed into it.

McGuire was at work in the rear of the section train and was knocked down by the rear car, the collision forcing the train back several yards. He fell with his neck resting across the rail and his head was severed by the wheels. Engineer Brown was arrested on a charge of homicide.

ALLEGED GAMBLING HOUSE RAID.

Only Nine of the 124 Arrested Monday Night Held in Court.

The Essex Market Police Court was crowded yesterday morning during the arraignment of the 124 prisoners captured Monday night in the raid on the alleged gambling place over Dennis J. Sullivan's saloon, at 241 Bowery. Agents Thompson and Leitenberger of the Parkhurst Society, on whose complaints the men were arrested, were present as prosecuting witnesses.

After some discussion it was decided to proceed against only the dealers and those interested in the raided establishment, nine in number. One hundred and fifteen of the prisoners were then discharged, and the others, John Williams, "Jeff" Clark, Charles Cohn, "Gus" Morris, Albert Agnew, "Riky" Bell, John Koch, Henry Smith, and Charles C. Stephens were held for examination.

President York said yesterday he would institute an immediate investigation by the Police Board of the alleged gambling. Charges may be made against Capt. Herlihy of the Eldridge Street Station.

Runaway Horse Kills a Woman.

Mrs. Bridget Grady, fifty-seven years old, who lived with a married daughter at 521½ Stockholm Street, Brooklyn, met death yesterday afternoon by being run down by a runaway horse belonging to the Empire State Dairy Company. The accident occurred at Bushwick and De Kalb Avenues, and the woman lay in the street for nearly an hour before an ambulance arrived from St. Catharine's Hospital. Dr. Keller, the ambulance surgeon, declared that the delay was due to the neglect of the police to send in the call promptly. The woman was removed to her daughter's house, where she died. Charles Rhodes of 101 Harrison Avenue, the driver of the runaway horse, was locked up in the Hamburg Avenue Police Station charged with homicide.

Dr. Bushnell's Resignation.

It was admitted yesterday by a few members of the congregation of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church that the recent resignation of the Rev. Dr. John E. Bushnell might have occasioned disagreeable consequences had the retirement of the associate pastor been managed in a less careful manner. When spoken to on this subject Dr. Bushnell said: "There has always been a very deep feeling between my congregation and myself, and I will admit that I have personally requested some of those who have been a little outspoken against my resignation to make no protest." When asked if it was true that he had been guaranteed practically two years' salary, he replied, "Well, yes; something like that. You have it about correct."

RETURN OF MAUDE ADAMS.

Babbie Allures Gavin Dishart Once More, This Time at the Criterion Theatre.

The audience which welcomed Maude Adams at the Criterion Theatre last night was scarcely less enthusiastic than that which cheered her first performance of Barrie's piquant heroine when Miss Adams began her career as a star in the Empire Theatre more than two years ago. "The Little Minister" is still the most profitable play in this country, and the larger share of credit for this must be due to the actress who "created" Babbie, because the play has had no such vogue in England as it has enjoyed here.

The charm of Miss Adams's acting in this rôle is, indeed, irresistible. It also defies analysis. In a merely technical sense her acting has seemed more satisfying in other rôles. But in no other has she exerted so strong a spell upon the public.

The impersonation has not changed in any essential since the first run of the play. Every denotement of Babbie's various moods seems the same. Perhaps in the brisk and emotionally strong and varied climax of Act III. it is somewhat more dexterous, but the effect upon the ordinary spectator has surely not changed. A blithesome, delightful, irresponsible, unaccountable creature this Babbie surely is, with her share of womanly affection and more than her share of capriciousness, with a sort of impish love of mischief, an alert mind, a tender heart, and a saving sense of humor. But neither Babbie nor Maude Adams stands in any present need of indorsement.

Much of the scenery seems new, and all of it is picturesque and appropriate. Mr. Furst's incidental music grows a trifle monotonous. Orrin Johnson as Gavin Dishart is superior to his predecessor, Mr. Edeson, only in his more youthful and less sophisticated appearance, and in his power of emotional expression. In the scene of conflicting emotion in Act. III. Mr. Johnson acts with a semblance of sincere feeling. In the quieter passages he is less effective.

W. H. Thompson retains the rôle of Tammas Whamond and George Fawcett that of Rob Dow, and both are commendable. Peyton Carter also carries his trivial part with characteristic humor, but the robustious method of the veteran Mrs. W. G. Jones seems out of keeping with the quaint humor and delicate fancy of her scenes

"My Lady's Lord" to be Withdrawn.

After next Saturday night's performance of "My Lady's Lord" at the Empire Theatre Charles Frohman will withdraw the play temporarily, and on the following Tuesday evening he will present for the first time in this country Capt. Leo Trevor's comedy, in three acts, entitled "Brother Officers." The cast which will be seen in this piece will include William Faversham, Guy Standing, Joseph Wheelock Jr., G. W. Howard, W. H. Crompton, George Osborne, Jr., Edwin Stevens, George R. Pierce, George Sylvester, Miss Margaret Anglin, Mrs. Thomas Whiffen, Miss Blanche Burton, and Miss Lillian Thurgate. After "Brother Officers" has been produced for a week or two, a number of special matinées of "My Lady's Lord" will be given.

Cast for "Mam'selle Aukins."

The complete cast which has been secured by Alfred E. Aarons to be seen in the new musical comedy entitled "Mam'selle Aukins," which he will produce in one of the large cities of this State the latter part of January, and later in this city, includes Etienne Girardet, George C. Boniface, Will Armstrong, Richard Carle, Snitz Edwards, Charles Danby, Paula Edwardes, Margaret Sylva, Mamie Gilroy, Mrs. McKee Rankin, Anna Robinson, Rose Beaumont, Nellie Beaumont, Hattie Delarc, Miss Wallen, Georgie Carhart, Maude Homans, Fay Russell, Rose Carroll, Jean Cadick, Madge Dean, Marjorie Relyea, Beulah Coolidge, and a chorus of forty.

Talent for "The Great Ruby."

Manager J. Wesley Rosenquest, who has associated himself with Arthur Rehan to present "The Great Ruby" after March 1, telegraphed to the West, where Rose Coghlan is playing with "The White Heather" company offering her a salary of $500 a week to play the rôle of the adventuress Countess Mirska Charkoff in their production. They also made a flattering offer to her husband, John T. Sullivan, to play a leading rôle.

Six Theatres in Darkness.

Darkness again prevailed in the Broadway, Casino, Hammerstein's Victoria, Wallack's, Daly's, and Bijou Theatres during a part of last night, on account of some unaccountable accident to the wires of the United Electric Light and Illuminating Company, which supplies these theatres with electric light. The accident occurred about 8 o'clock, when the audiences were filing into the theatres, and only through the immediate bringing into use of the gas were the people seated. The delay to the performances was not long, as the electric light was only off about thirty-five minutes.

NEWARK CITY HOME BURNED.

The Three Hundred Inmates Get Out in Safety and Some Take Advantage of the Chance to Escape.

VERONA, N. J., Jan. 9.—The Newark City Home was destroyed by fire to-night, and the 300 inmates were routed out. Some escaped from custody, but the majority of them are safe in the penitentiary and the branch insane asylum. The building was entirely destroyed. There was no life lost and no one was injured.

The discipline maintained after the fire started was excellent, and the inmates were marched out of the building and a couple of miles to the other institutions, where they are sheltered. The fire started in the cupola from some unknown cause.

The flames were discovered just as the inmates of both departments of the institution were ready for supper. The alarm was at once given, and they were quickly marshaled under the fire drill. They were then marched out of the building, although the fire had not as yet made much headway. After the companies had been drawn up outside some of the older and more trustworthy boys were told off to aid in the work of rescuing property.

The rest were divided off between the penitentiary and the insane asylum. About twenty-five boys escaped during the transferring of the inmates to those institutions. Those who had been told off for salvage work worked manfully and threw bedding and furniture out of the windows and dragged them to safe places.

The residents of the village and of the farming district around hurried to the home and aided in the work of saving the furniture. There was no water or fire apparatus available, and for hours after the building had been stripped of its furniture, the crowds stood around watching the flames as they ate downward. The fire was so hot that the brick walls became white, and presented a brilliant spectacle. From the mountain tops the scene was beautiful, and thousands from Montclair and Bloomfield viewed the sight from them.

The main building was of brick, and with the surrounding buildings, cost the City of Newark nearly $250,000. It was used as a reformatory, and was one of the colony of institutions of various characters which the city and county have located in this valley.

Protest Against a Fire House.

There is much indignation among the resident and property owners of West Ninety-second Street, near Columbus Avenue, over the fact that the Sinking Fund Commission has granted permission to the Fire Department to erect a fire house on the Water Department's plot of ground which runs from Ninety-second to Ninety-third Street, just west of Columbus Avenue. The West End Association has taken the matter up and when its committee appeared before the Sinking Fund Commission they were informed that the matter was out of the commission's hands, and that the permit to build the house had been granted. Fire Commissioner Scannell's attention was also called to the protest. He said that the matter had been settled, but promised to see what could be done in the matter, and it is likely that a hearing will be granted the association. The block where it is proposed to erect the fire house is one of the finest on the west side, and property owners denounce the erection of the house as an outrage, and say that it will have a ruinous effect on realty if built.

Oberlin College Gets $60,000.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 9.—L. H. Severance, formerly Treasurer of the Standard Oil Company, has given $60,000 to Oberlin College laboratory.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The third secular day of another busy week in the world of society brings with it a number of receptions, several luncheons and dinners, and again the opera. The most notable dinners of this evening will be given by Mrs. E. Livingston Ludlow of 6 East Seventy-sixth Street and Mrs. H. de Berkeley Parsons (Miss Walker of 294 Madison Avenue.) The last, which will be followed by a theatre party, is given in honor of Miss Evelyn Parsons, one of the most prominent débutantes of the season and a niece of Mr. Parsons. Mrs. Bayard Dominick and the Misses Dominick will give a reception at their residence, 22 West Fifty-first Street this afternoon, and there will be numerous "at homes," including those of Mrs. Henry Parish, Jr., (Miss Ludlow,) of 8 East Seventy-sixth Street, and of Mrs. George R. Howell of 500 Madison Avenue.

Yesterday was "the day after the ball" in New York society. Mrs. Drexel's cotillion of Monday night was a late one, and it was almost daylight yesterday morning before the guests had departed. Yesterday, consequently, with its bracing air, seemed on Fifth Avenue until late in the afternoon extremely dull. There were few carriages, and society was conspicuous by its absence from the fashionable thoroughfare. The tragic fire at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Pulitzer, however, had the effect of wakening many who had just got into their homes. Indeed, there were among the spectators several men and a few women still in evening clothes. The narrow escapes last year of Mr. and Mrs Herbert Robbins and other well-known people in the locality filled with apprehension many who have handsome residences which might prove veritable tinder boxes in case of another such fire.

The departure of Mr. William K. Vanderbilt for Europe on the Valiant on Monday with a number of guests, among whom were Mr. Winfield Hoyt and Mr. Louis Webb, was not unexpected. He will tarry for a considerable period in West Indian waters so as to allow Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., time to receive him in Nice and to be compagnons de voyage in a cruise later in the Spring, and to avoid complications. He will visit the Duchess of Marlborough, who just now is entertaining her mother and brother at Blenheim, and these guests will join Mr and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., at Nice and remain with them until just before the arrival of the Valiant.

There were any number of receptions and at homes yesterday. Mrs. Charles A. Van Rensselaer gave the second of a series of three at her residence, 55 East Sixty-fifth Street. Mrs. Van Rensselaer is a bride of a few weeks. She was Miss Caroline Fitz-Gerald of Brookline, Mass. The reception was largely attended by the Hecksher-Van Rensselaer connection and by many of the representatives of old New York society. Mrs. Walter R. Gillette and Miss Gillette of 24 West Fortieth Street, Mrs. Charles Pheips of 22 East Thirty-Second Street, and Mrs. George Crocker also had days. Mrs. Bolton Hall, 20 East Sixty-fifth Street, gave a luncheon. Mrs. Adee and the Misses Adee, 11 West Forty-seventh Street, held the first of their Tuesdays in January yesterday, and Lent had its premonition in the first meeting of the Sewing Class in aid of the Lying-in Hospital, which met in the afternoon at the residence of Mrs. Mortimer Brooks.

The St. Louis, sailing to-day for Southampton, has booked, among other passengers, Dr. Percy N. Barnesby, Mr. and Mrs. A. Cass Canfield, two daughters and an infant; Guy Wetmore Carryl, Miss Nita Carritte, S. Montgomery Roosevelt, Benjamin Chew of Philadelphia, Dr. Charles H. Davidson, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Harding Davis, Miss Hattie Gammell of Newport, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Grew, C. M. Grey, F. Gray Griswold, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Hutchinson, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel J. Megargee of Philadelphia, the Hon. Henry A. Mills of London, Sir Cecil Moon and Lady Moon of London, Mr. and Mrs. Howard J. Rogers and children of Albany, Mr. Charles R. Smith and Miss Helen Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Marion Story, Mr. H. R. Thaw of Pittsburg, W. Gibson White of Washington, and Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Williams.

To-night will bring in Philadelphia Mr. Lyman Biddle's ball for Miss Edith Frances Biddle. The First Assembly Ball will be danced on Friday evening. Mr. James W. Paul, Jr., will give a cotillion at Horticultural Hall on Wednesday evening, Jan. 24, for Miss Edith Gray of Albany and Miss Mary McCormick of Chicago. The same favored young women will be the guests of honor at a dinner dance to be given by Mrs George W. Childs Drexel at her residence on Jan. 23. Another notable ball in Philadelphia will be given by Mrs. Alfred C. Harrison on Jan. 26 in Horticultural Hall for her daughter, Miss Mildred Harrison.

The third of the Fortnightly dances was held in the Astor Gallery of the Astoria last night. The members and guests were received in the myrtle room by Mrs. Lewis L. Delafield, who wore a gown of black velvet, and several other of the patronesses, among whom were Mrs. John C. Jay, Mrs. C. E. Sands, Mrs. Alexander D. Shaw, and Mrs. C. R. Huntington. Among the guests, none of whom were New Yorkers, were Miss Audrey Stanwood, Miss Helen Montgomery, Miss M. W. Sanders, Miss Erving of Philadelphia, Miss Margaret Betts, Miss Kellogg, Mrs. Edith D Merrell, Mrs. Albert H. Gallatin, and the Messrs. Garrett Kip, George Stillman, W. Wilson Drake, R. V. Evans, Eugene Alexander, and Mr. Whitbick. The cotillion was led by Mr. Emory Hawes. There were two favor figures, in which the favors for the girls were fans, Egyptian in style, of peacock feathers, and different colored Marie Antoinette feathers for the hair, while those for the men were Dutch pipes and handsome calendars. There was a large attendance, and among those present were Mr. and Mrs. James B. Taylor, Dr. Louis Bishop and Mrs. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Leopold Francke, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Junod, Miss Beardman, Miss Heloise Beeckman, Miss Louise Gallatin, Miss Dorothy Higginson, Miss Marie E. Davis, Miss Agnes C. Adams, Miss Ellen W. Turnbull, Miss Angelica Church, Miss Georgette Kid, Miss May Riker, and Messrs. Hunter Breckinridge, Henry B. Cameron, A. T. Douglass, Ralph Monell, Robert Hoe, Jr., and De Courcey Ireland.

Mr. Walter S. Gurnee, Sr., gave a large dance last evening at the Metropolitan Club Annex for his granddaughter, Miss Mary Gurnee, a débutante of this season. Miss Gurnee is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter S. Gurnee, Jr., and her mother was Miss Belle Barney. The affair was really a débutantes' dance, and there were comparatively few of the older element in society present. The guests were received by Miss Delia Gurnee, an aunt of the débutante, whose gown was of mauve satin, trimmed with exquisite lace and encrustations of brilliants. She wore diamond ornaments, and for a coiffure ornament a dismond aigrette, and carried a bouquet of orchids. The rooms of the annex were beautifully decorated with American Beauty roses and palms. The cotillion was danced after supper, the favors being tambourines, with artificial flowers, toy birds, walking sticks, feather fans, crystal vinaigrettes, gun-metal pencils, fencing foils, and "lucky" pincushions. In the last figure bouquets of natural flowers were used. Miss Mary Gurnee danced with the leader. There were some 250 guests present, among them being the Misses de Peyster, Miss Evelyn Parsons, Miss Delafield, Miss Evelyn Sloane, Miss Mildred C. Dix, Miss Van Nest, Miss Metcalf, Miss Anna Dodge, Miss Mary Crocker, Miss Pauline Robinson, Miss Wood, Miss Bend, Miss Ripley, Miss Hall, Miss Banks, Miss Edith Clark, Miss Bliss, Miss Whitney, Miss Rutherfurd, Miss Minturn, Miss Martha Townsend, and Miss Kernochan, and the Messrs. Bishop, Livingston, Sands, Thompson, Beeckman, Robbins, Leverich, Betts, Hadden, Cutting, Pinchot, Benkard, Bull, Kernochan, and Townsend. There were also present a few young married couples, including Mr. and Mrs. Henry G. Trevor, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parish, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George Bird, Mr. and Mrs. Weekes, and Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Winthrop, Jr.

Miss Callender and Miss De Forest gave the second of their Tuesday evening informal musicales in the Tiffany Building, at Madison Avenue and Seventy-second Street, last evening. There were about 100 guests present. The musical programme consisted of Liza Lehman's always delightful and popular "In a Persian Garden," which was sung by the original quartet, Mr. David Bispham, Mrs. Seabury Ford of Cleveland, Mr. Mackenzie Gordon, and Miss Marguerite Hall. It seemed to the hearers as if Mr. Bispham had never rendered the splendid solo "Myself When Young" with more force and expression, while Mr. Mackenzie Gordon's rendition of the beautiful "Oh, Moon of My Delight That Knows No Wane" held his hearers spellbound, as usual. Mr. Bispham and Miss Hall sang several duos, as did also Mrs. Ford and Mr. Gordon. The usual light supper was served. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Paul Cravath, Mr. and Mrs. Egerton Webb, Mr. and Mrs. De Forest, Miss De Barril, Mr. William Harold Brown, and Mr. and Mrs. William Callender.

To the surprise of the golfing fraternity, who had rather understood that the Baltusrol Golf Club would be the sole applicant for the woman National amateur golf championship next Autumn, the Shinnecock Golf Club of Southampton, as well as a Chicago club, have made applications for the event. It would appear as if the Baltusrol Club was the most available for the next championship tournament. Its links are being put in splendid condition, it is very accessible to New York, a great feature at the time of year when the women's championship tournament is held, and although one of the best-known and most popular of suburban golf courses, it has never had a championship tournament, while the Shinnecock Club has had two—one before the United States Golf Association was formed, and the first under the association in 1896, when W. J. Whigham of Chicago was the winner. These were men's tournaments, but the opinion is generally expressed that it would be only fair for the Baltusrol Club to have the first chance this year, if the tournament is to go to an Eastern club.

Among the reported engagements is that of Miss Amy Bonner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bonner, and Mr. Charles W. Bowring, an Englishman, who has been living in New York for some time.

Mr. Adrian Iselin, Jr., has left the Engadine, and is en route for New York. Mrs. Iselin and the Misses Iselin will remain at the Palace Hotel, St. Moritz, the entire Winter. Mrs. Iselin's health is much improved. Mr. George Work has also settled down for the Winter at Davos. The season in the Engadine is a bit backward. There are as yet very few American visitors, and not as many English people as generally congregate there at this season.

Snow has fallen on the Riviera, and it has been so cold and bleak at Monte Carlo that nearly all the tourists who wanted to stop for a while have again departed. Paris is still stirred up a bit about the Boer war, and the Americans and English are banded together. A concert at the Ritz Hotel recently was given under distinguished auspices for the benefit of the British Widows and Orphans Fund. Among the patronesses were the Infanta Eulalie and Mrs. Ogden Goelet. Both Mrs. and Miss Goelet are passing the Winter in Paris, where it is a bit gayer than in London. In fact, the latter city is gloomy beyond description.

In addition to the usual November and quarterly issues the Social Register Association has published this year a visiting index, systematizing days at home in New York City. Families in the Register are indexed by districts and days at home. The following arrangement has been used, as these days appear to be generally accepted for the various divisions: Mondays, side streets about Fiftieth; Tuesdays, Fifth Avenue; Wednesdays, Lexington and Park Avenues and side streets, Twenty-third to Fiftieth; Thursdays, Madison Avenue, Gramercy Park, and Irving Place, to Twenty-third, and Fridays, Washington Square and side streets to Twenty-third.

TRIBUTE TO MR. GERRY.

Directors of the New York S. P. C. C. Record in a Resolution Their Appreciation of His Services.

At a meeting yesterday of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children the following resolution was read and approved, and the Secretary was directed to enter it in full on the minutes:

The twenty-fifth year of the existence of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is the first that was ever constituted for the objects it is intended to subserve, having just passed, the Directors deem it but just to record their appreciation of the continued, constant, and zealous services of its President, the Hon. Elbridge T. Gerry.

From its organization in 1874 to this time Mr. Gerry has been associated with the society as its counsel, Vice President, and, for more than twenty years, as its President. In these various capacities his labors have been widely different from those all too numerous perfunctory officials who are magnified chiefly by the position that they occupy rather than by the value of any labors that they may bestow. He has been from the very inception of the society supervisor, active participant, and chief final adviser in the not infrequent complicated issues that arise in its operations and in its diverse affairs, as well as the unheralded, oft repeated, and unstinted contributor toward the funds required for the advancement of its beneficent work.

In working out the legislation of this State that refers to cruelty to children and their protection, there was no beaten path to follow, no pioneer had blazed the way through the thickets of prejudice, superstition, and varied habits of a very mixed population; all being novel and without precedent, serious thought and careful statements were essential. This legislation, conceived and consummated principally through the efforts of Mr. Gerry, has been the basis of the laws on this subject in England, France, Germany, and Italy.

During these twenty-five years over 125,000 complaints have been investigated, involving nearly 50,000 convictions, more than 300,000 children, and the placing of over 80,000 of them in comfortable homes under moral influences. Can any one doubt that the dealing with these vast numbers of the human family, of all races, creeds, colors, sexes, and conditions has required anything less than the constant exercise of the most painstaking consideration and of rare judgment?

The Directors of the society, with unfeigned pleasure, make this record of their estimate of the value of Mr. Gerry's services, disinterested and unremunerated, and add that gratifying evidences of recent widely increasing public interest in the beneficent work of the society are markedly manifest.

UNION RAILWAY COMPANY WINS

Court of Appeals Upholds Legality of Common Council's Consent.

ALBANY, Jan. 9.—The Court of Appeals to-day affirmed, with costs, the judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, in affirming the judgment of the Trial Term dismissing the action begun by Ferdinand Bohmer, Jr., against Louis F. Haffen, Commissioner of Street Improvements in New York City, the authorities of that city, and the Union Railway Company. This decision confirms the grants made to the Union Railway by the Common Council, and by Street Commissioner Haffen. Bohmer alleged in his action that the consents of the Common Council to the company to lay tracks and use the public streets of New York City were illegal, and were granted in violation of law, and that the privileges were illegal, because they wrongfully exempted the defendant from paying into the City Treasury a tax of 3 per cent. annually on its gross receipts.

When the case went to trial Justice Truax, the Trial Justice, granted a motion dismissing the suit, which decision is finally affirmed by the Court of Appeals. This decision validates the several franchises granted by the City of New York to the Union Railway Company. The decision in effect discloses also that Chapter 340 of the Laws of 1892 which gave the Union Railway Company the right to operate in the City of New York, under privileged conditions is not unconstitutional.

Ex-Commissioner Kane Wins Suit.

ALBANY, Jan. 9.—James Kane, former Commissioner of Sewers of New York City, who was indicted for committing a fraud on the city by awarding city contracts in excess of the value thereof, who demurred to the indictment, has been sustained in his appeal to the Court of Appeals. This court to-day handed down a decision affirming the judgment sustaining the demurrer.

William De Boise Exonerated.

ST. JAMES, L. I., Jan. 9.—Coroner E. S. Moore exonerated William De Boise from suspicion of having killed an unknown Pole who was found dead in De Boise's house after it had been partially destroyed by fire Monday morning. The Coroner declared that the Pole had met death from suffocation.

Curling at Van Cortlandt Park.

In the annual curling match between the North and South of Scotland, decided at the mill pond in Van Cortlandt Park yesterday afternoon, the "brithers" from the North won all the prizes, scoring 88 shots to 59 for their opponents. David Soulis took the Dalrymple Medal, Robert Kelloch the flag, and James, skip of the fifth rink, won the Kilpatrick Medal.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

The Rev. Thomas Smith.

The Rev. Thomas Smith, the pastor for nineteen years of St. Mary's Parish, at Greenwich, Conn., died there yesterday of dropsy. He was in his sixtieth year. The funeral services will be held Friday morning, and Bishop Tierney has notified all the clergy in the State to attend. Father Smith was born in County Longford, Ireland, and his early education was received there. His theological course was taken in the Provincial Seminary, then at Fordham, and Archbishop Hughes ordained him in New York May 30, 1873. He preached as curate in New Haven, Thompsonville, and Danbury, and assumed the pastorate at Greenwich nineteen years ago. Two weeks previous to his death he was assisted into the church and officiated. His last words were addressed to friends at his bedside, and were: "I want to return thanks to you all for your kindnesses to me. I forgive every one for the slightest act of unkindness and wish all to forgive me too, as I hope and pray the Heavenly Father will forgive them and me."

Dr. Thomas Holmes.

Dr. Thomas Holmes, the discoverer of an embalming fluid, died Monday at his home, 267 South Ninth Street, Brooklyn. He was eighty-two years old. He lived in Brooklyn for sixty years. Dr. Holmes was born in New York City, but his parents moved to Williamsburg while he was a boy. He was graduated from the College of the City of New York, and after his graduation he was for six years attached to the Coroners' office as examining physician. During the war of the rebellion he embalmed 4,028 bodies. He had in his home at the time of his death a large number of specimens of embalming work, and it is said that some time ago he discovered a fluid which he believed would destroy the germs of contagious diseases. For three years before his death he was practically out of business, devoting all his time to the study of embalming.

George H. Nichols.

George H. Nichols died yesterday at his residence, 253 Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn. Mr. Nichols was born in Rhode Island seventy-seven years ago. He came to New York when a young man, and founded the Nichols Chemical Company, one of the first firms to engage in the manufacture of glucose. Mr. Nichols retired from active business five years ago. He was a Trustee and Deacon of the Clinton Avenue Congregational Church, a Director of the Brooklyn Eye and Ear Hospital, and a member of the Advisory Board of the Brooklyn Orphan Asylum, and was interested in many other charitable organizations. He is survived by three sons, William H., E. R., and George E. Nichols.

Obituary Notes.

Mrs. MARY FRANCES MCKEEVER, wife of Gen. Chauncey McKeever, United States Army, and daughter of the late William Chauncey of this city, died Tuesday at Washington, D. C.

FRANK R. PLETCHER, a handkerchief merchant of this city, died Monday at Germantown, Penn. He was born in Germantown forty-five years ago and had been engaged in business in this city for many years. He was a member of the Catholic Club and leaves a wife.

ELWIN LEROY LIVERMORE, a traveling salesman for Acker, Merrall & Condit, died at his home, at 438 Putnam Avenue, Brooklyn, last Monday of heart disease. He was forty-nine years old, and was born in St. Louis, Mo. He was a member of Americus Council, 654, Royal Arcanum, and Copestone Masonic Lodge of this city. He was unmarried. His mother and one brother survive him.

JOHN H. MARTENHOFF died Sunday at his home, at 180 Concord Street, Brooklyn, from a congestive chill. He was born in Manhattan and was forty-seven years old. He was a lifelong friend of Hugh McLaughlin, and was prominent in politics. Twelve years ago he opened a hotel, which he conducted successfully up to the time of his death. He was a member of the Second Assembly District Democratic Club. Mr. Martenhoff was unmarried. He leaves two sisters.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

Riggs—Spicer.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y., Jan. 9.—The marriage of Miss Elizabeth S. Spicer and James Gilbert Riggs took place at 5 o'clock this evening at the residence of the Misses Masters here. The Rev. Thornton M. Niven performed the ceremony. Miss Spicer was attended by Miss Edith M. Fort as maid of honor. Dr. Willard G. Reynolds of Brooklyn acted as best man. Howard D. Hadley of Plattsburg and Richard Tyers of Dobbs Ferry were the ushers. Many guests from out of town were present at the wedding. Mr. and Mrs. Riggs will take up their residence here.

SHAFTER TO ACT AS ESCORT.

Is Ordered to Accompany the Body of Gen. Lawton to Washington.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—A formal order has been issued from the War Department to Major Gen. Shafter to escort the body of the late Major Gen. Henry W. Lawton from San Francisco to Washington upon its arrival from Manila, which is expected to be about Feb. 1.

Gen. Shafter will be accompanied by one of his aides de camp. The body is to be interred with full military honors at the National Cemetery at Arlington, and the President, members of the Cabinet, and many other distinguished people will attend the service.

DUCKWORTH CLUB BANQUET.

Absence of Prominent Democrats Causes Comment in Cincinnati.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 9.—The failure of several prominent Democrats to attend the Jackson Day banquet of the Duckworth Club is causing much comment. The gentlemen who absented themselves were ex-Gov. James E. Campbell, Lou Reemelin, and Mayor Gustav Tafel. Reemelin has always been prominent at Democratic gatherings. His absence was due, it is whispered, to the fact that Campbell, his old enemy, had been invited to be present as a guest.

Why the Mayor failed to attend is another matter. His son and private secretary, Richard, said that his father had another engagement. Richard was not there. Neither was Col. Scott, nor was Isaac J. Miller of the Board of City Affairs, nor Philip Renner.

BAR ASSOCIATION ELECTION.

John E. Parsons Succeeds James C. Carter as President.

The annual meeting of the New York Bar Association took place last night at the Association Building. Herbert B. Turner presided at the meeting in the absence of James C. Carter, the President, who was out of town. The reports of the Treasurer and the Committee on Admissions showed a balance in the treasury of $5,468, and a membership of 1,641.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President—John E. Parsons; Vice Presidents—Cephas Brainerd, William G. Choate, Hamilton Odell, Herbert B. Turner, and James M. Varnum; Recording Secretary—Silas B. Brownell; Treasurer—S. Sidney Smith; Executive Committee, Class of 1900—George L. Rives, class of 1902; Michael H. Cardozo, John H. Cole, John W. Simpson, David Willcox, and Aaron Pennington Whitehead; Committee on Admissions, Class of 1902—Henry M. Alexander, Charles K. Beekman, Alfred S. Brown, Frederick H. Comstock, Francis C. Huntington, Noah C. Rogers, and Edward B. Whitney.

The following were elected to membership in the association: Arthur Knox, Bert Hanson, John Hill Morgan, Meredith Hare, Robert W. Thompson, Jr., Messmore Kendall, Thomas P. Rothwell, and Arthur D. Greenfield.

Ice Yachting on the Shrewsbury.

Special to The New York Times.

RED BANK, N. J., Jan. 9.—Seventeen boats of the North Shrewsbury River Ice Yacht Club started this afternoon in the Commodore's race. The triangular course was sailed over four times. A light southerly breeze blew. The Get There was an easy winner in the big class, her time being 34 minutes 15 seconds. Edna M. was second and Kittie third. The winner in the third class was the Daisy, whose time was 46 minutes 20 seconds. The Flaw was second and Zip third.

Lieut. Gov. Woodruff Indorsed.

The Republican General Committee of Kings County, at a meeting held in Brooklyn last night, adopted resolutions by a rising vote indorsing Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff as a candidate for the Vice Presidency of the United States.

S. L. MALONE MAKES CHARGES.

Dead Priest's Nephew Gives Out a Statement Regarding Treatment of Church Authorities.

Sylvester L. Malone, a nephew of the late Father Malone, made a statement yesterday in regard to the trouble at the parish house of the late priest in Brooklyn, between the Malone family and Bishop McDonnell during Father Malone's illness and after his death.

The statement reviewed the whole trouble in detail, beginning with the arrival of the Malone family at the rectory and the substitution of two trained nurses for the nurse previously in attendance upon the sick priest.

It is charged in this statement that, during a visit of the Vicar General to Father Malone's bedside, a paper, drawn up by Mgr. Duffy and Father Carroll, Dean of the Eastern District of Brooklyn, and purporting to be a will from memory, was presented to Father Malone by Lawyer George L. Fox for approval, after Father Malone had refused to leave it in Mr. Fox's possession. It is further alleged that the Vicar General demanded the discharge of the dying priest's nephew as manager of McCaddin Hall, and that he threatened to call a meeting of the Board of Trustees in the sick room for that purpose.

The statement also declares that a check drawn by Father Malone on his personal account in the First National Bank of Brooklyn was dishonored at first because of "an understanding with the Bish

NEW JERSEY LEGISLATURE

The Two Houses Meet and Receive the Governor's Message.

TAXATION OF CORPORATIONS

Gov. Voorhees Favors Classification of Franchises—Girls' Industrial School Scandal.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 9.—The One Hundred and Twenty-fourth New Jersey Legislature convened at 3 o'clock this afternoon. The corridors, galleries, and floors of both Houses were crowded, and there was a profuse floral display. The two houses organized by the election of the officers recently decided upon by the Republican caucauses. Senator Johnson of Bergen, taking the chair in the upper house, made a short speech thanking the members for the honor. Assemblyman Jones of Essex, Speaker of the Assembly, also thanked the members of that body.

After the two houses had been organized the annual message of Gov. Foster M. Voorhees was read. Gov. Voorhees says that when the last of the State bonds, amounting to $71,000, issued for war purposes, falling due in 1902, are paid, the State will be entirely free of debt.

In discussing the protection of the oyster beds, the Governor says the annual value of the oyster crop of the State is nearly $2,000,000, a sum equal to the value of the yearly wheat production. The industry gives direct employment to about 600 boats and over 3,000 men.

He calls attention to the fruitless joint efforts of New York and New Jersey to interest the Federal Government in the preservation of the Palisades of the Hudson from defacement and depredation, but expresses the belief that the two States will succeed in acquiring the necessary land to insure the inclusion of the Palisades in a public park scheme.

The Governor says the State has thus far realized $4,000,000 from the sale of its lands under water, and about $1,000,000 from rentals thereof. He estimates the value of such lands remaining unsold at $20,000,000.

On the subject of the taxation of the franchises of street railway, telegraph, and telephone companies and gas, water, and electric-light companies, whose use of public property, he says, may not in a strict sense be deemed a monopoly, but practically is such, the Governor says:

"The question pressing upon your attention and demanding answer is, Do the franchises of corporations of a quasi-public nature, enjoying special privileges in the use of public property, possess a value which should be the subject of taxation, and if so, are the laws defective in not subjecting them to such taxation?

"This special privilege or exclusive right is as much an element of value as the rest of the property of such corporations, and is so regarded by those interested therein and by the public. Ample proof of this fact is found in the vast increase of the amount of their interest-bearing securities and stocks, a large part whereof have been issued upon the basis of the value of the franchises referred to, and find their security in the possession thereof by the companies issuing them. The rapid growth of our cities, thus affording greater patronage and income, the diminished cost of constructing and extending quasi-public works, inventions that facilitate and decrease the expense of operation, have each contributed to the enhancement of the relative value of the franchise. Shall that element of value be subject to taxation?

"I fully realize the importance of dealing with this matter in a conservative spirit. The prosperity of a State depends largely upon the security which it affords to invested capital. It ought not to be forgotten that when a great many of the corporations now exercising these franchises established their business their success was by no means certain.

"In my judgment the fairest and most practical way to deal with the problem is to classify by legislative enactment these special franchises for the purpose of taxation by one of the State boards. This, I think, is particularly necessary, in view of the fact that many of the corporations referred to are exercising franchises in more than one municipality.

"This subject is probably the most important that will engage your attention during the present session, and I suggest that it be taken up for consideration as early as practicable, to the end that something definite and satisfactory may be accomplished before adjournment."

The Governor devotes considerable space to the attacks on the management of the State Industrial School for Girls, which, he declares, were unjust. On this subject he says in part:

"This school has during the past year gained an unpleasant and unfortunate notoriety. Exaggerated and sensational accounts, spread broadcast over the country, have created a deeply erroneous impression as to the purposes of the school, the methods of its management, and the results there attained. Officious intermeddlers, seeking a cheap notoriety and influenced by no honest purpose, or pretending to speak officially for some well-meaning but wholly irresponsible and self-constituted organizations, with a prejudice born of ignorance and the assumption of an authority which the Legislature has wisely withheld from them, voluntarily and without any special demand for their views or an investigation of facts from reliable sources, have rushed into print with their ill-considered criticisms and suggestions.

"The public, not informed of the true character of their utterances, which are neither sacred nor infallible, has attached to them an undue weight. From this mistaken zeal and unwarranted conduct there has come incalculable harm to an institution which is doing great good, and to the State an undeserved dishonor.

"The records of the school afford the strongest proof that a wise care and faithful attention has marked the conduct of the officers and Board of Trustees and Managers. It is to be regretted that the members of the said board felt obliged to resign rather than submit to the unfair imputations and unjust criticism which characterized the attack made on their official conduct. They are men of eminent respectability and high standing in the community, and had served the State for many years with faithfulness and zeal.

"At no time has the claim been made that the school has reached the full measure of perfection, but under the management of the Trustees, aided by the intelligent and suggestive help of the Board of Women Visitors and of the officers, decided and, under the circumstances, astonishing reforms and advances have been made."

After the reading of the Governor's message the presiding officers of both houses announced their committee appointments.

Gov. Voorhees sent to the Senate the following nominations: Supreme Court Justice, Job H. Lippincott, reappointed; Bank and Insurance Commissioner, William Bettle, reappointed; State Prison Supervisor, Edward J. Anderson, reappointed; Prosecutor of Bergen County, Earnest Koester, (Rep.,) to succeed Peter W. Stagg, (Dem.;) Trustees of the Girls' Industrial School, Noble C. Bristol, Alfred D. Carnagy, William H. McCullough, Patrick O'Mara, John D. Rue, Howell C. Stull; State Sewerage Commission, David C. Wallace, John Hinchliffe, Charles W. Fuller, Charles F. Harrington, William T. Hunt.

Among the bills introduced in the Senate were:

By Mr. Martin, making the legal rate of interest 5 per cent.

By Mr. Pitney, providing that real estate owned by banks shall be assessed the same as other real estate.

The two houses adjourned until next Monday night.

R. B. BRIGHAM'S BEQUESTS.

Main Part of Fortune of About $5,000,000 Left for a Hospital.

BOSTON, Jar. 9.—The will of the late Robert B. Brigham, the millionaire restaurateur and hotel proprietor, which was filed for probate to-day, leaves bequests in the shape of annuities to nearly every charitable institution in the city. Relatives and friends receive bequests and annuities, but, considering the extent of the property, which is said to be valued at $5,000,000, and the large amount given to charity, the gifts to individuals are comparatively small.

The chief feature of the will is the provision made for the founding of a hospital, for incurables in Boston. To launch this enterprise the main portion of Mr. Brigham's estate is set aside. The exact amount thus available cannot be given, but will be "the rest and the residue" after other bequests have been paid.

The hospital is to be known as the Robert B. Brigham Hospital, and those citizens who from chronic disease are rendered incapable of making a comfortable livelihood are to be housed there.

The Hollis Street Theatre property is not left to the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company as was generally anticipated.

CARTERET GUN CLUB SHOOT.

Prizes Divided Between Harold Money and H. Yale Dolan.

The prizes were pretty evenly divided at the Carteret Gun Club's big shoot yesterday between Harold Money, the twenty-one-year-old son of the veteran Capt. Money, and H. Yale Dolan, the Philadelphia Gun Club's expert. Two cup events were decided during the day, and ten of the club's experts were contestants. The scores:

Even distance sweepstakes for Watrous prize. Shooters to stand at 30 yards rise; 25 birds each; entrance $25. Forfeits for non-appearance after entering, $10. Ties to be shot, miss and out.

TENNIS AT TUXEDO PARK.

A Series of Important Matches Arranged for Next Week.

Special to The New York Times.

TUXEDO PARK, N. Y., Jan. 9.—Play is going on vigorously at the Tuxedo courts daily. Next week a series of court tennis matches will be played at the Tuxedo tennis court, among them contests between Peter Latham, champion of the world, and Thomas Pettitt, professional champion of America; Peter Latham, with Eustice Miles, amateur champion of England, and Thomas Pettitt, with Lawrence M. Stockton, amateur champion of America, and between each professional champion and each amateur champion. Many other well-known players, such as G. R. Fearing, Jr., and A. Shaw of Boston will also take part in exhibition matches. On Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock Lawrence M. Stockton will play the first great international amateur match against Eustice Miles.

Directly after the week is over there will be a court tennis handicap, open to all the members of the Tuxedo Tennis and Racquet Club, and to all members of the invited clubs, and other invited guests. The first prize will be a handsome silver cup, presented by Pierre Lorillard, President of the club. As far as possible the handicap matches will be arranged for Saturday till Monday, so that those who come out to Tuxedo for over Sunday may be sure of seeing one of the most interesting games. Those who intend to enter for the handicaps, both singles and doubles, should send in their names with their standard of play to the Secretary.

YACHT CLUB NOMINATIONS.

Pennants of New York's Flag Officers to Fly from Sailing Vessels.

The Nominating Committee of the New York Yacht Club last night presented the following names for the flag officers of the club for the year 1900: Commodore—Lewis Cass Ledyard, schooner Montauk; Vice Commodore—August Belmont, cutter Mineola; Rear Commodore—Charles F. L. Robinson, cutter Syce.

Other names presented are as follows: For Secretary—J. V. S. Oddie; for Treasurer—F. W. J. Hurst; for Measurer—John Hyslop; for Fleet Surgeon—Morris J. Asch, M. D.; for Regatta Committee—S. Nicholson Kane, (Chairman,) Chester Griswold and Irving Grinnell. A few changes will be made in the minor committees and the Committe on Club Stations.

The first general meeting of the club, at which these names will be presented for election, will be held on the second Thursday of February. The club, after a lapse of seventeen years, will then have flag officers whose pennants will fly from sailing vessels. The rule has been that the Commodore shall own a steamer, the Vice Commodore a schooner, and the Rear Commodore a single sticker.

ATHLETICS AT PRINCETON.

Track Team to be Taken to Paris—Trainer Christie Released.

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 9.—Capt. Cregan announces that a picked team from the regular track team will be taken to Paris next Summer to compete in the Olympic games. The track management is now considering the advisability of sending a relay team to the Boston Athletic Association and the Knickerbocker Athletic Club meets to be held on Feb. 3 and 10 respectively.

Capt. Arthur Hillebrand and Manager Cloney of the base ball team have decided to ask Clark of the Boston league team to coach the team during the latter part of March. The Southern trip will be taken about April 12.

Capt. Williamson Pell of the football team has announced that Walter Christie is to be released from training the football team next Fall.

Rivalry for Golf Honors.

Since the recent announcement that the Baltusrol Golf Club of Short Hills, N. J., is making preparations to apply for the women's amateur championship, the Shinnecock Hills Golf Club has come to the front with a formal application for the same event. The application of the Shinnecock Hills Club has already been sent to the Secretary of the United States Golf Association. The general meeting of the golf association will be held Feb. 28, probably at Delmonico's. It is doubtful if Garden City will have any strong opponent for the amateur championship, and the only club thus far that has been prominently mentioned for the open event is the Chicago Golf Club.

Open Golf Champion to Visit America.

LONDON, Jan. 9.—Harry Vardon, the open golf champion, starts for the United States at the end of January on an exhibition golf tour. Vardon, who was born in the Island of Jersey, first became prominent in the golf world by winning the open championship in 1896. He duplicated this by capturing the same honor in 1898, at Prestwick, Scotland, and in 1899, at Sandwich, England.

Columbia Defeats Princeton.

The Columbia University hockey team defeated the Princeton University team in a one-sided match at the Clermont Avenue Skating Rink, Brooklyn, last night. The final score stood Columbia 6 goals, Princeton 1 goal.

St. Nicholas Club Wins at Hockey.

The St. Nicholas Skating Club team defeated the New York Athletic Club team in a game of hockey at the St. Nicholas Rink last night by a score of three goals to two.

NEW YORK ATHLETIC CLUB.

Opposition Candidate Successful in the Annual Election.

Considerable opposition to the regular ticket of the New York Athletic Club made the annual meeting of that organization a lively one last night. It was held in the Fifty-ninth Street clubhouse, and about 800 votes were cast. The following officers were unanimously elected: President—John R. Van Wormer; Vice President—Albert E. Colfax; Secretary—Charles L. Burnham; Treasurer—Charles E. Goodhue; Captain—Charles H. Sherrill; members of the Board of Governors, to serve two years—James H. Haslin, Frank K. Hunter, Paul Allan Curtis, Charles E. Knoblauch, Charles P. Geddes, Frederick Vilmar, and H. K. S. Williams; Governor to serve one year—J. Walter Spalding.

Frederick M. Hausling was a regular candidate for member of the Board of Governors to serve two years and on the opposition ticket the name of Walter S. Wilson was substituted. The opposition ticket ran strongly, and at 12:10 this morning, when the polls were closed, each side claimed the victory. Mr. Wilson was elected by nine votes.

The reports of committees showed that the club is in excellent condition financially. Capt. Hausling's report exhibits the fact that the club has won fifty-two championship events in the past year, nine of which were captured by Alvin C. Kraenslein, the hurdle racer and broad jumper. The total membership of the club is 3,648, divided as follows: Honorary, 7; life, 493; resident, 2,628; non-resident, 457; army and navy, 15; junior, 51.

LANDLORD SHOOTS HIS TENANT.

Latter Could Not Pay His Rent—May Die from His Wound.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Jan. 9.—Because he was behind in his rent, David Lafferty probably fatally shot George Werbach, a tenant, to-night. Lafferty is confined to his bed with a broken leg, but to-day he sent notice to Werbach that if the rent was not paid at once he would be evicted. Before the tenant returned home, his goods were in the street. He sought his landlord in his bed chamber, and during the argument, Lafferty reached under his pillow, drew a revolver, and shot Werbach in the side. The victim was removed to a hospital and may die. Lafferty was placed under arrest, but as he cannot be moved an officer was detailed to guard him.

Hotel at Poultney, Vt., Burned.

POULTNEY, Vt., Jan. 9.—The Hotel Poultney was burned to the ground this evening, the loss being $15,000, with $10,000 insurance. It was owned by Michael McCarthy, and occupied by George Gilfether.

MAYOR'S ANNUAL MESSAGE

Municipal Assembly Asked Not to Delay Public Improvements.

Construction of the Bridge to Queens Urged—Financial Condition of the City.

Mayor Van Wyck sent his annual message to the Municipal Assembly yesterday. The document, which is a comparatively brief one, contains a summary of the city's financial condition, a statement of the bonds and corporate stock issued during 1899, and a list of bond issues authorized by the Board of Estimate in the budget for the current year.

In the message the Mayor makes only one recommendation, and that is that unnecessary delay in the passage of ordinances affecting public improvements be avoided. On this subject the Mayor says:

"I desire to call your attention to the many reasons which exist for prompt action on your part upon the numerous questions which necessarily under the charter provisions come before you, relating to the initiating and carrying on of public works. Unnecessary delay in such matters may result in pecuniary loss to the city, and it cannot fail to disarrange the plans for public improvements made by the heads of administrative departments."

Of the public schools, the Mayor says: "During the year 1899, by the action of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and the Municipal Assembly, the issue was authorized of bonds for schoolhouses and sites to the extent of $7,673,640. Of this amount bonds for $6,571,631.80 have been issued, and the residue is available as called for. In the budget for the year 1900 the board has made provision for a further issue of $2,500,000 for this same purpose, making a total authorized bond issue for this purpose in two years of over $10,000,000."

In relation to bridges, the Mayor has this to say: "The action taken by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment in November, 1898, authorizing the issue of bonds to the amount of $100,000 for preliminary work on two bridges to be erected, one between Manhattan and Brooklyn and the other between Manhattan and Queens, was concurred in by the Municipal Assembly in the early part of the year 1899, and subsequently such bonds were issued to the extent of $40,000.

"Ordinances were also adopted by both houses of the Municipal Assembly authorizing the making of contracts, by the Bridge Commissioner, for preliminary borings in connection with the location of both bridges, and the Commissioner of Bridges prepared and submitted to the Board of Public Improvements plans for the proposed bridges, and proposed ordinances for erecting them, which, having been approved, were transmitted to the Municipal Assembly.

"The Board of Estimate and Apportionment authorized the issue of bonds to the amount of $2,000,000, being $1,000,000 for each of the two bridges in question, to be used for construction purposes. Both houses of the Municipal Assembly concurred in authorizing these issues of bonds for the two bridges.

"The ordinance submitted for carrying on the work on the Brooklyn bridge was approved in both houses of the Municipal Assembly, and the like ordinance providing for work on the bridge to Queens Borough was favorably acted on by the Board of Aldermen, but remained as undisposed of business in the Council on Dec. 30, 1899, the day of final adjournment of the Municipal Assembly.

"The ordinances having been adopted to authorize the issue of $50,000 for preliminary work and for the making of contracts for borings necessary to locate foundations, and an issue of $1,000,000 for construction having been provided, the only remaining step necessary to be taken to carry forward the work upon the bridge between the Boroughs of Manhattan and Queens is the adoption of a general ordinance providing for its construction. I commend this to your early and favorable consideration.

"During the year 1898 bonds were issued to the amount of $2,000,000 for the purpose of carrying on the work for the New East River Bridge. During the year 1899 issues were made to the amount of $1,087,823.68 for the same purpose, and further issues were authorized to the amount of $4,000,000, making a total amount provided during the years 1898 and 1899 by bonds for carrying on the work on this bridge $7,087,823.68."

In relation to rapid transit he says: "The Board of Rapid Transit Railroad Commissioners has during the year past prepared plans for the construction of an underground railroad, commencing at the City Hall Park and extending into the Borough of the Bronx, and in conformity with the statute has published notice calling for bids for the building and operation of the road. It is earnestly to be hoped that the result will justify the expectations of those having this work in charge and that the day is now near at hand when this much-desired public improvement will be available to the city."

The net funded debt of the city, the Mayor says, is $252,676,035.41, besides which there are something over $4,000,000 of bonds issued by municipalities embraced in the greater city whose legality has not been determined. During 1899 the net funded debt increased $6,387,826.47, and in the same period the total of bonds issued was $30,308,190.68. During the year the total redemption of bonds was $65,586,235.26, of which $7,782,974.50 were bonds of the funded debt.

The receipts during 1899 were $220,604,297.01 and the payments were $201,846,992.97, leaving a cash balance at the close of business on Dec. 31 of $18,757,304.04. After showing that the budget for 1900 is smaller by $2,741,109.55 than that for 1899, the Mayor says:

"In view of the fact, however, that this year for the first time the appropriations for private charitable institutions have been included in the budget, instead of paid from the excise and other revenue funds of the city, (any surpluses of which are payable by law into the general fund for the reduction of taxation,) the actual decrease from last year's tax levy will approximate $4,000,000."

CHAIN SUSPENSION BRIDGE.

The First One in New England Still to be Seen at Newburyport.

From The Railroad Gazette.

The first bridge built across the Merrimac River, at Newburyport, Mass., was built by Timothy Palmer in 1792. The structure consisted of two bridges resting upon Deer Island. An arch of 160 feet span and 40 feet above high water connected the island with the mainland on one side, and several spans did a like service upon the other.

In passing, it may be said that an old legend relates that the island derived its name from the fact that a deer jumped upon it from the mainland across the channel. Passengers upon the old steamer Merrimac can even now see a pair of antlers fastened to a tree trunk standing upon the island a little above the bridge, said to be the antlers of the deer which made the remarkable leap.

The present chain bridge replaced the 160-foot arch in 1810, and was built by John Templeman of the District of Columbia. According to the tablet upon one of the towers this was "the first chain suspension bridge built in New England."

The distance between the centres of the towers is about 244 feet, and the length of the roadway carried by the cables about 230 feet. The towers above the roadway are built of heavy timbers protected with a shingled covering. The bridge consists of two independent roadways, side by side, each about 12 feet in the clear; each roadway is carried by two sets of cables, each set being composed of three chains made of links 24 inches long. The floor system is of wood. The anchorage is about 100 feet from the towers and the cables run to the tops of the towers without any vertical load. The cables hang in vertical planes, and there is no lateral bracing of any kind other than the floor planking.

Electric cars have crossed this bridge some eight years, a line of rails being laid in each roadway. To one who has not experienced seeing the rails rise up in front of the car as it moves forward and downward, the sensation is anything but pleasant at first. A light Summer car in the centre of the span causes a vertical deflection of at least two feet. A car crossing the bridge, as viewed from a boat upon the river a little above the structure, gives a beautiful illustration of wave motion. In the modifications which are contemplated to prevent so much wave motion in the floor, it is to be hoped the general appearance of the structure may be preserved.

ELECTIONS OF THE BANKS

Few Changes Made in the Directorates of National and State Institutions.

Annual meetings of the stockholders of the National and some of the State banks of this city were held yesterday. There were few changes made in the Directorates, while such changes as were made were not radical. Results of the meetings follow:

WESTERN NATIONAL BANK.—Director, new: Clinton Ledyard Blair, to fill the vacancy created by the death of Henry B. Hyde, President of the Equitable Life Assurance Society. Directors, re-elected: James W. Alexander, Charles J. Canda, Juan M. Ceballos, William N. Coler, Jr., Chauncey M. Depew, Marcellus Hartley, Thomas H. Hubbard, James H. Hyde, Brayton Ives, John Howard Latham, James H. Parker, John E. Searles, Valentine P. Snyder, and Sidney F. Tyler.

The new Director, Mr. Blair, is the grandson of John Insley Blair, who died Dec. 2, and is the Stock Exchange member of the banking firm of Blair & Co., 33 Wall Street, which was founded by his grandfather.

The Western National Bank's advance in prosperity is seen in the following comparative data:

Gross deposits Dec. 19, 1894, $12,717,187.58; gross deposits Dec. 2, 1899, $34,449,827.23; surplus and undivided profits Dec. 19, 1894, $244,900.80; surplus and undivided profits Dec. 2, 1899, $1,292,780.13. The bank earned 20 per cent. on its capital of $2,100,000 in 1899.

HANOVER NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, new: Lucius Moore of Hudson, N. Y., and James Henry Smith, to fill the board's quota, increased from twelve to fourteen Directors. Directors, re-elected: Vernon H. Brown, William Barbour, James M. Donald, Sigourney W. Fay, Martin S. Fechheimer, William Halls, Jr., Hudson Hoagland, William Rockefeller, Elijah P. Smith, James Stillman, Isidor Straus, and James T. Woodward.

BANK OF NEW YORK, N. B. A.—Director, new: John G. McCullough in place of the late James Moir. Directors, re-elected: James M. Constable, Charles D. Leverich, George H. Byrd, G. Amsinck, A. W. Hard, H. B. Laidlaw, D. O. Mills, John L. Riker, J. Kennedy Tod, E. S. Mead, John Crosby Brown, Henry C. Swords.

NATIONAL CITY BANK.—Directors, new: E. H. Harriman, Moses Taylor, A. G. Loomis, and W. S. Rogers, one to fill the vacancy created by the death of Lawrence Turnure, the others to increase the Directorate. Directors, re-elected: F. N. Bacon, Robert Bacon, Cleveland H. Dodge, Charles S. Fairchild, Henry O. Havemeyer, John A. McCall, Stephen S. Palmer, James H. Post, M. Taylor Pyne, William Rockefeller, John W. Sterling, Jacob H. Schiff, James Stillman, William Douglas Sloane, Samuel Sloan, Henry A. C. Taylor, H. Walter Webb.

Of the new Directors Mr. Harriman is President of the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company, and is identified with many and important railroad interests. Mr. Loomis is Second Vice President of the bank. Mr. Taylor is an iron merchant of 52 Wall Street. Mr. Bogert is President Stillman's private secretary. He was once before a Director of the bank.

NEW YORK NATIONAL EXCHANGE BANK.—Directors, new: William Halls, Jr., Warren Chulkshank, and Lewis E. Pierson. Directors, re-elected: James Rowland, Hudson Hoagland, William J. Merrall, Daniel B. Halstead, John H. Seed, James M. Donald, Robert H. McCutcheon, William Wills, Frank S. Hyatt.

Mr. Halls is Cashier of the Hanover National Bank, Mr. Crulkshank is a member of the real estate firm of E. A. Crulkshank & Co., and Mr. Pierson is the bank's cashier.

CHASE NATIONAL BANK.—Director, new: John I. Waterbury, President of the Manhattan Trust Company, to fill the vacancy created by the death of John G. Moore of Moore & Schley. Directors, re-elected: H. W. Cannon, Grant B. Schley, A. B. Hepburn, James J. Hill, Oliver H. Payne, Edward Tuck.

SEVENTH NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, new: Gen. Samuel Thomas, J. P. McAnerney, George W. Adams, and Thomas M. Boyd. Directors, re-elected: Hugh Kelly, Eugene Bissell, Erskine Hewitt, John A. Sullivan, Lorenzo Semple, William H. Kimball, Fletcher S. Heath, Frank H. Ray, William P. Orr, the Hon. Josiah Quincy, Perry S. Heath.

The membership of the board was increased from twelve to fifteen. Gen. Thomas is widely known as a railroad man, and he and Edwin Gould have just reorganized the Produce Exchange Trust Company, of which Gen. Thomas is Vice President. Mr. Adams is Cashier of the bank, and Mr. McAnerney an assistant cashier. Gen. Thomas succeeds the late President of the bank, Col. John McAnerney, who is going abroad for a long vacation.

LIBERTY NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, new: F. L. Hine, in place of J. A. Garland, and H. P. Davison, cashier, an addition to the Directory. Directors, re-elected: Henry C. Tinker, Henry Graves, George F. Baker, E. F. C. Young, William Rukle, Dumont Clarke, John H. Starin, H. C. Fahnestock, Henry W. Maxwell, Charles G. Emery, E. C. Converse, Charles A. Moore, T. A. Gillespie. After the election of Directors, the new board met and unanimously re-elected Henry C. Tinker President. Mr. Maxwell and Mr. Davison were elected Vice Presidents, and the post of cashier, which Mr. Davison vacated, was filled by the promotion of Charles W. Riecks, who was assistant cashier.

SEABOARD NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, new: E. C. Bodman, in place of George Milmine, his partner in the firm of Milmine, Bodman & Co., who is retiring from active business. Directors, re-elected: Samuel G. Bayne, T. Wistar Brown, Lucius A. Cole, Gen. Francis V. Greene, Edward V. Loew, Stuart G. Nelson, Daniel O'Day, Franklin Quinby, William A. Ross, and Joseph Seep.

NATIONAL PARK BANK.—Directors, re-elected: Joseph T. Moore, Stuyvesant Fish, George S. Hart, Charles Sternbach, Charles Scribner, Edward C. Hoyt, Edward E. Poor, W. Rockhill Potts, August Belmont, Richard Delafield, Francis R. Appleton, John Jacob Astor, George S. Hickok, George Frederick Vietor, and Hermann Oelrichs.

President Edward E. Poor said that at the annual meeting of stockholders a majority of the stock was voted, either in person or by proxy. An amendment to the articles of association was unanimously adopted, making the Board of Directors more elastic by naming the minimum as nine and the maximum as seventeen, instead of a mandatory number of fifteen, as heretofore. No additional Director was nominated or elected, nor is an increase in the board in contemplation.

NATIONAL BROADWAY BANK.—Directors, re-elected: Francis A. Palmer, Hudson Hoagland, David S. Walton, George C. Clarke, Seth E. Thomas, William B. Putney, George J. Ferry, Eugene H. Britton, Adolph Rusch, Aaron Adams, Frank W. Stearns, Richard B. Kelly, and Anderson Fowler.

MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: Jesse W. Powers, Allen S. Apgar, Joseph Thompson, Alfred M. Hoyt, Phineas C. Baunsbury, James G. Powers, Alfred J. Taylor, Ludus H. Biglow, John H. Hanan, Timothy L. Woodruff, Lyman Brown, and Gilbert H. Johnson.

IMPORTERS AND TRADERS' NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: John Arbuckle, Henry C. Hulbert, E. H. Perkins, Jr., James R. Plum, Russell Sage, E. A. Price, E. C. Rice, E. Townsend, R. W. Townsend, E. Van Volkenburgh, H. R. Ickelheimer, and Anthony Wallach.

LINCOLN NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: Thomas L. James, William R. Grace, Noah Davis, Matthew C. D. Borden, H. Walter Webb, Charles C. Clarke, Marcellus Hartley, James D. Layng, Frederick W. Vanderbilt, E. V. W. Rossiter.

CENTRAL NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: William A. Wheelock, Simon Bernheimer, William L. Strong, James H. Durnham, Edwin Langdon, Woodbury Langdon, John A. McCall, Courtlandt D. Moss, Henry Tuck, Henry Sampson, Louis F. Dommerich.

TRADESMEN'S NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: Julius Kaufman, Thomas R. Kent, John A. Tweedy, David H. Bates, William H. Woolverton, David M. Look, Charles R. Flint, Jerome E. Bates, Augustus C. Bechstein, Frederick E. Pitkin, David Hunt, James W. Clawson.

NATIONAL BANK OF NORTH AMERICA.—Directors, re-elected: Henry H. Cook, Elihu Root, Salem H. Wales, Warner Van Norden, Henry F. Dimock, Mahlon D. Thatcher, Alvah Trowbridge, Daniel A. Heald, David H. Houghtaling, John H. Flagler, William F. Havemeyer.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: John A. Stewart, Elbert A. Brinckerhoff, Charles Stewart Smith, Gustav H. Schwab, Donald Mackay, Robert M. Gallaway, Charles D. Dickey, Henry W. Banks, George Sherman, Edward Holbrook, Orris K. Eldredge.

NATIONAL BANK OF THE REPUBLIC.—Directors, re-elected: George B. Carhart, Oliver S. Carter, Sumner R. Stone, D. H. McAlpin, Charles R. Flint, William Barbour, James A. Blair, Henry B. Stokes, Charles Parsons, Anson R. Flower.

MECHANICS' NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: Henry E. Nesmith, Alexander E. Orr, Charles H. Isham, Lowell Lincoln, Henry Hentz, Charles M. Pratt, Henry Talmadge, John Sinclair, William B. Boulton, and Horace E. Garth.

SECOND NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: John W. Aitken, William C. Brewster, Henry T. Carey, Daniel A. Davis, H. B. Dominick, John L. Riker, William Rockefeller, George Sherman, John Sloane, Isaac Stern, James Stillman, Isidor Straus, and H. A. C. Taylor.

GARFIELD NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: James H. Breslin, James McCutcheon, William H. Geishenen, Charles T. Wills, Robert Dunlap, Charles W. Morse, and Harry F. Morse.

IRVING NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: Charles F. Mattlage, John R. Waters, John W. Castree, Charles H. Fancher, W. H. B. Totten, Samuel B. Downes, Charles Reed, John W. Nix, Henry Kroger, Daniel P. Morse, and William H. Barnard. Officers: President—Charles H. Fancher; Vice President—Charles F. Mattlage; Second Vice President—John R. Waters.

MERCANTILE NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: John E. Borne, William J. Browning, Courtland E. Hastings, Yale Kneeland, Emanuel Lehman, Seth M. Milliken, James E. Nichols, Augustus G. Paine, George H. Sargent, Frederick B. Schenck, Eben B. Thomas, Isaac Wallach, James M. Wentz, and Richard H. Williams.

LEATHER MANUFACTURERS' NATIONAL BANK.—Directors, re-elected: William M. Kingsland, William Rockefeller, William H. Macy, Jr., John T. Willets, Nicholas F. Palmer, William C. Sturges, George W. Quintard, and Gates W. McGarrah.

STATE BANKS.

BANK OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.—Directors, re-elected: Henry Hentz, James B. Colgate, Richard A. Edwards, August Belmont, James Swann, Edward T. Bedford, Henry W. Poor, Robert Dunlap, Charles W. Morse.

THE BOWERY BANK OF NEW YORK.—Directors: John S. Foster, M. S. Paine, C. F. Neathing, C. H. Wilcox, W. F. Norton, E. J. Dunphy, E. C. Savidge, Charles Essig, and J. Stanley Foster.

FOOD PRODUCT ADULTERATIONS.

Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture Makes His Report.

F. J. H. Kracke, Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture for this division of the State, gave out yesterday a synopsis of the report he has made to Commissioner Welting at Albany, which will be transmitted to the Legislature on Jan. 15. He says, in part:

"The past year has been one of marked activity in the number of cases which have been successfully prosecuted. Two hundred and seventy violations of law were discovered and prosecuted, the largest number of these being for selling oleomargarine, the fines and penalties collected ranging from $25 to $700. During the year we were able to obtain competent evidence against several oleomargarine agents, and after considerable work succeeded in arresting them, one of them being sent to prison for four months. It had been found necessary to invoke the aid of the Supreme Court to obtain injunctions against two grocers, who, after being detected with oleomargarine, continued to sell it and were compelled to pay heavy penalties for their disregard of the law.

"An effort is being made to obtain National legislation to properly protect the full cream cheese brands of the State, which we have reason to believe are being counterfeited in other States."

Mr. Kracke said yesterday afternoon that the maple syrup traffic was at its height and there was a vast amount of the impure product on the market. Several large firms in this city are under suspicion of handling it, and Mr. Kracke has a number of detectives at work investigating their operations.

THOMAS MOORE'S HARP HERE.

Irish Poet's Instrument Now Owned by a New York Singer.

There has arrived in this city from Dublin a musical instrument with an interesting history. It is the harp of Thomas Moore, the Irish poet, and is now the property of Marie Glover-Miller, the concert singer, and soprano soloist of the Church of the Sacred Heart of Jesus. The instrument belonged to her grandfather, the late Prof. Glover of Dublin, to whom it was given by the Messrs. Power of that city, the firm that first published Moore's poems. Prof. Glover, shortly before his death, gave it to his daughter, Mrs. Daniel Glover-O'Sullivan, organist of Holy Trinity Church, in this city, and she in turn conveyed it to her daughter, Mrs. Miller.

When Thomas Moore was engaged by the Messrs. Power to supply fit words to the old Irish melodies he used this harp in the construction of the songs. His ballads "Go Where Glory Waits Thee," "The Last Rose of Summer," "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls," "The Meeting of the Waters," and others were first fitted to the national airs through the medium of the harp, and then turned over to Sir John Stevenson to be harmonized. When, in 1800, Moore found himself the social lion in London's fashionable drawing rooms he used this harp and his fine voice to strengthen that position.

The harp is of the style known as the Irish Dalway. It is about three feet in height and, weighs perhaps ten pounds. It has a gracefully curved front pillar and sweep of neck. Its compass comprises thirty notes, tuned diatonically in the key of G. On one side of the instrument is a silver plate bearing the inscription, "Moore's Harp." Presented to Professor Glover."

Pande Basin Gold Deposit.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Pande Basin Gold Placer Mining Company was held yesterday afternoon at 20 Broad Street. This was the first meeting since last November, when General Manager Benjamin P. Moore reported unfavorably upon the property in Alaska. Secretary H. C. Martin read the annual report of the Directors, in which they expressed the opinion that the basin was phenomenally rich in gold, but that the action of heavy rains and melting snows from surrounding glaciers had caused the vast deposit which a year before had existed upon the surface to disappear. The report announced as the future policy of the Directors the raising of additional capital with which shafts would be sunk to bed rock and the lower leads of the basin fully explored. The report also announced the resignation of Mr. Moore.

The Vanderbilt Contempt Case.

In Part I. of the City Court yesterday, Attorney C. C. Paulding withdrew his motion to open the default in the contempt case of Cornelius Vanderbilt. In October last Mr. Vanderbilt neglected to answer a summons to jury duty. He was fined $100 by Judge Fitzsimons. Mr. Vanderbilt afterward sent an excuse that was not considered adequate, and did not pay his fine. The excuse was returned to him, and he was notified that he was in contempt. This added $10 to the amount of the fine. Mr. Paulding afterward made a motion to open the contempt proceedings. Assistant Corporation Counsel Kiernan said yesterday that he would put the matter of the collection of the fine in the hands of the Sheriff.

Travelers' Anti-Trust League.

Owing to ill-health, Charles J. Spaulding of Buffalo will resign the position of President of the Commercial Travelers' and Hotel Keepers' Anti-Trust League. The position has been offered to Col. Moses C. Wetmore of St. Louis. Should he decline, the place will be offered to John Flannigan of Canandaigua.

CHANGES IN TAX LAWS

Controller Morgan Makes Suggestions in His Report.

WOULD FAVOR REAL ESTATE.

Wants Corporations to Help Pay the Expenses of the State—Favors Canal Improvements.

ALBANY, Jan. 9.—State Controller William J. Morgan, in his first annual report to the Legislature, makes some important recommendations for legislation and advocates radical changes in the State's attitude toward corporations and in the financial system of the State. He asks for:

The elimination of a direct tax on real and personal estate, because real estate bears an extremely unfair proportion of the burden, and the providing of money for support of the State Government by indirect tax, as is done in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

The making of a tax rate large enough to provide a sufficient sum to pay State expenses during the early part of each fiscal year, so as to avoid the necessity of borrowing money at high rates of interest.

The taxation of capital "invested, employed, or held" in this State, so as to prevent corporations from escaping a State tax by alleging that their capital is invested, but not employed.

The prevention of corporations from escaping direct taxation locally on personal property, through the payment of a small indirect tax to the State.

That every incorporated company, regardless of the business engaged in, except quasi-public corporations, such as transmission companies, now paying on gross earnings, shall be taxed on their authorized capital, the tax to increase as dividends increase.

The reduction of the organization tax in this State, so as to encourage companies to organize here instead of in other States.

The enactment of an amendment to the corporation laws that will be less onerous than the present one as to liability of Directors of corporations, without permitting wrecking or swindling.

Compelling religious and charitable institutions to pay the inheritance tax on bequests the same as widows and children.

The completion of the nine-foot improvement to the canal, the installing of hydraulic locks, and the introduction at once of electricity for propulsion, to be furnished by the State and sold for transmission at cost.

A thorough examination under law by some State department of each County Treasurer's accounts, so as to prevent the frequent defalcations now taking place.

Undoubtedly the most important part of Mr. Morgan's recommendations are those which he makes in regard to the laws of the State. He points out that while it is conceded that personal property is greater in value in the State than real property, yet real property stands seven times as much taxation as personal. He demonstrates, by citing an instance in which a piece of real estate showed a practical loss on the investment, and continues:

"But the question which presents itself in this connection is: Can the direct tax be abandoned and the necessary funds for support of government be provided? Pennsylvania and New Jersey support their State Governments without a direct tax on real estate. The resources of this State are vastly greater than those of either Pennsylvania or New Jersey. In my opinion the needed increased revenue from indirect sources could be obtained by a more equitable distribution of the burden without increasing, to any appreciable degree, the tax upon interests now taxed."

While Mr. Morgan shows by his figures that the receipts from corporations were greater by $104,000 than in the preceding year, he still believes that a great deal more money can be obtained from corporations without unduly increasing the burden by an intelligent revision of the laws. He says:

"A defect in our corporation tax laws is the provision allowing companies paying indirect taxes into the State Treasury to be exempt locally from all taxation upon personal property for State purposes. It is most unjust alike to the real estate owner and the rent payer. Large numbers of corporations doing a manufacturing business avoid the payment of just taxes under this provision.

"It is suggested that every company incorporated under the laws of New York, regardless of the business it is engaged in, except those having the use of public places—that is, quasi-public corporations such as gas, water, electric light, heat, power, transportation, transmission—and, generally speaking, such companies as are now taxed upon gross earnings, shall be taxed upon their authorized capital at a low rate, which rate should be increased as dividends increase. Every foreign corporation, no matter what its business, should be taxed for the privilege of doing business in this State upon the amount of capital employed or invested or held here at the same rate as domestic companies."

Mr. Morgan believes that the organization tax in this State of one-eighth of 1 per cent. is very much too high, as compared with New Jersey, which only charges one-fiftieth of 1 per cent., and he also believes that the liability of Directors is equally onerous, and often prevents wealthy men from becoming Directors of large corporations.

"This department does not favor a law as to the liability of Directors that would permit of wrecking or swindling," he says, "but it does urge the necessity for a law as liberal as it can be made consistent with a proper regard for the safety of creditors and stockholders. It is time that great corporations having their actual headquarters in this State and a nominal office elsewhere, doing nearly all of their business within our borders, should be brought within the jurisdiction of this State, not only as to matters of taxation, but in respect to further and equally important affairs. This can be accomplished by the adoption of corporation laws worthy of the greatest commercial State in the Union. It is a sad commentary upon our system that our tax list reflects little of the great wave of organization that has swept over the country during the past year, and to which this State contributed more capital than any other State in the Union."

Mr. Morgan devotes considerable space in his report to a discussion of the unsettled canal contracts, and makes some suggestions for the preservation and improvement of the canals. He says that while it may appear presumptuous on his part to offer any suggestions, still he has made commerce and navigation a study all his life and is familiar with the existing conditions. He took an active and prominent part in the movement for the abolition of canal tolls and the adoption of a liberal canal policy, and now has an absorbing interest in the success of canal commerce, which can be secured only through speedy and practical canal improvement. He shows how the commerce of the State is retrograding because of the failure to improve the waterway, and then goes on to say:

"The question should not be one of money, but of feasibility. This State has recently expended over $9,000,000 in improving the canals. On the Erie 160 miles have been improved, so as to afford nine feet of navigation, leaving 185 miles unimproved. Forty-two of the locks have been lengthened, so as to permit of the passage of two boats at once, leaving thirty to be lengthened, but included in these thirty are the "six locks" at Cohoes and the tier of five at Lockport. If the three locks at Newark and the four at Little Falls were lengthened, there would be a continuous line of long locks from Buffalo to Cohoes, with the exception of the tier at Lockport.

"My judgment, in view of these conditions, therefore, is that the wise policy for the State to pursue with reference to the canals is to complete the nine-foot improvement, introducing at the same time such other improvements in the lock gates as experience has demonstrated to be practical.

"But modern invention has placed within our reach other facilities for still greater economy. Electricity is used more economically and more successfully in mechanisms and in the propulsion of street cars and other vehicles than any other motive power. Why can it not also be applied to the canal? A motor with a capacity of 125 horse power on the stern of a boat would not take up anything like the space now occupied by the boiler and engine of a steamer, or the space occupied by the stables, where horses are used. From a pair of wires strung over the middle of the canal, as trolley wires are now strung over the middle of the street, a current of electricity could be conveyed from the wires to the motor on the boat by means of a carrier, similar to those now used in great department stores for the transmission of cash boxes, and a flexible wire leading to the motor on the deck.

"There can be no question but that the introduction of electric power to canal navigation is entirely feasible, and would be very economical. The State should furnish this power and charge for it at cost."

The following statement compiled by Mr. Morgan shows the transactions of the State Treasury during the year:

The balance in the Treasury of all the funds of the State on the 1st day of October, 1898, was	$8,973,804.45
The receipts from all sources during the fiscal year ended Sept. 30, 1899, were	25,827,188.93
Total receipts and balances	$29,810,941.37
The payments for all purposes during the year amounted to	25,306,126.63
Balance in the Treasury Sept. 30, 1899	$4,504,814.74

In concluding his recommendations Mr. Morgan refers to the frequency of defalcations by County Treasurers and says:

"In this connection, I beg leave to suggest that in my opinion a thorough examination of all the accounts of County Treasurers should be made by some State department at least once a year. Defalcations on the part of County Treasurers are of frequent occurrence, and the losses resulting therefrom are much greater than would be the expense of making the examinations."

W. K. VANDERBILT'S ABSENCE.

Will Have No Bearing on Plans for Developing the Central's System.

The sailing of W. K. Vanderbilt for Europe will have no bearing on the plans for developing the Central's system. These were advanced to various stages on Monday. Senator Depew and President Callaway are absent from New York, and no one at the Grand Central Station discussed freely the absence of the head of the Vanderbilt interests.

"It will be plenty of cable messages and sticking to the course decided on before Mr. Vanderbilt left," said one official. "The Vanderbilts don't know such a thing as distance. If there is a serious hitch that cable or correspondence won't overcome, why, some one will have to find Mr. Vanderbilt and learn what he wishes to be done. If you remember when Cornelius Vanderbilt was in Egypt something occurred which compelled E. V. W. Rossiter, the Treasurer of the company, to visit him there. Mr. Rossiter holds Mr. Vanderbilt's power of attorney, and can sign millions for him."

RESPONSIBILITY FOR HORSES.

Appellate Court Decision Regarding Damage by Unruly Animals.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, has rendered a decision of interest as affecting dealings in horses "warranted sound, kind, and gentle." Dr. F. J. Bruce of Brooklyn purchased from a Manhattan firm of horse dealers a horse so warranted. According to the doctor, the first time the horse was put in harness it engaged in some rapid-fire kicking, which made the buggy look as if it had been toyed with by a Kansas cyclone. Afterward, when hitched to a heavier wagon, the horse, it is alleged, repeated the performance. The doctor then concluded that the animal was not as it had been represented to be, and he sued for damages to himself and property, getting judgment.

The horse dealers, however, appealed to the Appellate Division, which has reversed the decision of the lower court and ordered a new trial. The opinion of the Appellate Division is that Dr. Bruce cannot recover for damages to the heavier wagon. When the horse misbehaved on the first occasion the doctor received notice that the animal was not gentle, and the court contends that he cannot hold the defendant liable for damage done afterward.

BRONZE STATUE FOR PARIS.

Horse for French's Washington the First Casting of Its Kind.

The largest portion of the bronze equestrian statue of Washington, by Daniel C. French, which is to be presented by the Daughters of the Revolution to the City of Paris, was successfully cast yesterday afternoon at the foundry of the Henry-Bonnard Bronze Company, in West Sixteenth Street. The operation was witnessed by the sculptor and a number of his friends. No ceremonies marked the event, except informal congratulations at the close for Eugene F. Ancaigne, who superintended the difficult work.

The casting made yesterday was the first of its kind ever attempted. It was the body of the horse complete, except for the tail. Heretofore the legs have always been cast separately and joined afterward to the body. When finished, the portion cast yesterday will weigh about 5,700 pounds. Five months had been spent in preparation, and the bronze had been melted three times to insure its purity. The actual work of casting consumed eleven minutes. The remaining pieces of the statue will be cast by the last of February, and the entire statue will be completed in April. It is to be unveiled in Paris July 3.

NATIONAL BANK STOCK TAXABLE

Decision in Favor of Assessors of Former City of Brooklyn.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, has sustained the decision of a referee in the proceeding brought by John G. Jenkins and others, as stockholders in the First National Bank of Brooklyn, for a writ of certiorari against the Board of Assessors of the former City of Brooklyn to review the assessment on the stock of the bank. It was contended that the State of New York had no right to assess the shares of stock in National banks except by power granted by Section 5,219, United States Revised Statutes, and that Section 24 of the tax law of 1896, under which bank shares are assessed, was unconstitutional, as it did not permit the stockholders in a National bank to deduct from the value of their shares a proportionate amount of the non-taxable securities owned by the bank itself.

It was claimed by the stockholders that unless this was done there was an inequality in the method of taxing stockholders of National banks as compared with other owners of "money capital in the hands of individual citizens," as provided by the Federal statutes.

The Special Term of the Supreme Court sustained the original assessment, and the stockholders carried the case to the Appellate Division.

The decision, in effect, sustains the State tax on the shares of the capital stock of National banks. It is very likely that the case will be taken to the Court of Appeals and to the Supreme Court of the United States.

SOCIETY FOR POLITICAL STUDY.

Annual Reception Disturbed by a False Alarm of Fire.

An alarm of fire threatened to break up the annual reception held by the Society for Political Study yesterday afternoon at the Tuxedo, Madison Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street. An elevator boy was the innocent cause of the trouble. He shouted the name of "Meyer" from the elevator door, meaning to call one of the officials of the building. The guests, who numbered over 300 women, translated the word into "fire." The women were on their feet in an instant, and started in a body toward the door.

The President of the society, Mrs. Fannie Humphreys Gaffney, caught their attention with vigorous pounding of the gavel, and the word, brought in the next instant, that there was no fire, served to calm the women.

The society is famous for its experience with fires. This is the third time the cry of fire has been raised at its annual reception. Two years ago, at the Grand Central Palace, the meeting was broken up by a fire that compelled the members and guests to leave the building.

The guests at the reception included many members of other clubs. Among the speakers were Mrs. William Tod Helmuth, President of the State Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. Donald McLean, Regent of the New York City Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution; Miss Adele Field, Mrs. William Birney, President of the Mothers' Club, and Mrs. Ober, one of the early Presidents of the society. Others who were present were Mrs. Lillie Devereux Blake, Mrs. Anna Dietz Diehl, Mrs. Edward Greeley, Mrs. Edward Cutler, Mrs. Albert E. Scott, and Mrs. J. C. C. Knoblauch.

A musical programme was carried out, after which luncheon was served.

Miss Gould Visits the Navy Yard.

Miss Helen Gould visited the Brooklyn Navy Yard and the Naval Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, at 167 Sands Street, Brooklyn, yesterday morning, accompanied by a large party of women. The visit was made in response to an invitation extended by Rear Admiral John W. Philip, commandant of the navy yard, to Miss Gould and other members of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association. The members of the party were attended on their tour of inspection by Rear Admiral and Mrs. Philip and Commander Clifford H. West.

WILL OF EUGENE G. CRUGER.

Former New Yorker Dying in France Ignored His Family in This City.

Few stranger wills have ever been recorded in this city than that of Eugene G. Cruger, which has been filed for probate in the Surrogate's office. It is written in French in a tremulous hand on a piece of paper about the size of a half note sheet, and, translated, is as follows:

I leave my name of Eugene G. Cruger and any property which I possess to Salomea Heitz. I make her my universal legatee—all my property.

EUGENE G. CRUGER.

The document, which is unwitnessed, is dated at Fontainebleau, France, May 29, 1896, and has been proved according to French law. In the petition filed with the will the value of the personal property is placed at $125,000, and the value of the real property is said to be unknown. The will is expected to occasion a fierce legal contest from the fact that it ignores Mr. Cruger's three minor children, Bertram, Violet D., and Frederick H. Cruger, as well as their mother, Mrs. Blanche E. Tams, of 136 East Twenty-second Street, who are now in the enjoyment of some of the property, which a relative yesterday said was worth in all about $300,000.

Mr. Cruger was a member of the old New York family whose name he bore, and was a son of a half brother of Col. S. V. R. Cruger. He was about thirty-five years old at the time of his death, April 4, 1898, and had lived for a number of years in France. He married Miss Blanche Spedden of New Orleans, but after the three children were born she divorced him and married J. Frederic Tams of the New York Yacht Club. He then married Mrs. Meta Kane Bell, a sister of S. Nicholson Kane, and she, too, divorced him. The full name of his legatee is Olga Salomea Heitz. She is a Russian whom Mr. Cruger met in France. She is not known by members of the family in this city.

The will and petition were filed by the law firm of Alexander & Colby. In the petition the claimant states that she lives at Fontainebleau, and that the sole surviving children of the testator are those named. The existence of this will has been known to the family for some time, although at first Mr. Cruger was supposed to have died intestate. Col. S. V. R. Cruger and Mrs. Tams obtained joint letters of administration on his property, and upon the death of the former, Mrs. Tams became sole administratrix. Bainbridge Colby said yesterday that the will had been received from Oliver E. Bodington, the Paris correspondent of his firm. Mrs. Tams's attorney is J. Langdon Ward.

FAYERWEATHER WILL CONTEST.

Three New Suits for Judgments Aggregating $5,000,000.

Lawyers Roger M. Sherman and William Blaikie filed in the United States Circuit Court yesterday afternoon papers in three suits which are the outcome of the Fayerweather will contest. They ask judgments aggregating $5,000,000. The defendants in the three suits are John Parsons, Thomas G. Ritch, J. Prentice Browning, Prescott Hall Butler, and Edward M. Grout of this city, Justus L. Bulkley of Connecticut, and Henry B. Vaughan of New Jersey. One of the suits was brought by John B. Reynolds, who says he is a "citizen of the State of Iowa, Vermont," and as executor of Lucy Fayerweather asks for $3,000,000. The other suits, which were brought by Mary W. Archer and her sister, Emma S. Fayerweather, ask judgment in the amount of $1,000,000 each. The bills of complaint allege conspiracy and the presentment to the Surrogate of a false testamentary paper, a codicil.

It is alleged that on Nov. 1, 1890, Daniel B. Fayerweather executed a codicil, drawn up by Prescott Hall Butler, which removed Ritch from his position as executor and trustee of the will, and that Vaughan pretended that it had been destroyed by him. Vaughan also claimed, it is alleged, to have been reinstated by the codicil dated four days later, which the plaintiffs allege was a fraudulent document. It is charged that on account of the conspiracy the rightful heirs have been unable to establish the validity of the genuine codicil and that all the defendants named became partners in the conspiracy and aided and abetted in the plot to defraud the plaintiffs.

Daniel B. Fayerweather died Nov. 15, 1890, leaving an estate valued at $6,000,000. Reynolds says he is the sole executor of the last will and codicil of Lucy Fayerweather, widow of Daniel B. Fayerweather.

Merchants' Association Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Merchants' Association was held yesterday. The report of President King was discussed and approval expressed of the office staff's work. The following Directors were re-elected: John C. Juhring, Charles H. Webb, Cornelius H. Hackett, Meyer Jonasson, and Frank Squier. The vacancy caused by the death of John W. Ambrose was filled by the election of Adolphe Openhym.

COTTON.—The cotton market showed the results of conflicting opinions in a more or less general hesitation. Locally there was a sharp upturn at the opening, but this was succeeded by a weaker feeling. Speculation showed evidences of contraction and business done for the outside public ran almost exclusively to the further liquidation of old long stuff. The market opened firm at an advance of 6 to 8 points, and at the highest level showed a net rise of 9 to 10 points. Considering the fact that yesterday's loss reached a matter of 10 to 17 points, to-day's improvement was unsatisfactory to friends of the staple, and selling became more or less general despite the optimistic tone of cables, which reported Liverpool firmer on covering and buying for the account of European spinners, and the situation in South Africa less grave. After the closing English cables had been thoroughly digested by the local continent, our market began to give way slowly. Shorts were more reliant and buying on investment account was exceptionally light. Reliable information to the effect that Southern markets were holding their own with little difficulty, that receipts were light

BOSTON BANK ELECTIONS.

Changes Made in the Personnel of the Massachusetts National.

BOSTON, Jan. 9.—The stockholders of nearly all of the National banks in this city voted to-day for Directors for the coming year. Very few changes were made. The dropping off of the Globe and Broadway Banks reduces the capital of the twenty-seven banks in the city to [illegible]000,000. Two years ago it was about $[illegible],000.

Among the more important meetings was that of the Massachusetts National Bank. William A. French retires as President, and is succeeded by John W. Weeks, formerly a Director. Frederick H. Curtiss, formerly cashier of the Broadway National Bank, succeeds Charles W. Perkins, who becomes a Director. Frank Jones is another new member of the Board of Directors. Negotiations have been entered into looking to the consolidation of the Massachusetts National with at least one of the smaller banks, and it may become a fact within a month.

MR. SAGE SELLS STANDARD STOCK

He Says the Transaction Will Not Affect the Gas War.

The Wall Street section was considerably stirred up yesterday over the fact that Russell Sage sold a block of his Standard Gaslight Company stock. Mr. Sage himself made this admission, and while he expressed the opinion that the sale would not affect the gas war, and denied that the stock had been sold to Rockefeller interests, the transaction was generally taken as an indication that the ending of the gas war had been brought a step nearer.

The recent transaction by which the New York Gas and Electric Light, Heat and Power Company became practically merged with the Consolidated Gas Company has been largely accepted as meaning an approaching settlement of the gas war, as Anthony N. Brady, who is President of the Power Company, is also dominant in the New Amsterdam Gas Company, one of the three parties to the contest. The acquisition by Consolidated Gas people of the control of the third contestant—the Standard Gaslight—would, of course, mean a cessation of hostilities if the arrangement with the New Amsterdam is assured, and is to be as satisfactory to Consolidated interests as many have cause to believe.

Mr. Sage, however, said yesterday that he had been negotiating with one of the Rockefellers who wanted his Standard stock some time ago, and that he did not sell because he was not offered enough for it. Now, he said, he had been offered a higher price for a portion of it than the Rockefeller interests had been willing to pay. He said that he did not really know for whom the broker who bought the stock acted, and it did not concern the public anyway.

"Will this do anything toward ending the gas war, Mr. Sage?" he was asked.

"No," said he, "it won't. There is nothing new in the gas situation. It is all a piece of foolishness, but I don't know how long it will last. So far as I know, I have not sold the stock to any of the Rockefeller Directors. I have some of the stock left, and will sell it if I get a good price for it."

None of the other Directors of the Standard has sold any of his stock so far as is known, and it is said that Mr. Sage's sale did not carry with it the control of the stock.

United Verde Copper Mine Sold.

The United Verde Copper Mine, together with the works and railroad owned by the United Verde Copper Company, were sold at public auction yesterday by R. V. Harnett & Co. The property is in Arizona and has recently been in litigation. Senator William H. Clark of Montana is said to own a large part of the stock of the company. The property was sold for $500,000 to James A. MacDonald, who is said to have represented the Reorganization Committee of the company.

the least noticeable of which was that of the common stock of "Big Four," which fell off nearly three points, though only the day previous a dividend of 1½ per cent. had been declared. In a somewhat similar manner Northern Pacific declined, though during the day a published statement of the earnings of the road showed an increase for the month of December of within a few dollars of $50,000.

LOUISVILLE AND NASHVILLE.

As had been generally forecasted, the Directors of the Louisville and Nashville yesterday declared a semi-annual dividend of 2½ per cent., which is practically at the same rate as that declared at the last dividend meeting, when 1½ per cent. and an extra ½ were declared.

At the conclusion of the meeting the semi-annual statement of the earnings and expenses of the road for the half year ended Dec. 31, 1899, was put out. This showed estimated net earnings of $4,888,100, as compared with actual net earnings for the same period last year of $4,170,000, an increase of $718,000. After payment of dividends, including that declared yesterday, there is left a surplus of $990,100, as compared with $659,500 a year ago.

Officers of the road speak hopefully of the future.

NOT A DIVIDEND MEETING.

Some disappointment was felt yesterday because no dividend action was taken at the meeting of the Union Pacific Directors, held in the afternoon. As a matter of fact, however, the meeting was not a dividend meeting, but only a regular monthly meeting, and no decision in respect to a dividend on the common stock, either pro or con, will be taken for several months. The belief, however, now is that the common stock will not come in for a dividend for some time.

LOCAL TRACTION STOCKS.

All the local traction stocks declined yesterday, though there was really no new news in respect to any of them. Third Avenue suffered the most, falling to 126, a net loss of 5 points, on sales of 1,100 shares. Manhattan's loss was one-half point, Metropolitan's 2¼, and Brooklyn Rapid Transit's, 1½.

DISAPPOINTING STATEMENT.

Great Northern's decline yesterday on trading of barely 1,000 shares was due to the somewhat disappointing showing made by the company in December, when earnings decreased something like $20,000, as compared with a year ago.

TALKING OF COMPETITION.

The weakness of the Tobacco stocks yesterday was due to the report that a new company with improved patents for the manufacture of cigars and cigarettes might enter the field as a competitor. No definite information could be gotten on the subject.

TIN PLATE'S AFFAIRS.

It was reported in the Street yesterday that the annual meeting of the American Tin Plate Company would be held in the afternoon, but the report was incorrect. The meeting will not be held until Jan. 16. In this connection the Street again hears that all the interests in the company are now harmonious.

GAS STOCK GOES UP.

Consolidated Gas advanced a point yesterday on sales aggregating less than 400 shares. The belief that the situation was so shaping itself that, whether or not the gas war was continued, the results of the operations of the company would be more satisfactory financially, contributed to the strength of the stock.

HOME INSURANCE COMPANY.

The ninety-third semi-annual statement of the Home Insurance Company of New York, just issued, shows a gratifying condition of affairs. The assets of the company, besides cash in banks and in the hands of agents, real estate, loans on stocks and bonds, &c., include a considerable holding of bonds and stocks whose security is unquestioned, being classed among the strong, "gilt-edged" securities. The surplus of the company as regards policyholders amounts to $7,631,936.

A semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent. has been declared, payable on demand.

SALE OF PITTSBURG AND GULF.

Mr. Max Pam, counsel for the Reorganization Committee of the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf, announced, through a Wall Street bulletin yesterday, that the sale of the road will be ordered by the court to be held some time in February. The arrangements for organizing the new company and issuing the new securities provided for in the plan of reorganization are practically complete, and the new company will be ready to begin operation very soon after the sale of the road is ratified. With regard to the report that there might be a combination between the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf and the Northern connecting roads which have recently gone into the hands of receivers, Mr. Pam says that no such plan is now in contemplation. He adds that the arrangements for the formation of a reorganization committee for these roads will be begun as soon as possible.

MANHATTAN OFFICIALS SILENT.

Officials of the Manhattan Railway Company would not discuss very freely yesterday the action of the State Railroad Commissioners in ordering the road to extend its system to Bedford Park and West Farms. They have not yet decided whether they will obey the mandate or take the alternative of forfeiting a franchise.

General Manager Alfred Skitt said yesterday: "We haven't got up to it yet." The company had not attacked the question so far, he declared, and he was not able to say what it would do about it.

Russell Sage was equally non-committal. "What we will do is a matter for future consideration," said he. "I have not made up my mind yet what I approve of doing."

The fact was made public some time ago that George J. Gould had told Commissioner Cole that he intended to build a road as far as Bedford Park in about a year. Mr. Cole made this statement in an after-dinner speech. The company has never put itself publicly on record as making this promise, however.

NEWS OF THE EXCHANGES.

The Consolidated Exchange enjoyed considerable activity yesterday, interest centring largely in the granger stocks, and, generally speaking, in securities which are traded in at London. They made moderate declines. The Produce Exchange market opened face to face with a decline of nearly a cent a bushel in Liverpool. In spite of that fact, wheat proved firm here, and closed strong after only moderate purchases for export. Corn was also strong, and oats were steady, with a fairly good tone to the market.

Coffee scored a net advance of from 10 to 20 points on various deliveries yesterday, in an active market. Cotton was dull throughout the day, but the market was steady.

Money, 4½@5 per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short bills, 4@4⅛ per cent., and for three months' bills 4⅛@4¼ per cent.

Spanish 4s closed at 65⅞.

The sum of £119,000 in gold was taken into the Bank of England to-day. Of this amount £50,000 was transferred to the Indian currency account. Gold premiums—Buenos Ayres, 128.60; Madrid, 28.42; Lisbon, 44; Rome, 7.27½.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 9.—Prices opened firm, in sympathy with the strength in London, on more favorable South African news. Subsequently business was quieter, and Kafirs steadily slid back. Toward the close prices hardened, owing to easy contangos in London, and there was a general recovery, except in Kafirs. The buoyancy of rentes was a special feature of the good investment demand. Three per cent. rentes, 99f. 35c. for the account. Exchange on London, 25f. 22½c. for checks. Spanish 4s, 66.62½.

BERLIN, Jan. 9.—Prices opened hesitatingly on the Boerse to-day, but later became firmer as a result of the speech from the throne. Industrials hardened on the announcement of the extension of State railways. International securities, Americans, and Canadian Pacifics advanced. Exchange on London, 20 marks 51 pfennigs for checks. Private rate of discount, 4⅝ per cent.

The weekly statement of the Imperial Bank of Germany shows the following changes: Cash in hand increased 29,860,000 marks, Treasury notes increased 4,320,000 marks, other securities decreased 120,060,000 marks, notes in circulation decreased 93,480,000 marks.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 9.—Business on the Boerse to-day was fairly active, being encouraged by better money and more satisfactory reports from other Boerses. Spanish 4s were especially firm. American securities improved, and local shares were actively bought.

BANKS' BROKERS EXEMPT.

Not Required to Pay the Special Tax on Stock Brokers.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—Commissioner Wilson of the Internal Revenue Bureau has directed that where an officer of a bank holds a membership in a Stock Exchange as agent for his bank, and the business done by him on the Stock Board is the bank's business, neither he nor his bank is required to pay special tax therefor as a broker, the bank being exempt by the provision of the statute defining brokers.

To Investigate Tea Standards.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9.—Assistant Secretary Spaulding to-day designated Special Treasury Agents Cross of New York, Smith of Boston, and Crowley of Chicago to investigate the allegations of the Tea Association of New York that the standards selected and methods pursued by the present Board of Government tea experts result in discriminations against low-grade but pure and wholesome teas. This committee probably will meet in New York or Boston within the next few days for the purpose of hearing evidence bearing upon the question.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Reflecting the conditions prevailing in the Stock Exchange market, trading in the outside market yesterday was light and prices in some quarters showed considerable weakness. In a few issues trading was active to the extent of more than a thousand shares, and in some of these closing prices showed advances over those of the previous day, but most of the list receded from Monday's final figures. Here and there disposition to pick up stock was shown, but more often stocks were offered for sale with relatively little demand. In a number of issues which often supply a large part of the day's business transactions were extremely light, and although there was a fair amount of quiet trading, the day was one of the dullest that the curb has had recently. Most of the electric stocks were somewhat weak and the demand for them was much less than has appeared during the past two weeks. Among the industrials a few showed notable strength, but in this section, as well as the others, few net gains of any consequence resulted from the day's trading.

AMALGAMATED COPPER, again one of the most active stocks, opened at a fractional advance over the previous day's close, and on the early transactions got as high as 85½. This figure was not long maintained, however, and on very few sales the stock dropped back more than a point. Last sales for the day were made at 84, and the closing bid was 84⅛, showing a net loss of seven-eighths of a point. This was the only one of the copper stocks that was at all active.

ELECTRIC AXLE was somewhat weak on selling of the stock in anticipation of the second payment of $5, which becomes due next month. Friends of the company say that as the requirements of the Electric Axle Company are so large that profitable employment will quickly be found for the new capital that will be placed at its disposal on the payment of the second instalment, there seems no good reason for the decline which has occurred in the stock during the past few days. The company is said to have large orders, which, with its present facilities, it is impossible to fill with sufficient rapidity, and that the interests of the company require an increase in the amount of its available capital. Sales were made yesterday at 47⅛, and the stock closed at 47¾ bid, showing a net loss of a quarter of a point.

CAST IRON PIPE was active at advancing figures. Trading in the stock thus far has been quiet and very few open sales have occurred in either the common or preferred stock. The latter was in particularly good demand and sold to the extent of about 1,000 shares from 40 up to 42, closing at 42. On the previous day sales of small lots of the stock were made at 35. For the common stock 5 was bid. At these prices Cast Iron Pipe is selling for less than half of the subscription price, notwithstanding the fact that the preferred stock is already paying dividends at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. No particular reason appeared for the largely increased demand for these issues.

GENERAL CARRIAGE was traded in only to a small extent. It closed at 63¾ bid, a net decline of a quarter of a point. It was reported during the day that the company had placed an order for a number of vehicles with which it was intended to inaugurate the company's proposed automobile service in this city. Apparently little attention was given to the report, and it had practically no effect on the stock.

HAVANA COMMERCIAL common sold in odd lots as high as 19½, and closed at 19 bid, a net gain of 1 point. Sales of the preferred stock were made at about 60, but this issue closed unchanged at 59½ bid.

FLEMINGTON COAL AND COKE was inactive, but report was had that at a meeting of the Directors of the company to be held on Jan. 15, the question of the first dividend on the stock would be discussed.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 9.—The market was dull to-day. There was some manipulation of Sugar and some profit-taking in the Granger group. The copper shares ignored the gain shown by the London opening prices. Amalgamated alone showed strength, rising on two or three sales to 85½. Arcadian was somewhat firmer. Montana fell below 280. United States Oil at 22, Bell Telephone 10 off at 330, Boston Elevated under 96, and Erie Telephone close to 105, were noticeably soft spots.

At the Clearing House 6 per cent. was still the quoted rate between banks and New York funds sold at from 17 to 10 cents' discount. Call money rules from 5½ per cent. on the best names up to 7 per cent. Time money ranges from 5½ to 6 per cent., with the latter figure the more general quotation. The choicest collateral six months' loans pass at 5½ per cent., and in some cases as low as 5 per cent. Year money is obtainable at 5 per cent.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 9.—Local prices to-day yielded readily, although the recessions generally were small fractions, the only important exceptions being United Gas, 151 to 148½, and Electric Storage Battery, 75 to 72. Cambria Steel went off ⅝, to 21½; Asphalt, ½, to 12⅝; Union Traction, ⅝, to 38⅛; Consolidated Traction of Pittsburg, ¾, to 27½. Trading was limited in volume, and such weakness as was developed came more from absence of support than from bear aggressiveness. The close was weak at the lowest.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Arnold Residence on Upper Fifth Avenue Sold—Another Deal on Westchester Avenue—Auction Sales.

The residence of the late Richard Arnold, at the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Eighty-third Street, a four-story stone dwelling, on a plot 50.2 by 100, which was purchased by Daniel E. Seybel last Spring, has been resold by him, through Brokers Douglas Robinson & Co., at a reported price of about $300,000. Mr. Seybel declined to say to whom the property had been sold or to discuss the details of the transaction. It is known, however, that the buyer will make extensive alterations to the house.

H. H. Cammann & Co. have sold for the Park estate to W. C. Strange, for $26,000, the five-story brownstone-front dwelling 22 West Sixteenth Street, 25 by 100; also, for W. C. Strange, for $90,000, the two dwellings 40 and 42 West Twentieth Street, on a plot 57 by 100.

Mark Rafalsky, Secretary of the Imperial Realty Company, authorized yesterday a denial of published reports that the nine-story Schuyler apartment house, 59 and 61 West Forty-fifth Street, had been sold.

John De Hart has sold for Henry D. Tiffany a plot of about seven lots on the north side of Westchester Avenue, between Simpson and Fox Streets, fronting 191 feet on the avenue, 35 feet on Simpson Street and 25 feet on Fox Street.

Jacob Polstein has bought the old building 180 Eldridge Street, 22 by 90.

It is reported that Thomas O'Gara has sold the two old buildings 229 and 231 West Thirty-fifth Street, on a plot 40 by 100.

The Bronx Realty Company has placed Reed Carradine in charge of its branch office at One Hundred and Forty-eighth Street and Third Avenue.

Isaac Levingson was the broker in the recently reported sale of four lots on the south side of One Hundredth Street and three abutting lots on the north side of Ninety-ninth Street, just east of Third Avenue.

THE BOARD WILL CONSIDER IT

Citizens Ask that the Work Be Begun Simultaneously on the Upper and Lower Sections.

The Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners held yesterday its final meeting prior to the opening of bids next Monday at noon for the construction and operation of the underground railroad. In the executive session of the commission there was discussion of the prospects for the bidding, and, while no names were mentioned, it was said that it was assured that there would be several bids presented.

The first step was taken in the direction of broadening the rapid transit scheme, so as to embrace the Borough of Brooklyn and incidentally that of Queens. This matter was brought up by the offering of the following resolution by Controller Coler:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this board that immediately after the execution of the contract for constructing the underground road according to the plans which have been approved by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court an extension thereof should be considered from the southern terminus as at present located southward under Broadway and Whitehall Street to the southerly end of Manhattan Island, and that construction of a tunnel or tunnels should also be considered under the waters of the East River connecting said last-mentioned point with South Brooklyn either at the end of Hamilton Avenue or such other point as may be found to be most advantageous.

"My object in offering this resolution," said the Controller, in addressing his fellow-Commissioners, "is not to delay in any way the construction of the underground road as at present planned. My belief is that such a declaration of the policy of this board must have an extremely beneficial effect upon the competitive bidding to be expected for the franchise. If this main line to be constructed under the backbone of Manhattan Island is recognized as a great artery of travel destined to receive not only the vast traffic of Harlem and the Bronx, but also the equally large travel from that portion of Brooklyn lying south of Atlantic Avenue, the tides of which are in opposite directions, it must also be recognized by intending bidders that a franchise is offered for sale twice as valuable as originally contemplated, and perhaps the most valuable that has ever been offered by any municipality.

"It is my belief that as soon as this road is built, with the extension under Lower Broadway and with tunnel connection to South Brooklyn, the city should as soon as possible provide for the radiating connections in the Borough of the Bronx and for similar facilities throughout South Brooklyn. These two developments should, if possible, be undertaken simultaneously."

The Controller's resolution was referred to the counsel of the commission, Edward M. Shepard and Albert B. Boardman, for an opinion as to the power of the commission thus to broaden the scope of its work. It is said that both have expressed the opinion informally that the commission has authority to include all parts of the greater city in its rapid transit system, and that all the members of the commission are in favor of the plan outlined by Controller Coler.

Prior to the executive session there was a public hearing before the Commissioners, at which there was a free discussion of the plan already prepared and of the Controller's scheme for broadening it to an inter-borough system. The rooms of the commission were thronged with representatives of taxpayers' organizations of Brooklyn and the northern part of Manhattan Island.

The Manufacturers' Association of New York, which is composed of Brooklyn taxpayers, was represented by Ludwig Nissen, William McCarroll, and Charles N. Chadwick, all of whom argued in favor of Controller Coler's tunnel plan. Mr. Chadwick declared they did not appear as representatives of Brooklyn interests alone, but rather in the interests of the entire city.

One of the principal addresses was made by ex-Senator Charles L. Guy, who appeared for the W. L. Marcy Tammany Association.

"With all due regard," he said, "for the localities recently consolidated with our city, we insist that the time has come for the rights of Manhattan and the Bronx to be recognized, and for the other boroughs to exercise a little patience in regard to further public improvements.

"Touching the beginning of work simultaneously upon the upper and lower sections of the town, it has been suggested that there are practical difficulties in the way of carrying out this suggestion, and that the upper sections, if begun now, would be completed earlier than the lower section, thus involving a suspension of work on the upper sections at a later period. That may be true, but it is not a sufficient objection to offset the advantages of the plan we suggest.

"The effect of commencing work at once upon the upper and lower sections of the tunnel will be of inestimable advantage, not only to the property owners immediately interested, but to the entire city. If the work is commenced merely upon the lower section, it will not at present affect values of property in the upper part of our city. It will involve possibly the spending of three or four years' time without apparent results, and with the possibility of new obstacles and new debt limit difficulties arising in connection with the building of the upper sections.

"But once let work upon one of the upper sections begin, and it will carry hope to the heart of every up-town property owner and resident, will encourage improvements in the upper parts of the city, and will increase real estate values to such an extent that it is no exaggeration to say that before the tunnel is completed the increased tax receipts in Manhattan and the Bronx resulting from increased valuations will be sufficient to pay the interest annually on the total cost of the entire rapid transit system."

Others who spoke on similar lines were Walter Stabler, representing the West End Association and the Real Estate Board of Brokers; Newell Martin, for the Washington Heights Taxpayers' Association; James L. Wells, President of the North Side Board of Trade; Francis J. Worcester, representing the Liberal Republican Club of Washington Heights; William A. Brown, President of the Harlem Chamber of Commerce; H. H. Brown, for the King's Bridge Improvement Association; Alderman H. J. Rottman, representing the German-American Democratic Club; ex-Assemblyman W. W. Niles, Jr., for the Taxpayers' Alliance of the Bronx; Christian Frinks, representing the Washington Heights Progressive Association; Gen. Michael Kerwin, for the Sterling Republican Club, and Richard Alexander, for the Marble Hill Taxpayers' Association.

All of these speakers dwelt on the difficulties of transportation to the northern part of Manhattan Island. Mr. Frinks declared that in the matter of time Inwood was about as far from the City Hall as Philadelphia. Gen. Kerwin said that parts of Manhattan Island were almost in the same condition as when inhabited by the Indians, owing to lack of transportation facilities. He was applauded when he declared that he was in favor of developing Long Island and the Philippines, but that it was time that something was done for Manhattan Island.

After all the speakers had been heard President Orr briefly addressed the assemblage. He said the commission desired to do everything in its power to afford the benefits of rapid transit as soon and to as many people as possible. Its efforts, he said, had been retarded by the question of the debt limit and many other difficulties, and not until next Monday, when it would meet to open the bids for the building of the tunnel road, would its members be certain that they could proceed at all with the work.

Washington Heights Residents Meet.

The residents of Washington Heights turned out in full force last evening to attend a mass meeting in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall on One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street for the purpose of urging the beginning of the work on the tunnel simultaneously on the upper and lower sections. Among the speakers of the evening were Corporation Counsel Whalen, Julius M. Mayer, and Newell Martin. Resolutions were adopted thanking the Mayor, Corporation Counsel, and the Rapid Transit Commissioners for the work they had done.

SUPT. McCULLAGH'S CHARGES.

Evidence to be Submitted to the United States Grand Jury.

The December Grand Jury of the United States Circuit Court, before adjourning yesterday, made the following report to Judge Thomas regarding the statement of Superintendent McCullagh of the Bureau of Elections that many fraudulent naturalization certificates had been issued:

"The United States Grand Jury desires to inform the Court that they have listened to a statement by Mr. McCullagh of the Election Bureau in regard to false naturalization. Mr. McCullagh is obtaining evidence in many of these cases, and expects to be able to submit such evidence to the next Grand Jury. The present Grand Jury considers this matter one of great importance, and desires that the Court will call the attention of the next Grand Jury to the matter as soon as Mr. McCullagh is ready with his evidence."

LEGAL NOTES.

LEVY UPON PLEDGED STOCK OF FOREIGN CORPORATION.—Under a warrant of attachment in a suit brought by Louis M. Simpson and another to recover $2,000 from the Jersey City Contracting Company, a foreign corporation, for professional services, a levy was attempted on 3,220 shares of stock of the New Jersey and Pennsylvania Telephone Company, which stock was pledged to the Produce Exchange Trust Company as security for a loan of $2,350. The Sheriff made the levy by serving a certified copy of the warrant, with the proper notice, upon the Secretary of the trust company, and a certificate of the trust company was given by it to the Sheriff under Section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure. An order vacating the levy has been reversed by the First Appellate Division, which held, by Justice Ingraham, that the defendant had subjected the stock to the laws of this State by bringing it here and depositing it with a resident of this State, and the trust company having the evidences of its ownership, by a transfer of such indicia of title to the Sheriff, after payment of the amount loaned for which the stock was held as security, a good title to the stock would be transferred to a purchaser from the Sheriff, under an execution to be issued on a judgment in the action, if one should be obtained. The Court holds further that even if the question were doubtful, it should not be determined upon this motion. "Where, as here," Justice Ingraham said, "all that has been done would be to serve a notice upon a person claimed to be in possession of the property of the defendant, and where a question is presented as to whether or not the Sheriff is entitled to levy upon that property, the effect of that notice can be much better determined upon proceedings to enforce the levy than to set it aside." Presiding Justice Van Brunt concurred, on the ground that no valid levy was or could be made upon this stock, and therefore no motion was necessary to be made to set aside a levy which never existed.

QUESTION OF FRAUDULENT INTENT.—In April, 1883, Horace Craighead and his father, Robert Craighead, made an agreement to pay 5 per cent. of the par value of stock in a manufacturing company for five years. In August, 1892, a claim was made against Horace Craighead individually, and as executor of his father's estate, for over $11,000 under this agreement, which claim he disputed, and was advised by counsel it was invalid. In June, 1893, an action begun by Frederick E. Guy on that claim resulted, in October, 1895, in a judgment for the plaintiff against Craighead for over $17,000. Horace Craighead inherited a considerable estate from his father, who died in December, 1891. In March, 1893, he conveyed to his wife, Frances, in consideration of $1, lands in the Twenty-fourth Ward of this city, subject to a mortgage to the Mutual Life Insurance Company for $35,000. Mr. Guy brought an action to set aside this deed, as being fraudulent and void as to creditors. A judgment given on the first trial in 1897, dismissing the plaintiff's complaint, was reversed on appeal, the Court holding that, though a conveyance made by a husband to his wife as a suitable provision for her, could not be set aside merely because it had no consideration, yet the evidence showed that Mr. Craighead was scheming to rid himself of the title to his property, and the conveyance of these lots and other property was one step in carrying out that scheme. A judgment for the defendant on the second trial has now been affirmed by the First Appellate Division, in an opinion by Justice Ingraham. The Court holds that the additional evidence offered upon the second trial, explaining, as it did, in detail the transactions entered into after the conveyance in question, by which the grantor became heavily involved, and the circumstances surrounding the transfer of this property, was at least sufficient to present a question of fact as to the intent with which the grantor made these conveyances.

DEFENSE OF JUSTIFICATION IN LIBEL SUIT.—The Press Publishing Company was sued by the Rev. James W. Putnam for damages for alleged libel contained in articles published in reference to a controversy between Mr. Putnam and the Rev. Daniel C. Potter, who was his co-pastor of the church in this city known as the "Baptist Tabernacle." While occupying that position Mr. Putnam made charges of the most serious character against Mr. Potter, and the publication related to these charges and to the proceedings taken to investigate them. The complaint alleged ten separate causes of action, each consisting of separate publications. The defendant conceded that the articles were libelous per se, and the defense was a justification, the articles being claimed to be substantially true. The First Appellate Division recently reversed judgment entered upon the verdict of a jury in favor of the plaintiff, upon the ground that evidence offered to show the truth of the articles was improperly excluded. The main question of fact was whether charges conceded to have been made by Mr. Putnam against Mr. Potter were false, and were known by him to be false when he made them. It was not disputed that a publication charging a clergyman with having made false charges against a fellow clergyman involving his moral character would be a libel per se. The Appellate Division holds that it would be a good defense to an action based upon such a libel to allege and prove that the publication complained of was true, and the exclusion of evidence to establish this defense of justification, to prove that the charge made by Mr. Putnam was false as a fact, was held to have been a substantial error necessitating a reversal of the judgment.

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.—Gov. Roosevelt sent to the Senate a long list of appointments, including a new Tax Commissioner and a manager of the Elmira Reformatory. Four school bills were introduced, including Controller Coler's measure for transferring funds and Senator Elsberg's bill, which provides for a complete reorganization of the educational department of the city. In the Assembly a resolution was adopted fixing the hours of the sessions at 8:30 o'clock Monday evenings and 11 A. M. on other days, except on Friday, when the Assembly is to meet at 10 o'clock. A protest was read from Edward B. Sabin of Syracuse, contesting the seat of Abraham D. Hyman of Onondaga. —Page 8.

CONGRESS.—Yesterday's session of the Senate was devoted to the delivery of eulogies commemorative of the late Vice President, Garret A. Hobart. Senators Depew, Sewell, and Kean were among the speakers. A number of prominent shipping men yesterday urged the passage of the Subsidy Shipping bill. The delay in reorganizing the Senate is said to be due to a difference among Senators as to the Secretaryship. Some opposition is being developed in Congress to the granting of free trade to Puerto Rico. A sub-committee has been named in the House to ascertain and report upon the legal status of the new possessions.—Page 5.

FOREIGN.—The British public awaits Gen. White's casualty report with apprehension. It is feared that his losses in the attack on Ladysmith were heavy. Lord Roberts and Gen. Kitchener have arrived at Cape Town. It is thought Gen. Lord Methuen, in command at the Modder River, will be relieved. More than 1,000 stretcher bearers have left Durban to join Gen. Buller. The American flour seized by the British has been released. Lord Salisbury's reply to the American representations was handed to Ambassador Choate yesterday. It is said to assert the right to seize foodstuffs only when intended for the enemy. The new Hamburg-American liner Deutschland was successfully launched in the presence of the Kaiser at the Vulcan dockyard, at Stettin, yesterday. Lady Alice Montagu, daughter of the Duchess of Manchester, died of consumption yesterday in Switzerland. The Queen Regent of Spain has invested the Crown Prince of Germany with the insignia of the Golden Fleece. Influenza is raging in England. Detectives sailed from Liverpool yesterday with Michael J. Sampson, who is charged with embezzlement in Chicago. Gales are blowing along the French coast. Several small vessels and their crews have been lost. Colombian rebels have again been defeated at Cerritos and Bucaramanga.—Pages 1, 3, 4, and 7.

Hanna Selects German Press Agent.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—It is the purpose of Senator Hanna and the officials of the National Republican Committee having the matter in charge to ask Joseph Brucker, the editor of The Chicago Staats Zeitung, to assume direction of the German literary bureau of the committee during the coming Presidential campaign. In the last campaign the counsel of Mr. Brucker was frequently sought by the committee which had charge of the dissemination of campaign literature.

ROCKEFELLER ON TRUSTS

Standard Oil President Gives Expression to His Views.

BELIEVES IN CONTROL BY LAW

He Asserts that Combinations Are Necessary and Points Out Their Dangers and Advantages.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Industrial Commission to-day received from John D. Rockefeller, President of the Standard Oil Company, replies to questions sent him by the commission.

Mr. Rockefeller says that the Standard Oil Company was changed first from a partnership into a corporation with $1,000,000 capital, and later into a still more heavily capitalized corporation because the business grew and that the object was always the same, "to extend our business by furnishing the best and cheapest products."

Regarding the receipt of rebates, he says that prior to 1880 "each shipper made the best bargain he could; but whether he was doing better than his competitor was only a matter of conjecture. Much depended upon whether the shipper had the advantage of competition of carriers. The Standard, for special services to the railroads, obtained contracts for special allowances on freights. These never exceeded, to the best of my present recollection, 10 per cent.; but in almost every instance it was discovered subsequently that our competitors had been obtaining as good, and in some instances better, rates of freight than ourselves."

No financial favors of any kind whatever, he said, had been received from any railroad since 1887. He denied that Standard Oil officers had acquired advantages over competitors through ownership of railroad stock, saying:

"Stockholders and officers of the Standard have invested in stock of the railway companies. But in no instance have they done so for the purpose of influencing the policy of the railway companies, nor to the best of my knowledge and belief has any attempt ever been made through such ownership to influence any railway in favor of the Standard."

The success of the Standard Oil Company, he ascribed to its consistent policy, through the employment of the best Superintendents and workmen, the best methods, and the sacrifice of old machinery and plants for better ones, to cheapen its product, and to its sparing no expense to force its products into the markets of the world.

On the general subject of industrial combinations he said:

"It is too late to argue about advantages of industrial combinations. They are a necessity. Their chief advantages are:

"1. Command of necessary capital.

"2. Extension of limits of business.

"3. Increase of number of persons interested in the business.

"4. Economy in the business.

"5. Improvements and economies which are derived from knowledge of many interested persons of wide experience.

"6. Power to give the public improved products at less prices and still make a profit for stockholders.

"7. Permanent work and good wages for laborers."

Mr. Rockefeller then gave what he styled a picture of the successive steps in the development of the Standard Oil Company and its business in illustration of the points he had made as to the necessity for industrial combinations.

The last two questions and answers were as follows:

Q. "What are the chief disadvantages or dangers to the public arising from them?"

A "The dangers are that the power conferred by combination may be abused; that combinations may be formed for speculation in stocks, rather than for conducting business, and that for this purpose prices may be temporarily raised instead of being lowered. These abuses are possible to a greater or less extent in all combinations, large or small, but this fact is no more of an argument against combinations than the fact that steam may explode is an argument against steam. Steam is necessary, and can be made comparatively safe. Combination is necessary, and its abuses can be minimized, otherwise our legislators must acknowledge their incapacity to deal with the most important instrument of industry. Hitherto most legislative attempts have been an effort not to control but to destroy, hence their futility."

Q. "What legislation, if any, would you suggest regarding industrial combinations?"

A "First, Federal legislation, under which corporations may be created and regulated, if that be possible.

"Second, in lieu thereof, State legislation as nearly uniform as possible, encouraging combinations of persons and capital for the purpose of carrying on industries, but permitting State supervision, not of a character to hamper industries, but sufficient to prevent frauds upon the public."

"The statements made of his own knowledge are sworn to as true, and others as believed to be true.

SHIP BETWEEN TWO FIRES.

Red D Liner Maracaibo Struck Many Times and Her Captain Wounded in a Venezuelan Harbor.

Chief Steward John Stewart of the Red D Line steamer R. A. Thorpe, Capt. Hansen, which arrived at this port yesterday from Curacoa, brought with him a tale of the lively experience of the steamer Maracaibo, of the same line, which lay in the harbor of Maracaibo, Venezuela, during the battle which resulted in the capture of that city by the insurgent leader, Castro.

The Maracaibo lay in the crescent-shaped harbor between the fire of the opposing forces. The defenders under Gen. Fernando were stationed in the city and along the open horn of the harbor, while Castro's men occupied the woods on the opposite horn. The Maracaibo caught it on both sides. Her lifeboats were riddled with bullets, and Capt. Hopkins, who is also Commodore of the Red D Line, was slightly wounded. Sixty-five bullets were cut from the woodwork of the steamer as souvenirs of the fight when the capture of the city by the insurgents had restored order.

"Capt. Hopkins declared," said Mr. Stewart, "that modern Amazons took part in the fight on both sides. In daring they rivaled the men. Two of the women were killed on the dock nearest the steamer."

The Maracaibo is due at this port Jan. 18.

MAKES A FORTUNE IN "SUGAR."

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 10.—In the slump in Sugar of 13 points in as many minutes yesterday Thomas W. Lawson is said to have cleared a large profit, variously estimated as being from $300,000 to $500,000. It now appears that the firm of Lawson, Arnold & Co. has been among the largest sellers of Sugar for some days past in both Boston and New York, their sales footing up thousands of shares.

The senior partner has been the heaviest seller since last Friday, putting out immense blocks of the stock at 135 to 130. He offered Tuesday, on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, one-half of 1 per cent, to put 50,000 shares at 125, good for yesterday, and at the opening yesterday, when the stock was selling at 130, he offered 1 per cent. to put 50,000 shares at the same price. He only secured 3,000 shares.

Figuring Mr. Lawson's sales of Sugar at 100,000 shares, and figuring that it was all put out the other side of 130 and gathered safely in around 120, he must have cleared a million dollars in the last five business days. In the opinion of many the movement is only just started, in which event these profits are only an earnest of bigger ones to follow.

It developed to-day that Mr. Lawson was the first man or the outside to get into the sugar dividend cut deal. He availed himself of it at once.

TRUTH ABOUT GILLMORE'S PAY.

Mrs. Gillmore Received Full Amount Ordered to be Paid Her—No Salary Was Withheld.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—A story reflecting on the Navy Department's treatment of Lieut. J. C. Gillmore's wife was denied at the department to-day. The story was to the effect that in July last the department refused to continue paying Gillmore's salary to his wife, on the ground that he was probably dead; that in October, through the efforts of Mrs. Gillmore's friends, it was decided to resume payments, but only on condition that Mrs. Gillmore would sign an agreement to return to the department whatever she would not be entitled to receive in case it should turn out that her husband was dead; and that during the three months which intervened between the stoppage and resumption of the payments, a friend of Mrs. Gillmore concealed the truth from her by paying Gillmore's salary to her out of his own pocket.

It is customary for officers and seamen who are ordered away to make what are called "allotments" of their pay. These are assignments of the salary or a portion of it. Gillmore made such an allotment, and so did some of the seamen who were captured with him at Baler. In Gillmore's case the allotment was for twelve months, and was to expire in April, 1899. Just as the allotment was about to expire, and before Gillmore could renew it, he was captured by the Filipinos.

The payments were made in Gillmore's case through an attorney designated by him in Washington, who turned them over to Mrs. Gillmore. When the payments ceased, in April, the question was raised whether, since Gillmore would undoubtedly renew the allotment if he could, the payments ought not to be continued. This question went through the necessary round of department investigation, and on July 19 Paymaster General Kenny gave his decision that under the regulations it would be legal for the department to continue paying the money until Gillmore should be rescued or exchanged. The next day it was so ordered, and Mrs. Gillmore received the money for the two months during which the payments had been suspended, and has continued ever since to receive her allotment.

As to the agreement which, it is alleged, she was compelled to sign, the department officials say they know nothing of any such agreement. Judge Advocate General Lemly says that Lieut. Gillmore's attorney suggested to the department, while the subject was under investigation, that Mrs. Gillmore might make such an agreement, but the offer was not accepted.

At the time the decision was reached in Gillmore's case it was ordered that it should be applied to the cases of the seamen who were captured with him, and their allotments also have been regularly paid over.

CHURCH ASKS CONCESSIONS.

Prelate in the Philippines Argues for Property Rights, Fees, Schools, and Control of Parishes.

MANILA, Jan. 10.—It is asserted, on high authority, that Archbishop Nozaleda contends in his interviews with Mgr. Chapelle, the Papal Delegate, on behalf of the Roman Church and the brotherhoods, that the titles to all property held by the Church and the brotherhoods in the Philippines should be recognized, that the Roman Catechism should be taught in the primary schools, that the existing religious orders should continue to administer the parishes, that other parishes should be established under the same control, and that the parochial control of cemeteries should continue.

He also lays stress in his contentions upon the importance of allowing the Church to administer its own affairs without State interference, upon the necessity of a régime that will guarantee the liberty of the Church, upon the desirability of European clergy, the establishment of a new college for the instruction of native priests, the continuation of indirect contributions for the maintenance of churches and clergy, and upon the expediency of maintaining the system of parochial fees, including revenues from births, marriages, funerals, dispensations, and apostolic indulgences.

In addition Archbishop Nozaleda advocates the continuation of the Church's control of pawnshops and certain designated hospitals and schools, together with the establishment of a special form of parochial administration exacted by the actual conditions in the Philippines. Finally, he makes a plea for the continuation of the present missionary work of the Church.

MONEY FOR THE LAWTON FUND.

About $2,000 Was Sent In Yesterday—Total Received Is $72,436.47.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—About $2,000 was added to the Lawton fund this morning, making the total subscriptions now in Gen. Corbin's hands $72,436.47.

GAS EXPLOSION IN NEWARK.

Meter House Wrecked and Other Buildings Damaged, but the Lighting System Not Disarranged.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 10.—An explosion, which could be heard for a mile, occurred in the meter, purifying, and condensing house of the Essex and Hudson Gas Company's plant at 8 o'clock to-night. The building was torn to atoms, the windows in houses and stores for blocks were broken, and the alarm created spread to all parts of the city.

What caused the explosion is not known. There was no one in the building at the time. The building was of brick, one hundred feet long, sixty feet wide, and about sixty feet high, but had only one floor. In it were the pressure attachments, purifiers, meters, and other adjuncts of the gas plant of the company. The building formed an L with the main building. It ran along the Morris Canal from Congress Street. The building was visited about once an hour to inspect the working of the automatic machinery and appliances in it, but no one had been in it for upward of three-quarters of an hour before the explosion took place. In the main building and retort house adjoining many men were at work.

The explosion threw the south wall into the canal, filling it with brick. The roof flew upward and outward and landed some distance from the site of the building. The concussion knocked down men in the main building and persons passing along Market Street, across the canal. There is no sidewalk on the side of Market Street nearest the canal and no one was there to be injured by the falling bricks. The windows and store fronts on Market Street were blown in and persons in the buildings were knocked down. Windows for blocks were cracked and shattered, but great as the force of the concussion was no person appears to have been more than bruised by being knocked down.

The explosion was followed by a flash of flame so brilliant that it was seen from every engine house in the section, and before an alarm had been turned in the firemen were on their way to the scene, guided by the glare. Truck 4, which is over a mile away, was half way to the fire before the alarm was turned in. The first engine had coupled to a hydrant before the alarm had ceased ringing. The prompt arrival of the firemen kept the flames from spreading, but the burning gas gave the firemen much trouble, and they settled down for an all-night job.

A peculiar feature of the explosion was that while the walls and roof of the building were wrecked the force does not appear to have worked inward, and although covered with debris most of the apparatus in the building continued to perform its duty and only a few sections of the city were left without gas. This leads to the belief that one of the meters blew up and wrecked a few other pieces of machinery in the building, together with the structure itself, but left the rest of the machinery intact.

The loss to the company will be about $20,000, and the damage to buildings in the neighborhood about $5,000.

MAZET COMMITTEE REPORT

Summary of the Majority and Minority Findings.

TO REDUCE THE MAYOR'S TERM

City Officials Found Incompetent—Extensive and Radical Changes in Charter Recommended.

The majority and minority reports of the Mazet Investigating Committee were taken to Albany yesterday by Assemblyman Edward H. Fallows and Civil Justice Hoffman, respectively. The majority report was prepared by Messrs. Mazet and Fallows, while it is said that the minority report was written by Senator Thomas F. Grady and gone over by Corporation Counsel Whalen. It is expected that both reports will be presented to the Legislature to-morrow.

From reliable sources, it was learned last night that the majority report declares strongly in favor of an unassessed judiciary, and will recommend legislation looking forward to the realization of that object. The report will also urge that the term of the Mayor of New York be cut from four years to two, but it is not intended to apply to Mayor Van Wyck, who will be permitted to serve out his term. The report will advocate the appointment of a commission by the Governor to revise the Greater New York charter.

The report goes on to say that the investigation disclosed the fact that many city officials are incompetent and inefficient, while being in receipt of extravagant salaries. It also, it is said, calls attention to illegal registration and voting in this city, and urges legislation with a view of making the punishment for these violations against the elective franchise more severe. The report says further that the investigation proved the existence of illegal trafficking of saloons, gambling houses, poolrooms, and disorderly houses in violation of the law.

It is said that the Building Department is subjected to severe criticism, and remedial legislation to affect this branch of the City Government will be recommended. The report scores Tammany officials, whom it charges with open defiance of the authority of the State, and it is believed that Richard Croker, Andrew Freedman, and Police Commissioner Sexton receive much attention on this head.

The report concludes with a recommendation for extensive and radical changes in the charter as the only way in which the Tammany system of municipal government can be changed for the benefit of the citizens of New York.

The minority report attacks the partisan feature of the investigation and denounces the majority for its failure to summon Senator Platt or any other Republican of prominence. It warmly defends the city administration, and declares that New York is well and honestly governed.

The report bitterly assails the Republicans for making an attack on the city and declares that the utter failure of the investigation conclusively proved that it was unwarranted, that the people lacked confidence in the sincerity of the Republicans, that the charges made against city officials by the Republicans were false, and that no such conditions existed in New York as had been alleged.

A majority of the members of the Mazet investigating committee met in Mr. Mazet's office, in the Home Life Building, yesterday. Those present were Messrs. Mazet, Fallows, Hoffman, and Wilson of the committee and John Proctor Clarke of counsel. Frank Moss was not present. It was said that he was not invited, and from one of the committeemen present it was learned that Mr. Clarke's review of the testimony and suggestions for legislation had been used as a basis for the report, and that the report drawn by Mr. Moss and published several weeks ago had been discarded altogether.

Mr. Moss was asked last night if the fact that he was not invited to the conference could be construed as indicating a lack of sympathy between him and the committee. In reply Mr. Moss said:

"Since my report was published in the newspapers all relations between me and the committee have ceased."

"Will you make public the letters which you stated brought about the circumstances attending the closing of the committee's public sessions?" Mr. Moss was asked.

"I certainly shall," was the reply. "When I am formally dismissed from the employ of the committee I will explain the sudden ending of the inquiry."

MR. ROOT NOT A CANDIDATE.

Will Not Accept Nomination for the Vice Presidency—He Prefers to Remain Secretary of War.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 10.—Henry C. Paine, National Republican Committeeman of Wisconsin, to-day received a letter from Secretary of War Root in which the latter states that he is not and will not be a candidate for Vice President of the United States.

In his letter Mr. Root expresses the belief that it is far more important to the country, the Administration, and the Republican Party at this time that he should continue to attend to the business of the War Office, not because there are not plenty of other men, he suggests who could well discharge the duties of Secretary of War, but for the reason that the five or six months which he has spent in becoming familiar with the work qualify him better than other men who have not had the same training.

WOOLEN MILLS ARE BUSY.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 10.—In his annual report read at the meeting of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers to-day Secretary North said:

"The year 1899 has been one of the most remarkable in the history of American wool manufacture. Following a period of general dullness and non-employment, only less notable than that of 1894, the signs of improvement began to appear in early Summer. Once under way, the current of business has swollen steadily, until all the machinery available for the effective production of goods is again in operation, and many mills find it impossible to handle their orders.

"The surest test of the actual situation is the recent quite general increase in wages, amounting in many instances to 10 per cent., and bringing the average scale back nearly, if not quite, to the standard of 1892. Another test is the great difficulty experienced by manufacturers, particularly in the larger mill towns, in securing sufficient trained help to run their machinery.

"There is every reason to expect that the new year will be equally busy. Production can do no more than keep abreast with the demand for goods for a long time to come."

MORE SOUTHERN IRON MILLS.

Special to The New York Times.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Jan. 10.—George D. Wick, First Vice President; George Baird, General Sales Agent; Silas Llewellen, Secretary and Treasurer, and Henry R. Moore, Traffic Manager of the Republic Iron and Steel Company, with headquarters at Chicago, accompanied by E. L. Arnold and W. E. Taylor of New York, are touring the southern region of Alabama inspecting the Republic Company's recently purchased rolling mills and furnaces in this district and planning for further purchases and extensions.

The Republic officials, it is announced, have purchased the Bessemer Rolling Mills, which plant they inspected to-day. It will be put into operation very soon. It is also said that another furnace and steel mill will be built at Thomas, plans for which are now being drawn up.

FIRE ON CASINO'S STAGE

Actresses Using a Lamp Start and Then Help Extinguish It.

Miss Kittie Mitchell and Miss Clara Havel Receive Painful Burns—The Audience Is Dismissed.

What might have proved a serious fire at the Casino last night was prevented by the presence of mind of David Abrahams, Miss Kittie Mitchell, and Miss Clara Havel, of the "Little Red Riding Hood" Company. As it was, enough damage was done to prevent a performance, and Misses Mitchell and Havel were painfully, though not seriously, burned. There was little or no excitement in the auditorium.

A few minutes before the time for the raising of the curtain Misses Mitchell and Havel, assisted by Miss Mary Horton, their maid, were applying the finishing touches to their make-up in a dressing room near the proscenium box on the right hand side of the stage. To do this they used an alcohol lamp for the purpose of heating curling irons and melting wax. The latter caused the alcohol flame to flare up and some drapery and bunting were ignited. While Miss Horton was dispatched for assistance, Misses Mitchell and Havel grabbed the burning material, and in so doing each was badly burned about the arms, but their injuries will not prevent their appearance today.

Mr. Abrahams was talking to Miss Madge Lessing, who occupied the adjoining dressing room, when Miss Horton, very much frightened, appeared before them. Mr. Abrahams was made up as a cat at the time, and he showed feline agility in rushing to the aid of Misses Mitchell and Havel.

Meanwhile some of the stage hands learned of the trouble, and at least two of them lost their heads. One ran into the street and sent in a fire alarm, while the other set off the automatic sprinklers behind the footlights in operation, with the result of deluging all the chorus girls and other members of the cast who were awaiting the curtain call.

This caused the liveliest kind of a stampede. Many of the members of the chorus grabbed such of their street clothes as they could hastily gather and made for the street. Some ran to the Parker House, others took cabs for their homes, while two of them ran into the café and begged the barkeeper to save their lives. Meanwhile the firemen had arrived and promptly extinguished the blaze with slight loss.

While the excitement on the stage was at its height Manager George W. Lederer, who had learned of the trouble, went in front of the curtain and said that owing to a slight accident the opening of the performance would be delayed for a few minutes. Then he instructed Fred J. Eustice, leader of the orchestra, to do his best to entertain the audience. The fire out, Mr. Lederer and his stage manager sought to collect the scattered members of the company. Many were missing, and those on the stage and in the dressing rooms were drenched and absolutely refused to "go on." Then Mr. Lederer discovered that many of the costumes used in other acts were also wet through and could not be used.

Mr. Lederer then went before the curtain again, and after explaining what had happened told his listeners to go to the box office and get either their money back or tickets for some other date. The audience quietly dispersed, and at 9:30 o'clock the house was empty.

Manager Lederer said there would be the usual matinée this afternoon. The damage by fire will not exceed $100, but the loss by water will reach at least $2,500.

Misses Mitchell and Havel had their injuries dressed by Dr. Frauenthal at 1,402 Broadway, and were taken home. The firemen and the members of the company warmly commended them for their efforts.

"Of course, I was frightened," said Miss Mitchell to a reporter. "You would have been, too, if you had seen how the flames ran up the wall. But Miss Havel and I pulled the draperies down, and it is a godsend that our costumes did not ignite. Yes, my arm pains me, but I guess it will soon be all right. Mr. Abrahams was of great help to us, and, do you know, I really believe he fainted after all was over. I did not suppose that men fainted, did you? I thought that was only a woman's privilege."

"I can't say that I fainted exactly," remarked Mr. Abrahams, "but the smudge and smoke annoyed me terribly, and I was somewhat overcome. I soon recovered after getting into the open air."

"Some one closed the door of my dressing room," asserted Miss Carrie Glover, who is a sister of Amelia Glover, the dancer, and a sister-in-law of Henry E. Dixey. "Miss Fannie Dudley and I occupied the same room, and some mean thing shut us in and tried to keep us there. But when we saw the smoke we wet some towels, and, placing them about our faces, fought our way out and reached the café by means of the iron stairway."

"Really, there was no cause for alarm," Manager Lederer insisted. "The dressing rooms are zinc lined and practically fireproof. But for the fact that the costumes were saturated with water from the sprinklers, a performance could have been given. I am glad there was no panic in the audience, and that no patron of the house was hurt. Miss Mitchell and Miss Havel behaved splendidly, and I am very sorry that they sustained painful burns.

"Although some damage was done to costumes and scenery under the stage, the incident demonstrated the worth of our automatic sprinklers."

GOV. TAYLOR WILL HOLD ON.

Special to The New York Times.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 10.—Gov. Taylor told friends to-day that he intends to hold on to his office. He adds that Goebel, having all the best of the election machinery, failed to overcome the landslide which overthrew him, and that, failing to get enough votes, he then tried to have the County Commissioners give him the best of the count, but failed even in that way to get enough votes counted for him. He then, so Gov. Taylor charges, tried to have the State Commission count him in, and in this he again failed. Now he is manipulating the Legislature, and while Gov. Taylor does not admit it, he believes the Legislature will do his bidding.

Lawyers who have been in conference with Gov. Taylor say that the Legislature by adopting some of the present rules, which are contrary to the Constitution, becomes a mob instead of a legal body, and that Gov. Taylor has no reason to obey its mandates any more than he would the rulings of a body of men who never had been elected to the Legislature.

Trouble of a serious nature is expected here to-morrow, when the motion is made by the Republicans to reconsider the vote in the House that adopted the new rules today.

The witnesses subpoenaed to appear before the Franklin County Grand Jury today included President Milton H. Smith and other officials of the Louisville and Nashville, Col. Attila Cox, John H. Whallen, and others, who have been identified with the John Young Brown Democratic Party. President Smith, however, was in New York, and the process was returned unserved. It is understood that the testimony of the witnesses who appeared related to the Whallen-Harrell bribery matter.

$125,000 Fire in Wilmington.

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 10.—The works of the Delaware Hard Fibre Company were destroyed by fire to-night, causing a loss of $125,000; partially covered by insurance. Aside from the loss on the property, the company also will lose on account of big contracts on hand.

Methodists to Burn Mortgages.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—To-morrow evening, in the presence of Bishop Warren and a number of other distinguished representatives of the Methodist Church, $30,000 worth of mortgages, comprising the entire indebtedness of all the Methodist churches in the City of Albany will be publicly burned.

Grover Cleveland Goes Duck Shooting

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Ex-President Cleveland passed through Washington to-night en route to Georgetown, S. C., where he will spend a few days duck shooting.

BRYAN FOR EXPANSION.

But People Must Be Intelligent and Territory Must Not Be Held as a Colony.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Jan. 10.—In an interview to-day W. J. Bryan said:

"I am a firm believer in the enlargement and extension of the limits of the Republic. I don't mean by that the extension by the addition of contiguous territory nor to limit myself to that.

"Wherever there is a people intelligent enough to form a part of this Republic, it is my belief that they should be taken in.

"Wherever there is a people who are capable of having a voice and a representation in this Government, there the limits of the Republic may be extended.

"The Filipinos are not such people. The Democratic Party has ever favored the extension of the limits of this Republic, but it has never advocated the acquisition of subject territory, to be held under colonial government."

SLEPT IN A WATERING CART.

Tramps Used the Abandoned Vehicle as a Lodging House.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST POINT, Jan. 10.—The Sisters of St. Francis, who recently bought Cranston's Hotel, ordered some of the old stuff which lay around carted off. A watering cart of unusual capacity was also condemned. When the driver hitched his horse to the discarded cart bedlam seemed let loose inside. The driver crossed himself three times and was preparing to run when the horse became frightened and started off on a gallop. Horse, watering cart, and driver landed safely at the foot of an embankment near the north gate.

The yells that proceeded from the inside of the cart brought the driver to his senses, and he peered through a hole in the top. A woolly head was in plain view. The driver's arm is powerful. He grasped the woolly pate, and a struggling, screaming tramp came through. The driver pulled three more tramps from the interior of the cart. They did not wait for breakfast. Half a load of leaves was taken from the inside of the water barrel. The cart was an established lodging place for tramps.

SUBMARINE ARC LIGHT TESTED.

Invention of Two Yale Students Proves a Success.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Jan. 10.—A representative of the Russian Government was here to-day to witness an experimental trial of the new submarine electric arc light, invented by F. G. Hall, Jr., and J. E. Burdick, Yale students. The Russian agent, with Messrs. F. R. Van Vechten and J. Raymon Hall and Capt. Hibbard Youngs, an expert deep sea diver, were present at the trial.

The power for the light of 2,000 candle power was furnished from the dynamos of the electric-lighting plant, a hundred yards away. The diver lowered himself to the bottom of the harbor, and with his lamp thoroughly explored the darkened depths. Small objects were thrown into the muddy water and quickly recovered. An exposure of a plate in a camera with the aid of the light was made, but with doubtful results. Every member of the party seemed pleased with the experiment.

The lamp consists of a glass globe, a wire guard to protect it, and a mechanism chamber of steel. The current is led from its source through a flexible cable to where the test is made into the lamp through a stuffing box.

REWARDED AFTER MANY YEARS.

Poor Boatman Who Saved Women's Lives Receives a Legacy.

NYACK, Jan. 10.—Cornelius Ackerman, a poor boatman of Piermont, has received notice that he is heir to several thousand dollars. The legacy was left by a woman named Mrs. Moriarty, who died recently. Ackerman had saved the lives of Mrs. Moriarty and her three daughters twenty years ago, when they were passengers on a steamer which blew up. The other day a lawyer went to Piermont to inform Ackerman that the woman, who was wealthy, had left him the money.

HONORE PALMER GOES TO WORK.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 10.—Honoré Palmer, son of Potter Palmer, has accepted a position in the Merchants' Loan and Trust Bank, and until he earns promotion will be a messenger at that financial institution at a salary of $6 per week. Potter Palmer's other son, Potter, Jr., is also to follow his brother's example of working for a living. He is now looking for a position, but has not determined what calling he will follow.

Ever since Honoré went to work at the bank he has been the innocent cause of a ceaseless ringing of the telephone bells. Every belle or beau in the city seemed anxious to call him up regarding some social function, and when he went to work he found his desk covered with cut flowers and bonbon boxes.

Potter Palmer is said to be well pleased with his boys' determination. Both of them are graduates of Harvard.

GIRLS' ANTI-SLANG SOCIETY.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Jan. 10.—The girls employed in the Boston Store here have organized an anti-slang society. Fifty girls have joined it. The girls do not bind themselves not to use slang. In fact, they will encourage one another to use slang expressions, for the more slang is used the more money there will be in the treasury at the end of the year and the better time can be provided.

The members bind themselves to pay into the treasury 1 cent for each slang word or expression used in the hearing of another person. It is thought the penalty will become so expensive to those most addicted to the slang habit that they will be more easily reformed than those who only occasionally use the tabooed expressions. There are likely to be some disputes as to what is slang and what is not, but these are to be settled by vote as they arise.

FRICK NO LONGER CHAIRMAN.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 10.—H. C. Frick was dropped from his position as Chairman of the Frick Coke Company at the meeting of the Board of Managers to-day. He was continued on the board, whose membership was increased from five to seven. It was also decided to drop John Walker and G. B. Bosworth, friends of Mr. Frick.

A. M. Moreland, Assistant Superintendent and Auditor of the Steel Company; D. M. Clemson, Superintendent of the Natural Gas Department; Thomas Morrison, General Superintendent of the Edgar Thomson Steel Works, and James Gayley, Superintendent of Ore Supply Department, were elected new members. The office of Chairman was abolished.

Andrew Carnegie did not attend the meeting.

Held for Selling Confederate Money.

CHICAGO, Jan. 10.—On the unusual charge of dealing in Confederate States money, F. M. Davis, who conducts a general mail order business in Monroe Street, was arrested to-day by Government officers and held for the Federal Grand Jury by United States Commissioner Humphrey. If an indictment results the case will be made a test in the United States District Court, and if conviction is returned, all persons dealing in Confederate money, even as a curio, will be liable to prosecution. Bills representing $100,000 were found in Davis's place of business.

Anti-Hill Man Wins in Rochester.

ROCHESTER, Jan. 10.—A direct trial of strength between the local Hill and anti-Hill Democrats took place in the Monroe County Democratic Committee meeting yesterday on the question as to whether State Committeeman William H. Tracy, a strong anti-Hill man, should retain county leadership. He was supported by ex-Mayor Warner and the Hill forces were led by Alderman J. Miller Kelley and a State Committeeman, E. T. Hickey. Tracy won on a vote on a contested seat by 24 to 10, and strong Bryan resolutions were adopted.

RELEASE AMERICAN FLOUR

British Authorities Yield to American Representations.

SALISBURY'S REPLY RECEIVED

Britain Announces Foodstuffs Will Not Be Held as Contraband Unless Intended for the Enemy.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The American flour seized off Delagoa Bay has been released.

The United States Ambassador, Joseph H. Choate, had an interview with the Marquis of Salisbury this afternoon and received a verbal reply to the representations of the Washington Government. The British note on this subject was sent later to the United States Embassy. The gist of it was cabled to Washington. In brief, foodstuffs are not considered contraband of war unless intended for the enemy.

The Foreign Office only arrived at a decision to-day, and it was not until after Mr. Choate's interview had ended that a note embodying the provisions was drawn up. Several of the Government's advisers wanted to make a regulation regarding canned goods, but this was

TESTIMONY FOR MOLINEUX

Miss Miller Swears He Did Not Buy the Poison Bottle Holder.

MINUTE STORY OF THE SALE

Former Employe of Hartdegen & Co. in Newark Describes Her Customer—Bank Experts Testify.

Emma Elizabeth Miller, the young woman who, on Dec. 21, 1898, while an employe in the store of C. Hartdegen & Co., in Newark, sold the silver bottle-holder which was afterward sent to Harry Cornish at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club along with the bottle of poisoned bromo-seltzer, was the principal witness for the prosecution yesterday in the trial of Roland B. Molineux for the murder of Katherine J. Adams. The feature of her examination was her positive statement that the defendant was not the man to whom she had sold the holder.

As Mr. Weeks asked her the question which brought forth this reply Molineux rose in his place and faced the witness. Pale and emotionless as usual, he confronted the young woman, and there was not a tremor in his frame or a movement of the muscles of his face as he stood waiting for the momentous answer. Miss Miller looked the young prisoner over carefully before she made her reply, despite the fact that it was not the first time she had been called on to make the same statement. When her answer came it was made in a positive manner, and she insisted that she could not be mistaken.

Mr. Osborne called Miss Miller to the stand, and put a few questions to her, eliciting merely the fact that she had sold the bottle-holder on the date mentioned. He then turned her over to Mr. Weeks for cross-examination without having even asked her what manner of man it was to whom she sold the holder. He left that for Mr. Weeks to do, and the counsel for the defense promptly took up the challenge.

"What time of day was it when you sold the holder?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"About 5 o'clock," said Miss Miller.

"Was this defendant the person to whom the holder was sold by you?" asked Mr. Weeks, as Molineux rose and faced the witness.

"He was not."

"You are positive of that?"

"I am positive."

After a few more questions Mr. Weeks abandoned his cross-examination for the time being, and as he sat down Mr. Osborne began to talk sharply to the witness. He accused her of not telling what she had told him in a sworn statement he said she made to him, and when Mr. Weeks objected to the District Attorney impeaching his own witness, Mr. Osborne, turning violently upon the counsel for Molineux, asserted in loud tones that the young woman was not a witness for the prosecution, but rather a witness for the defense, in spite of the fact that he had called her to the stand. There was a violent scene between the lawyers over this, but the court allowed the statement of Mr. Osborne to stand.

MISS MILLER'S CUSTOMER.

Miss Miller said with great positiveness that the man who bought the bottle holder from her wore a sandy Vandyke beard, and that he had the appearance of a gentleman. She said he took the article he asked for without question and paid the price. He asked, she said, for a silver article that would hold a bottle of bromo-seltzer, and said he wanted it to put on a lady's dressing table. She showed him what was really a toothpick holder, and asked another saleswoman whether she should sell it for the purpose for which the customer wanted it. The other saleswoman told her to sell the man anything he would take, and so the sale was consummated.

Mr. Osborne tried hard to get the witness to admit that she was not sure about the time the sale was made. He wanted her to say that it was about 2:30 in the afternoon, but she stuck to her original statement. Mr. Osborne had tried previously to prove by another witness that he met Molineux on the street in Newark on Dec. 21 at about 2:30 o'clock, and he was to base some arguments to agree. It is understood that Molineux is prepared to prove that he was nowhere near Hartdegen's store at the time Miss Miller says the bottle was bought. The more Miss Miller persisted in her statements, the more violent did Mr. Osborne's methods become, and several times the witness appealed to Recorder Goff for protection. She was told that she must answer all proper questions put to her, and should the questions become improper the Court would intervene.

Recorder Goff took a hand in the examination of the witness. He did not ask as many questions as in the case of Mary Melando, but, as in that instance, the Recorder won the confidence of the witness by his fatherly manner and her answers to his inquiries were clear and succinct. She had already said that she doubted her ability to pick out the man to whom she sold the bottle holder, even if he stood before her.

"Can you now say under the solemn obligation of your oath that you would be able to pick out the man to whom you sold the bottle holder?" asked the Court.

"I don't think I could," said the girl. "I might under some particular circumstances, but I would not swear to it."

"Now since you are not sure that you would be able to identify the man to whom you sold the article, how is it that you are so sure that it was not the defendant who bought it of you?" persisted the Recorder.

"I can tell much better who is not the man I sold it to than I can tell who he is," was the reply.

"You are sure he had a Vandyke beard?"

"I am sure."

"Can you tell whether it was false or real?"

"I cannot."

THE HARPSTER LETTER.

The first witness called to the stand yesterday was Charles Jacobs, of Jacobs & Co., who signed the letter written by Rudolph Helles at the request of Molineux, asking about Harpster's record with Frederick Stearns & Co of Detroit. Mr. Jacobs examined the letter and identified it.

"Is that your signature?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"It is."

"How did you come to put it on that letter?"

"Mr. Helles asked me to sign it and I did so."

"Was it mailed?"

"It was."

Mr. Weeks had no questions to ask, and Gustave Kutnow of Kutnow Brothers, whose patent medicine has figured largely in the case, took the stand. Mr. Kutnow said that his firm sent out a sample box of its powder to any one sending a request for it, and that the only kind of box used was a tin box, unsealed. The powder was put up in sealed bottles for the trade and in sealed sample bottles for physicians. He said that it was a harmless preparation intended for use in stomach troubles, and that it contained no mercury. He also identified the box alleged to have been sent to Barnet as one the firm had sent out. The stamps on this box, he said, had been put on it in July, 1898. He also identified another sample box that had been sent out in response to a letter signed "H. Cornish" on Dec. 21, 1898, and which was found in the letter box at 1,620 Broadway after the death of Mrs. Adams.

Mr. Kutnow identified the alleged bogus Cornish letter asking for the sample of the salts, which he said had been picked out of a large number of letters and given to the detectives. He was asked in whose writing were the words in lead pencil on the letter "Received A. M. Dec. 22, 1898, order filled immediately" and said he thought they were in the handwriting of Elsie Gray, a stenographer in the employ of the firm. Mr. Weeks asked a great many questions about this writing, but the evidence went for naught when a moment later Detective Herlihy took the stand and swore that the lead pencil writing in question had been put there by him when he got the letter from the young woman, and that the words "order filled immediately" had been written there by him in consequence of what the woman told him and as a sort of memorandum.

While Detective Herlihy was on the stand Mr. Weeks took occasion to ask him about the blue letter paper which the detective had already sworn he discovered to have been made by the Whiting Paper Company. This brought on a war of words between Mr. Weeks and Mr. Osborne. Mr. Osborne made an objection on the ground that whatever was told to the detective by the paper people was purely hearsay.

"And this is a cruel waste of time," said Mr. Osborne—"a cruel waste of time, and a cruel imposition on this jury."

JURORS INDULGE IN A LAUGH.

Several of the jurors laughed when Mr. Osborne made this assertion and this did not have the effect of decreasing the District Attorney's ill humor. Mr. Weeks insisted that Mr. Osborne had asked and received an answer to practically the same question.

"That is a gross misstatement of the facts," said Mr. Osborne, "and your reiteration of it, Mr. Weeks, will not make it a bit more true if you keep on till the crack of doom. No gentleman and no lawyer—"

"Now, your Honor," said Mr. Weeks, hotly, "I have stood the insults of the District Attorney as long as I mean to stand them. As an officer of this court I demand that I be accorded gentlemanly treatment."

Mr. Osborne attempted to maintain his position, and the Recorder put a stop to the scene by remarking coldly that the incident was closed. Miss Miller was then called to the stand.

Miss Miller said that she was now employed as a stenographer by the Fidelity and Casualty Company, and that she had held a position in the store of C. Hartdegen & Co. in Newark in December, 1898.

"You acted as saleswoman during the holiday season, did you not?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I did."

"Is that store a light or dark one?"

"It is usually light. There are two front windows and two skylights."

"Do you recognize this bottle holder?"

"I do."

"Did you sell it?"

"I did."

"When?"

"On Dec. 21, 1898."

The witness then identified the slip that she had made out at the time, and was turned over to Mr. Weeks for cross-examination. After she had positively stated that Molineux was not the purchaser, Mr. Weeks asked her if Mr. Arnold, who she had said was the head salesman, was in the store on that day.

"He says he was, and other people say so, too," said the witness.

"Did you not see him?" asked Mr. Osborne on re-direct examination.

"Yes, I did."

"Then what do you mean by giving that answer? Why did you not answer the question properly and tell the jury the facts?"

The assault was so sudden that Miss Miller turned to the Recorder. He told her to answer, and she said that she had made what she thought was the best reply.

"How do you fix the time as 5 o'clock?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"The lights were lit on the street and in the store."

"Was there not an electric light just over the man's head?"

"No, I think not. It was to one side of him."

"Did you not make a signed statement to a Newark paper saying that the light shone directly in the man's face?"

"I did not. I made no signed statement whatever."

$125 FOR HER STORY.

"Did you not make a statement to a paper in this city?"

"I did,"

"When was that?"

"In February."

"How much did you get for that?"

"There was $12; paid. I got $100 of it."

"How soon after you sold the bottle holder did any one speak to you about it?"

"On Dec. 30, 1898."

"Who saw you then?"

"Detective Carey."

"Did you give the detective an accurate description of the purchaser?"

"I did. I said he was a slight man with a sandy Vandyke beard, and that he was of medium height."

"Did you not say that he seemed in a hurry when he came in and that he pushed aside two women to get at the counter?"

"I did not. I did not see him when he came in. I said he was a man of few words, and that he did not appear to waste much time."

"Did you not say that he was of delicate appearance, and that he had an air of refinement or culture?"

"I did not. I said that he looked like a gentleman."

Here occurred the passage between the lawyers, in which Mr. Weeks objected to the District Attorney cross-examining his own witness, and Mr. Osborne said that it was a witness for the defendant. Mr. Osborne then went on, asking: "Do you know anybody who answers the description you have given of the purchaser?"

"I have seen dozens of men with sandy beards who would fill the bill."

"Then you wouldn't be able to pick the man out of a dozen?"

"I am not sure that I would be able to recognize him."

"Now, as a matter of fact, Miss Miller, did not your sister say to you as late as last night, 'Emma, are you sure whether it was a man or a woman?'"

"Yes, she said that," said the witness in a surprised tone.

"What has this to do with the case?" put in Mr. Weeks.

"I'll leave it to the jury to decide," answered Mr. Osborne. Then he asked the witness: "Now, are you sure as to whether it was a man or a woman?"

"Of course I am," snapped the witness. "I am sure it was a man."

"And that's about all you are sure of, is it not?"

"No, it is not. I am sure of everything I have said."

"Now, is it not true that you might have got one customer mixed up with another during the rush?"

"No, not in this case."

"Did not Miss Kane, who stood near you and to whom you spoke about the sale, say that it had been made at 2:30?"

"I don't know."

PALE AND HAD GRAY EYES.

"Do you not recollect having made the statement that the light shone on the man so that when he looked up at you you saw that his complexion was pale and that he had gray eyes?"

"Yes, that is true."

"You are sure of that?"

"Yes."

"Did Mr. Weeks call on you about this matter?"

"He did."

"When was that?"

"It was on the 2d of January."

"And right after that Mr. Molineux was brought in?"

"Yes."

"Do you remember saying that Mr. Weeks had a black beard?"

"No, I said I thought his beard was gray."

"As if anybody could forget the Weeks beard," said the District Attorney, in an aside to the jury. "Don't you remember calling at my house and saying in the presence of Detectives Carey and McCafferty that you were sure Mr. Weeks's beard was black?"

"If I said that, I have no recollection of it."

"You knew that Molineux was to be brought in to see you?"

"I did."

"And he was not brought in until Mr. Hartdegen had first spoken to you, and Mr. Weeks had spoken to you both?"

"Mr. Hartdegen said that he did not want me to be bothered in the store, and Mr. Weeks asked permission to introduce Mr. Molineux."

"Did not Mr. Weeks ask you if you could identify Mr. Molineux?"

"I don't remember."

"Did you not say that the man stood in the shadow, and that he had his derby hat pulled down over his eyes?"

"That's not true. I never said that."

"Now, might it not have been 1 o'clock when the sale was made?"

"I am sure it was not."

"Or between 2 and 3?"

"No."

"Did you not say in a sworn statement that it was about 4 o'clock?"

"I did not. I said that it was after 4:30. You tried to make me say it was earlier."

"Now will you swear that the man had a beard at all?"

"I will."

"And that he appeared like a gentleman?"

"Yes."

"Now, do you mean to tell this jury that you remember anything at all about it?"

"I do."

"You are sure he had a pale face and gray eyes?"

"Yes."

Mr. Weeks then took up the cross-examination again. "You are as sure that the man had a sandy beard as you are that he had gray eyes, are you not?" he asked.

"I am fully as sure."

"There is no possibility of your being mistaken?"

"None whatever."

MOLINEUX'S CALL AT THE STORE.

"On the thirteenth day of December, when you first gave the description of the customer, you had never seen Mr. Molineux, had you?"

"I had not."

"What did the customer ask for?"

"He said he wanted a silver article to hold a bottle of bromo-seltzer and to stand on a lady's dresser."

"Did the fact that he called for an unusual article attract your attention toward him?"

"It did."

"Have you ever had a customer ask before or since for such an article?"

"No."

"What happened when Mr. Molineux was brought in?

"He was introduced to me, and I said that I had never seen him before. He said he was glad of that, and then probably recognizing that he said a peculiar thing he apologized and said he did not mean it in that way." The defendant laughed heartily at the recollection of his faux pas.

Recorder Goff then took up the examination of the witness, after which Miss Miller was allowed to leave the stand.

Detective Carey was then recalled. He said that he had been to the Hartdegen store yesterday morning, and that a few of the lights were lit then, but not as many as had been lit when he went there on Dec. 30, 1898.

"Have you noticed the time that the lights are lit on the streets in Newark?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I never saw them lit until after 5 o'clock."

Leonard C. Levy, a partner in the firm of Morris Herrmann & Co., testified that Robert A. Zeller was in his employ, and that he had not abandoned his tripe to this city with the firm's pay rolls on account of any orders issued by the firm.

"Did you personally issue such an order to Zeller?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I did not."

"When did he discontinue his tripe?"

"I think about four months ago."

"He used to come regularly for years before that, did he not?"

"Not regularly. Sometimes another man came and sometimes Mr. Molineux brought the list over himself."

John C. Emery, another of Mr. Osborne's amateur handwriting experts, next took the witness stand. He is receiving teller of the Seaboard National Bank, and he swore that in his opinion Molineux had written the poison address as well as the disputed letters.

"Did you ever make a mistake?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"Never," said the witness.

"Yet you do not claim to be infallible, do you?"

"No."

Charles H. Wessells, the paying teller of the Chemical National Bank, swore that he believed Molineux had written the "Cornish" and "Barnet" letters.

"And also the poison address?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"Well," said the witness slowly, "I'm not so sure about that; it is possible that some one else wrote that."

"But not probable, eh?"

"No, not probable."

"You have no doubt whatever about the disputed letters, have you?"

"No."

To Mr. Weeks Mr. Wessells reiterated his statement that there was room for error in regard to the poison address, and the session thereupon closed.

NATIVES LACK FOOD.

Oppression by Aguinaldo's Underlings Causes Suffering.

MANILA, Jan. 10.—The inhabitants of the Islands of Leyte and Samar are suffering from lack of food resulting from the long blockade, the arbitrary confiscation of property, and the levying of tribute by the so-called Government of the Filipinos. The Governors of both islands are Tagalogs, who were appointed by Aguinaldo, and they hold the territories completely in their power, administering local affairs according to their own whims and accountable to no one. They have armed forces which terrorize the peaceful inhabitants. The rebel forces, on the other hand, have never lacked food or money.

The inhabitants, driven to desperation by the necessity of having to pay four times the normal price for foodstuffs, organized against insurgent depredations, but, having no arms, they were unable to resist their oppressors.

TROOPS WAIT FOR PROVISIONS.

Filipinos Retire to the Mountains—Cavalry Kills Thirteen Insurgents.

MANILA, Jan. 10.—Reports from the movements of the American commanders south of Manila show that Gen. Bates and Gen. Wheaton are at Perez das Marinas and Gen. Schwan at Silang, all awaiting the arrival of provision wagons. Reconnoissances have shown that 2,000 armed insurgents have retired to the mountains from the district between Indang and Maig, and that others have retreated along the coast from Noveleta toward Batangas.

Last night Nolan's squadron of the Eleventh Cavalry drove a body of insurgents from Maig. One American was killed and two were wounded. Thirteen dead Filipinos were found.

The movement largely resembles Gen. Schwan's experiences in the same country, except that the towns are now being garrisoned and that the insurgents refuse to fight, retreating southward and dividing into small bands, with the apparent intention of reassembling later. The plan of catching a large number between two brigades has failed. About a hundred insurgents have been killed, but comparatively few arms have been taken.

The region is full of amigos, who, doubtless, have been bearing arms which they have hidden. The women and children remain in their homes; and the insurgents, as they fall back, release all prisoners they have captured.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Gen. Otis cables the War Department from Manila today of the progress in Cavite Province, saying:

"Bates has about cleared up Province of Cavite, making large captures."

VOLUNTEER OFFICER A SUICIDE.

Lieut. Bowman Kills Himself While Temporarily Deranged.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Gen. Otis informed the War Department to-day that First Lieut. Daniel T. Bowman of the Thirty-seventh Volunteer Infantry, while temporarily deranged, committed suicide yesterday morning by shooting himself.

Lieut. Bowman was a native of St. Francisville, La., and served as private in the First Montana Volunteer Infantry in the Philippines from July, 1898, until July, 1899, when he was appointed First Lieutenant of the Thirty-seventh Volunteer Infantry, which regiment was organized in the Philippines.

OPENING OF PORTS DELAYED.

Gen. Otis Says He Needs All Available Vessels to Carry Troops.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The following cablegram from Gen. Otis, received at the War Department to-day in answer to an inquiry from Adjt. Gen. Corbin, shows the prospects of reopening the hemp ports in the Philippines:

"Obliged to use all available coasting vessels in supplying troops in various islands. Am unable to move troops to hemp districts as soon as anticipated. Am now collecting vessels here for that purpose, the United States transports are of too great draught. Have opened Romblon and Capiz and some hemp is coming in. Will open hemp district as soon as possible, some time this month."

MR. SAGE ANSWERS CRITICISM.

Says He Never Agreed to Hold His Standard Gas Stock.

There is considerable ill feeling among Directors of the Standard Gas Light Company because Russell Sage, who is its President, sold most of his holdings in the concern to a Boston man. They maintain that he had agreed not to dispose of his holdings without consulting them. This statement Mr. Sage vehemently denied last night.

"If there is any such agreement, let them produce it," said he. "To say so is absurd; men don't do business on those principles. This very man, John T. Terry, who criticises me for the sale, has repeatedly sold and bought in his Standard stock, and he holds none but preferred stock now. Do these people pretend to tell me what I shall do with my own property? They might as well try to dictate to me as to whether or not I should sell my house."

Mr. Sage said he had sold his stock because he got a good figure for it, better than the market price, and because he was discouraged at the outlook for ending the gas war. If the war were settled, he said, he would buy back the stock, and perhaps more, too, as he still thought the company a good one. "As for these men who object to the sale," said he, "who sold them their stock—some of it for 10 cents on the dollar? Russell Sage! If they begin to attack me, I'll come out and tell the whole matter over my signature."

Mr. Sage was asked about the report that he might be asked to vacate the Presidency of the company. His term expires in April. He said he would be glad to leave the office if he could resign with it responsibility for the company's bonds to the city for faithful performance of contract, which he had signed. Speaking of the negotiations between the companies he said that when Mr. Rockefeller approached him more than six months ago the Standard people desired to be paid for their stock in consolidated securities, but Mr. Rockefeller offered money instead. The offer was refused because too low, and about six months ago he offered a price even lower by $20 a share, and this was, of couse, refused.

"The excuse he gave for such a low offer," said Mr. Sage, "was that if he absorbed the New Amsterdam Company he would have to assume their heavy mortgage, and he could not afford to pay much for our stock. If his offer had been only a little lower than the Boston man's I should have taken it. I should have preferred to sell to the Rockefellers because they are reliable."

Mr. Sage said that he had sold the most of his stock, but that he had not owned a controlling interest in the company. He thought the gas outlook at present gloomy and fruitful of bankruptcy. "The only thing to do," said he, "is for the companies to get together and then to go to Albany and put the price of gas up."

PAYN'S FRIENDS CONFIDENT.

They Assert that Gov. Roosevelt Will Find It Impossible to Remove the Superintendent of Insurance.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Superintendent Payn of the Insurance Department devoted considerable time this afternoon to personal talks with various members of the State Senate, who will soon be called upon to vote on the nomination of his successor. The Superintendent refused to talk for publication, but his friends were loud in their assertions that he had won his fight, and that Gov. Roosevelt would find it impossible to remove him.

The Governor this evening declined to say whether or not he had reached a decision as to whose name he will send to the Senate. He remarked that there was nothing new in the situation, but some of his friends say to-night that he may send in a nomination at any time, possibly before the adjournment on Friday. The names of various Republicans are heard in connection with the place, and there are those who say that the Governor may name somebody whose name has not yet been mentioned.

The Tammany Senators all declare to-night that they have not agreed as to their course in the Payn matter. A prominent representative said that the Democrats were merely spectators, and had no interest in a Republican factional controversy.

Chairman Odell, who is here as the representative of the Republican organization, made a long call on the Governor to-night. He declined to say what subjects were discussed, but it is believed that the Payn matter was thoroughly talked over.

UNION LEAGUE CLUB ELECTION.

Judge Howland, Nominated for President, Knows of No Opposition.

An advertisement appears in another column urging all friends of Judge Howland in the Union League Club, who wish to see him elected President, to attend the meeting in good season this evening and vote the regular ticket.

Judge Howland said last night in reference to the matter: "It is entirely new to me, and I don't know what it means. I am sorry they put that advertisement in. I wish I could have prevented it."

"Is there any dissension in the club over this election?" he was asked.

"Not at all, to the best of my knowledge," said he. "I am running on the regular ticket for President, and I do not know of any one who is running against me. There is only one ticket—the regular one—and it is customarily elected without any opposition whatever. I suppose this advertisement was put in because they were afraid of some scratching, but if there really is a movement in opposition to the regular ticket I have heard nothing of it."

At the clubhouse last night it was said that it was customary to publish an advertisement calling attention to the regular ticket before each annual election. There was no knowledge of any opposition ticket.

P. D. Armour to Retire?

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 10.—Reiteration of the report that P. D. Armour has given up the active management of his interests in this city came to-day from Pasadena, Cal., where it is said he announced his intention to make his permanent home. The message added that the millionaire was negotiating for a residence.

TO DR. M'GLYNN'S MEMORY

St. Stephen's, Which He Loved, Sees Tributes of Thousands.

PEOPLE SILENT AND SAD

The Archbishop Accompanies the Body Till It Lies in State in the Church.

Clad in the purple robes of the priesthood, with beretta, stole, chasuble, and alb, and clasping in his hands a crucifix, emblem of salvation, the body of Father Edward McGlynn reposed last night in a black coffin in Stephen's Church, of which, from 1866 to 1886, he was rector, and was viewed by an immense throng, that filed through the church in continuous procession from 6:30 till after 10 o'clock. The police estimate that 30,000 persons paid this tribute to the memory of the popular priest, who was Henry George's devoted friend and supporter, and the champion of the cause of labor.

It was an impressive spectacle. The coffin rested in the centre aisle, in front of the chancel, upon a simple catafalque, a stand covered with a black pall edged with white trimming. On each side of it three immense tapers burned. The dead priest's head was raised so that he appeared to be looking south down the dimly lighted fane toward the main entrance. Black cloth draped the galleries to right and left and the organ loft, at the other end of the church. Black altar cloths bordered with a white band and with white fringe hung before the high altar, the two smaller altars and the long chancel rail.

Three wreaths, one of orchids, the others of ivy, smilax, and violets, with some palms, which had been placed on the coffin at Newburg, were displayed in an empty pew hard by. These were the only flowers in evidence. The galleries were filled with a sombre crowd, as were also the seats in the body of the church, and down the centre aisle from the Twenty-eighth Street entrance, flowed a dense, endless stream of humanity that parted at the foot of the bier, passed along each side of it, and diverged to empty itself through the doors on the right and on the left opening onto Twenty-ninth Street.

ARRIVAL OF THE BODY.

The body arrived in this city from Newburg by special train over the West Shore Road and the Forty-second Street Ferry. It was accompanied by the chief mourners, Mrs. George McGlynn, sister-in-law of the deceased, and her children, John J. and Anna; Frank McGlynn, a nephew; Dr. Peter Murray and Mrs. Murray, the Rev. Dr. McCready of Holy Cross Church, and Agnes, Mary, Cecelia, Joseph, and John Whalen, nieces and nephews of the dead priest; Archbishop Corrigan, and 15 priests and fully 500 laymen.

The priests included the Rev. Dr. Richard Lalor Burtsell of St. Mary's Church, Kingston; the Rev. Daniel Burke of Sts. Philip and Mary Church, Bedford Park; the Rev. Thomas P. McLaughlin of the Church of the Transfiguration, this city; the Rev. Thomas McLaughlin of the Church of the Blessed Saviour, New Rochelle; Mgr. Cannon of Buffalo; Fathers O'Connell and Dooley, Dr. McGlynn's assistants at St. Mary's, Newburg, and Fathers O'Keefe and Smith.

The procession went straight to St. Stephen's, where the body arrived soon after 6 o'clock, and was met at the main entrance, on Twenty-eighth Street, by the Rev. Charles H. Colton, rector of the church, his entire staff of assistants, Fathers John J. McCabe, Thomas F. O'Connor, Joseph P. Donohue, and Austin Dudley Curnion. All were vested and were attended by the altar and chant boys. The body was received according to the ritual, the De Profundis and Miserere being sung as it was being borne up the aisle to the catafalque.

THRONG IN TH CHURCH.

Meanwhile the church had become so filled that there was barely room for the deputations that had accompanied the body from Newburg. The procession, as it advanced from the ferry, had been constantly swelled until it formed a great crowd when the church was reached, and the majority of these people had to wait for a time outside. A large force of police was on hand, both inside and outside, under Inspector Harley and Capt. J. J. Delaney of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station.

It comprised 110 patrolmen, 4 Roundsmen, and 2 Sergeants. The police arrangements were admirable. Forty men ordered to the sidewalk from the church steps to Third Avenue, and through this lane the waiting throng began to pass shortly before 7 o'clock. The people formed a line that turned far down the avenue, and the length of the line was maintained by others who flocked from every direction. A number of fakirs who appeared with packets of portraits of Father McGlynn, which they sold at 5 and 10 cents the portrait, speedily disposed of their stocks.

The police had no difficulty in handling the crowd. The people were silent and sad. There were men and women of all sorts and conditions. Carriages drove up, fashionably dressed men and women alighted, took their places in the line, and passed in. They did not have long to wait. Once set going, the stream was kept moving steadily, and in this way the crowd was absorbed as it gathered, so that the multitude was enabled to view the body and there was no particular hindrance to circulation on Third Avenue.

As the people poured out of the rear doors on Twenty-ninth Street they dispersed rapidly, though not a few walked around the block and passed in again to get another view of the beloved priest's face.

GATHERED TO HONOR A MEMORY.

The scene inside the church was a truly remarkable one. The procession in the aisle comprised people of all sorts—children of tender age, white-haired men and women bent with the weight of years, workgirls, men in their labor-soiled garments and with grimy hands and faces, the crippled and infirm, and even the blind.

Many women wept. Strong men's eyes were dim with tears. Children looked awed and cried in sympathy with their elders. Not a few women were in mourning. At each end of the altar rail were groups of men and women kneeling in prayer. The way kept by the police from the aisle to the side doors was also edged with kneeling people. The persons who filled the pews and galleries were also praying. As the crowd was of all conditions, so it included Catholics, Protestants, and Jews.

It was evident from the expression on their faces that most of them had come not out of morbid curiosity, but in sorrow, impelled by the desire to look for the last time upon the face of him whose death they regarded as a personal loss.

Toward 10:30 o'clock the crowd fell off, and at the half hour precisely the church was closed, only the intimate friends and a few members of the Holy Name Society and of the east side branch of the Single Tax Commission of the Anti-Poverty Society remaining to watch by the body.

Among those who viewed the body were Father Ducey, John McMackin, Commissioner of Labor Statistics; Sylvester Malone, nephew of the late Father Malone; George Smith, Chairman of the east side branch of the Single Tax Commission of the Anti-Poverty Society, and John J. Bealin, Superintendent of the Free Employment Bureau.

THE FUNERAL SERVICES.

The funeral services will take place this morning at 9:30 o'clock. The chanters will be the Rev. Thomas P. McLaughlin of the Church of the Transfiguration and the Rev. Thomas F. O'Connor of St. Stephen's. Lessons will be read by Bishop Farley, the Rev. Michael J. Henry, rector of the Mission of Our Lady of the Rosary, and the Rev. Dr. James T. Curran of Peekskill, formerly assistant at St. Stephen's under Father McGlynn. Low mass of requiem will be celebrated by the Rev. Charles McCready. The funeral oration will be delivered by the Right Rev. Mgr. J. F. Mooney, Vicar General. The final absolution will be given by Archbishop Corrigan.

The musical programme, sung by the quartet and chorus, will be as follows:

"Ave Verum" ..... Gounod
"Alma Redemptoris" ..... Weber
"O Salutaris" ..... Wells
Absolution service, "Libera Me Domine."

As the body is being borne out, "Nearer, My God to Thee" and "Rock of Ages" will be sung in English.

LAW AS TO THE MASS.

The fact that this is the octave of the Epiphany, Father Colton explained last night, precludes the celebration of solemn high mass of requiem a second time, with the body present. The laws of the Church on this point are very strict, and it is regarded as a concession to the clergy and pastors that the present service can be held. This was only rendered possible through a recent decree. For this reason the Libera was omitted from the service at Newburg in order that it might be reserved for the service to-day.

Admission to the church will be by ticket only. Special provision has been made for delegations of the several religious orders in the Catholic Church, and tickets of admission were sent to many prominent Protestant clergymen who were well acquainted with the deceased priest. Among the delegations will be sixty letter carriers in uniform. They will attend the service in a body as a tribute from the Post Office employes to the memory of Father McGlynn, who in conjunction with the late Congressman Cox, worked successfully to secure many reforms in the letter carrier service.

Capt. Delaney will have about 300 policemen in and about the church this morning, and another 100 will be in readiness to help, if necessary, in handling the enormous crowds that are expected to assemble. The interment will be in Calvary Cemetery.

FEAR LOSSES WERE HEAVY

London Awaits Gen. White's Casualty List with Dread.

BULLER IS STILL INACTIVE

Late Advices Show that the Suffolk Regiment Walked Blindly Into a Boer Ambuscade.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The War Office announces that the list of British casualties at Ladysmith last Saturday has not yet been received.

The following dispatch, dated at Frere Camp, Jan. 10, noon, has been received from Gen. Buller:

"A Transvaal telegram gives the enemy's loss at Ladysmith on Saturday as four killed and fifteen wounded; and this after, as is admitted, they had endured a withering fire from six masked batteries and been defeated at all points.

"Natives here assert that the Boer loss in one commando alone was 150 killed and wagonloads of wounded. The heaviest loss is said to have been among the Free Staters, who were forced by the Transvaalers into the most dangerous places."

This curious dispatch is all the War Office has issued to-night. It makes not the slightest mention of the position or doings of the British forces. It may be interpreted to mean that Ladysmith is safe; but it is more likely intended to prepare the British public for a terrible list of casualties.

The Daily Mail has the following dispatch, dated Jan. 8, from Frere Camp:

"With the exception of the usual shelling of the Boer positions by the naval guns, the British force remains inactive.

"Eight Boer camps were seen to-day by a patrol along the Tugela in a westerly direction. All were quiet.

"Natives say that when the British reconnitred near Colenso on Saturday the Boers hurried from Springfield. This supports the belief that Colenso was weakened to attack Ladysmith."

The Standard has received the following, dated Jan. 8, from its special correspondent at Frere Camp:

"I hear on good authority that President Kruger sent word to the Boer headquarters asking why Ladysmith had not been attacked, and that the reply was: 'We should lose too many men.' His answer to this excuse was the suggestion that the Free Staters might be put in the forefront. This hint was taken and the attack delivered.

"President Kruger's advice was so far good that the Free Staters behaved better than the Transvaalers have done. At all events, they managed to seize a hill. Later in the day the Transvaalers retired before Gen. White's counter attack, amid the jeers of the Free Staters, who actually stuck to their position until they were bayoneted in the ditch. After this affair it is almost certain that the allies will quarrel.

"A heavy gun mounted on Umbulwana Hill has been firing since daybreak. Evidently the siege of Ladysmith is still maintained."

A dispatch to The Daily Telegraph, dated Monday, Jan. 8, at noon, from Frere Camp, says:

"Firing from the Boer positions around Ladysmith began early to-day. It still continues, but the cannonading is light and irregular."

The Durban correspondent of The Standard, telegraphing Tuesday, says that 1,200 Indian stretcher bearers started for the front the previous night, and that their departure was regarded in Durban as indicative of a renewal of the fighting.

A dispatch from Rensburg, Cape Colony, dated Monday, Jan. 8, says that it is reported there officially, with reference to the disaster to the First Battalion of the Suffolk regiment, that Lieut. Col. Watson marched the regiment in close column to the top of the hill at midnight. He assembled the officers, and was addressing them, just at daybreak, when the enemy volleyed at a distance of thirty paces. The Colonel, his Adjutant, and two other officers were killed.

The Suffolks, who had scarcely fired a shot, fled back to the pickets, about 1,000 yards away, some one having shouted "Retire!" About 150, however, remained, lost heavily, and finally surrendered.

The operations since have been unimportant. Several reconnaissances have been made, and these show that the enemy is jealously guarding his communications to the north.

LORD ROBERTS AT CAPE TOWN.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Gen. Lord Roberts, the new commander of the British forces in South Africa, and his chief of staff, Gen. Lord Kitchener, have arrived at Cape Town.

With their arrival it is assumed that their clearer vision, supported by 35,000 fresh men who are due to arrive in South Africa within thirty days, will alter the situation, and that the fourth month of the campaign will witness the beginning of victories for the British arms.

They are not, however, expected to produce definite results for some days; but their mere presence will restore the shaken confidence of the men at the front in their Generals.

Lord Roberts finds 120,000 men on the defensive or watching for an opening.

Lord Methuen's health, according to The Daily Mail, has "broken down," and the Field Marshal may relieve him. Possibly some others will be relieved of important commands. There is certainly plenty of rank in evidence in South Africa. In addition to the Field Marshal, there are two full Generals, four Lieutenant Generals, and twelve or fourteen Major Generals.

DUTCH DISLOYALTY INCREASES.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Cape Town correspondent of The Daily Mail, telegraphing Monday, says:

"The Boer successes have been followed by a tremendous outburst of enthusiasm and Boer sympathy in the western part of the colony. Reports from Paarl say the whole district is made hideous at night by bands of young men parading in the villages and singing the Transvaal volkslied, while the children are everywhere practicing the national songs of the republics. The following are specimens of statements believed by the Western Dutch: 'Buller and Rhodes are prisoners,' and 'Two thousand Boers secretly sailed and captured Cape Town.'"

The Cape Town correspondent of The Daily Chronicle, telegraphing Monday, says:

"The Boers assert that eighty natives fought on the side of the British at Kuruman. They say their object in capturing the place was to open the way for a commando to go south into the Prieska and Konhardt districts, where the Boers hope to foment rebellion. It is reported that the Boer leaders allow every burgher to return home one week out of every seven."

SPANIARDS OFFER TO ENLIST.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Gibraltar correspondent of The Daily Telegraph says:

"Three thousand time-expired Spanish soldiers from the Cuban war have offered their services to Great Britain in South Africa. The Governor here has informed their agent that he is not authorized to enlist foreigners."

The War Office has authorized a special Yeomanry Corps. Every trooper joining will pay for his own kit and mount, for transport, and for all other expenses until his arrival in South Africa, and will then give his services to his country and pay for the privilege into the fund for widows and orphans the amount he would receive as a trooper. Several influential gentlemen have already enrolled.

The authorities have urged the committee of the Yeomanry Hospital Fund to provide for 520 instead of 150 beds, and the committee is appealing for at least £50,000 more.

BRITISH MINISTRY IN DANGER.

Storm of Indignation Bursting Over the Heads of the Salisbury Cabinet.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The plight of British arms in South Africa is overshadowed for the present by the storm which is bursting over the head of the home Government. The Manchester speeches of A. J. Balfour, the Government leader in the House of Commons, have loosed such a torrent of criticism from the press and individuals of his own party that were Parliament to reassemble to-day it is doubtful if the Conservatives would retain power, in spite of their tremendous majority of the past session. The pent-up dissatisfaction with the Government's lack of energy in waging the war is no longer concealed. When such ardent Conservative papers as The Times and Globe come out boldly with reproof there is no knowing where the agitation will end. The provincial press has already taken up the cry. For the moment Mr. Balfour is the scapegoat, but there is a terrible rod in pickle for the Marquis of Lansdowne, while Lord Salisbury and other Cabinet Ministers will not escape unless a wonderful change comes over the war situation.

It is learned that the Conservative leaders privately admit the gravity of their position, but fail to see what can be done. In the meanwhile, they hope that successes in the field will abate the popular clamor. Some of the Conservative papers go so far as to regret the extreme age of the Cabinet Ministers, and refer to the Cabinet as a body of patriarchs. Under these circumstances it is doubtful whether events transpiring between now and the reassembling of Parliament will be powerful enough to restore confidence in the Government and maintain its majority.

There is the important alternative that Lord Lansdowne or Lord Wolseley may be sacrificed. A correspondent learns that Lord Wolseley not only disapproved of Lord Roberts's appointment to the chief command of the British troops in South Africa, but allowed his disapproval to be generally known, while it is a fact that he knew nothing of the Government's intentions in this respect until he saw the announcement of the appointment in the newspapers. It is said that if it ever comes to a public disagreement between the Commander in Chief and the Secretary of State for War it will be a fight far more bitter than the one waged between Gens. Alger and Miles. Whatever ensues, the immediate future will doubtless see attacks on the Government such as Lord Salisbury has not had to withstand during the course of his political career.

The borrowing powers conferred on the Government at the last session of Parliament are almost exhausted. About seven and a half out of the eight millions of Treasury bills authorized have already been issued. But the large revenues coming in will probably furnish ample funds until Parliament meets.

Mr. Balfour, at a luncheon given in Manchester this afternoon, made a speech, in which he repudiated the accusation that he was a "thick and thin supporter of the War Office." He declared that even if an angel from heaven told him it was possible in a great war to carry out everything as written on paper, he should know that the angel was drawing upon his imagination. It was not true, he added, that the War Office had sent the British Army into the field with guns which placed them at a hopeless disadvantage with their enemies. He did not claim that the army system was perfect, but the critics ought not to ignore the extraordinary military problems of the present war, between which and the problems with which Continental headquarters staffs had to deal there was no parallel.

For the first time in the history of the world the country had to meet an enemy entirely mounted. Hereafter it would be recognized that guns were not as mobile as horse soldiers, and that field artillery must be made part of the regular equipment of every army. But, seeing that the British War Office had not lagged behind the best military opinion of to-day, it was ludicrous to charge it with want of prescience. He was sure justice would be done in due time to the administrative system of the army. The last thing the Government desired was any undue concealment of unpleasant facts.

Sir Charles Dilke, member of Parliament for the Forest of Dean Division of Gloucestershire, speaking at Cinderford to-night, said that A. J. Balfour, the Government leader in the House of Commons, had asserted that a sufficiency of steps had been taken by the Government, considering the knowledge possessed at the time, but had admitted a full knowledge of the Boer armaments.

Sir Charles declared that he was prepared to ask in the House of Commons whether the Government had taken sufficient steps—"the right steps in the military situation, with due regard to the facts known at the time.

"The language Lord Salisbury employed in Parliament," he continued, "constituted an unnecessary menace—the very thing which Mr. Balfour said it was a Government's first duty to abstain from—and made war probable. More than this, the Government is responsible for the fact that at the outset of the war we were without guns enough for one army corps."

Sir Charles criticised the Government's "refusal of capable colonial troops, qualified to ride and shoot, and their acceptance, instead of these, of 10,000 imperial Yeomanry."

Of the latter he said it had been alleged that they were neither good horsemen nor good shots. In his own opinion, the Yeomanry, he said, probably rode well enough, but there was a very grave doubt as to the shooting capabilities of a large percentage.

The Standard summarizes the general situation thus:

"Well, the campaign has lasted three months. We have something like 120,000 troops in South Africa. With this huge army distributed over the country, we are still powerless to relieve three garrisons from investment. We have still to see large portions of both colonies in the hands of the enemy.

"We have driven the invaders back at no single point. We are actually further from the hostile frontiers than we were on the day that the ultimatum was delivered. The work which Ministers believed could be effectually performed with 25,000 men has not been done, has not even been begun, by four or five times that number. Can any one fail to admit that this is evidence of a grave miscalculation of forces and facts?"

The Times, in an editorial criticising at great length the Government's conduct of the war, alludes to the "stupid and perverse misstatements" that have been made, and demands that the "practice of the non-revelation of facts" be abandoned. It insists strongly upon knowing "the truth, the whole truth about the situation," and finds fault with Mr. Balfour's defense piecemeal.

Deny Chartering the St. Paul.

James A. Wright, Vice President of the American Line, said yesterday that there was no truth in the dispatch from London that the steamer St. Paul of the American Line had been chartered by the British Government The company, he added, was under contract with the United States to carry the mails, and the company therefore could not charter its steamers to any other Government. Nor was there any intention or desire on the part of the company to charter its steamers, as it needed them all for its own business.

BRITISH LINES LOSE TRAFFIC.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Times, in a special article dealing with the Delagoa Bay question, expresses the opinion that the endeavor of the Boers to overrun Natal lends confirmation to assertions made before the war by prominent Boers that they would seize Durban as a port. The article proceeds to point out that by the through rate system, specially favorable to Transvaal shipments over the Delagoa-Transvaal Railway, German shipowners have been able to secure traffic with little risk of examination at Continental ports or at Delagoa Bay. The writer goes on to say:

"It is known that, in anticipation of future military developments in the Transvaal toward the Zoutpansberg District, a considerable amount of stores and munitions of war have been forwarded for some time past, chiefly from the Continent.

"It is understood that the Union Steamship Company, besides ceasing to have Herr Port, the Transvaal Consul General at Lorenzo Marques, as their agent, have withdrawn their steamers from the Delagoa Bay route. The Castle Company has done the same, and made arrangements that will prevent any use at Delagoa Bay of their vessels for anti-British purposes. Measures in the same direction have been taken with regard to the Empresa Landing Company.

"The withdrawal of the steamers of two British mail companies may, however, increase Great Britain's difficulties by throwing the carrying trade still more into the hands of Continental shippers and diverting business to America for handling by foreign steamers from American ports."

The article concludes by again urging the Government to endeavor to secure a more strict examination.

SOUTH AFRICAN DISCUSSION.

Nineteenth Century Club Listens to a Debate on the War—An Attack on the Aldermen.

The South African question was discussed last night at the meeting of the Nineteenth Century Club at the Waldorf-Astoria. Thomas G. Shearman supported the British side and George W. Van Siclen the Boer side of the controversy. Mr. Van Siclen wore in his buttonhole a silken scarf of the Boer colors.

Mr. Shearman said that he took the broad view that God had not given the earth in quarter sections to Boers, Germans, French, British, or even Americans. He denied the right of any people to fence in a given amount of the earth larger than they could improve and say to the rest of mankind, "You shall not enter except to become my slave." He denied the right of a man to make a slave of any one who should come within rifle shot. This principle, he said, was the one over which the war was being fought. The Boers were a people, he said, with many excellent points. "They are six feet high," said Mr. Shearman, "and look down upon most of us who are not so tall with that contempt peculiar to giants."

They were proud, also, of their language, he said, which was but a patois of about 400 words. They read nothing but the Bible, mostly the Old Testament. They regarded as a mark of distinction the numerous suits of clothes which they could wear at one time, sleeping in the same garments in which they worked, and rarely bathing. He directed attention to the fact that the Boers had themselves invaded a country in which they made subject the natives, 80,000 Boers dominating 700,000 natives. The troubles went back to the breaking up by the British of slavery and to the work of British missionaries among the natives.

Of the Outlanders, he said that they had been practically invited into the Transvaal after the discovery of gold and the Boers had sold to them three-fifths of all the land, Krüger himself selling a farm for $500,000. He rehearsed the history of the naturalization troubles. From a two years' probation it had been extended to fourteen. The Boers conducted no mining enterprises and made no improvements. They did not know how and did not want to know how.

He touched upon official corruption and the wealth of Krüger and the members of the official circle, and described the Government as an oligarchy worse than a despotism. Monopolies and taxation were then reviewed. Mr. Shearman, in conclusion, returned to the original contention that God had given the earth to all the children of men.

Mr. Van Siclen drew parallels between the Boers and the American colonists. The Boers, he said, were the Pilgrim Fathers and the negroes were the Indians of this continent. The Boers were now facing a great power and almost extermination for the same principles for which the Americans had fought in the Revolution. Of the taxes, he said that the Transvaal Government collected 2½ per cent. on the gold taken out of the country, while 10 per cent. was taxed on the gold coming out of the Klondike and 50 per cent. on gold from Rhodesia.

Reference had been made to the long refusal to provide a government for Johannesburg. What about a Government for Dawson? he asked. Objection had been raised to the requirement that Dutch should be taught in the schools. In this country, he said, English must be taught in schools. It was curious, he said, that Great Britain should take such an interest in facilitating the expatriation of her sons by seeking to lessen the restrictions upon their becoming citizens of another nation. Great Britain had once acknowledged the independence of the Boers, and that done, what was the use of talking about humanity, rights, and the question of dividing the earth into quarter sections?

Mr. Van Siclen declared that many of the Boer officials were Roman Catholics, the point having been raised that Catholics were barred from citizenship.

Mr. Shearman, replying, spoke of the form of the Government, which led his opponent to interject the remark that it was like the City Council. Mr. Shearman said there was a resemblance in one respect—the New York City Fathers had recently passed resolutions of sympathy. After a few words about that action he exclaimed: "We all know our Aldermen. Almost to a man they are thieves!"

The debate was concluded a few minutes later.

LAKE SHORE TAKES LAKE ERIE.

Vanderbilts' Big Deal Formally Accomplished—W. H. Newman Elected President—New Directorate.

That W. K. Vanderbilt's yachting trip will not in any way interfere with the development of his plans and systems and that those having his intimate confidence in railroad affairs have a perfect understanding with him was evident yesterday by the smoothness and celerity with which the control of the Lake Erie and Western Railroad passed to the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway.

The deal was consummated in the offices of the Lake Erie and Western, in the Union Trust Company Building. In the morning President W. H. Newman of Lake Shore and H. McK. Twombly, one of the Directors of this company, met at the Grand Central Station and went to the Lake Erie and Western offices. Later Charles F. Cox, Treasurer of the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis Railway Company, and officers of a dozen roads connected with the Vanderbilt systems left the Grand Central Station for the same destination. Chairman Frederick W. Whitridge of the Lake Erie and Western board received them and presided at a meeting at which three-fourths of Lake Erie and Western stock, or about $18,000,000, was represented. In half an hour the transactions incidental to the new control were concluded. It was announced that after it had been established that the control of Lake Erie and Western stock had passed to the Vanderbilts, H. McK. Twombly, J. Pierpont Morgan, and W. H. Newman, the company had been reorganized for the Lake Shore system. Directors Gen. Samuel Thomas, Erskine M. Phelps of Chicago, Edward Tuck, and L. M. Schwan retired. W. K. and F. W. Vanderbilt, H. McK. Twombly, and J. Pierpont Morgan were elected Directors, and form a majority of the board, with President George F. Baker of the First National Bank, President Henry W. Cannon of the Chase National Bank, F. W. Whitridge, and John W. Doane of Chicago Directors of the old board. President Newman of Lake Shore was elected President of Lake Erie and Western, filling the vacancy created by the death of Calvin S. Brice. L. M. Schwan, Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer, resigned, and was succeeded by C. F. Cox. The office of Chairman of the board was abolished.

For the present the Indianapolis staff of Lake Erie and Western, Vice President and General Manager George L. Bradbury, Assistant Treasurer A. D. Thomas, and Auditor W. A. Wildback, will remain, while their titles will be changed. All the working force of the road will be kept.

None of the officials talked of the completion of the deal, and the plans for operating Lake Erie and Western except to say that Lake Erie and Western's property has been turned over to Lake Shore and that to-day Lake Erie and Western will be operated as part of the Lake Shore system by President Newman and his staff.

NEW ROUTE FOR COAL SHIPPERS.

Western Fields and Seaboard Will Soon Be Connected.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 10.—The much-talked-of route for coal shippers from the coalfields of Western Pennsylvania and the great lakes to the Atlantic seaboard, via the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg, the New York Central, and the Philadelphia and Reading Road will soon be realized. To-night President Arthur G. Yates of the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg, with a party of officers of the other lines mentioned in the new traffic arrangement, arrived in Pittsburg to complete the details for the plan.

The route to the Eastern cities is practically an air-line outlet for the fuel shipped from the coalfields of the northwestern part of the State. At some future time the route will likely be used for through passenger trains to the East.

Alleged Brooklynite Under Arrest.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 10.—John M. Linger, who says his home is at 102 Central Avenue, Brooklyn, was arrested here to-day as a suspicious persons. He was found to have in his possession 75,000 shares of Cripple Creek Gold Mine and a number of pawn tickets. Suspicion was directed to him because he was trying to dispose of his mining shares at the rate of 5,000 shares for $50, or almost any sum offered.

Joseph M. Sparks Changes Companies.

Joseph M. Sparks, the Irish comedian who has been a member of Miss May Irwin's company for the last five years, has retired from her cast and engaged to appear in the new play, "Broadway to Tokio," which will be produced next Monday night under the management of Henry B. Sire at the New York Theatre. Mr. Sparks's place in Miss Irwin's cast will be taken by James H. Callahan.

Son Born to Mr. and Mrs. Miner.

A son was born last night to Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Miner, at their home, at Seventy-sixth Street and Riverside Drive. Mrs. Miner was known professionally as Miss Anne O'Neill. Prior to her marriage she was a member of William H. Crane's company.

Big Oysters from Japan.

From The St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Oyster cutlets will soon be on the menu of the Pacific States Fifty barrels of the famous Yezo oysters of Japan, which grow to the length of a foot will be planted in the tidewater of Washington and Oregon.

ALBANY SOCIETY DINNER

Capt. Sigsbee the Guest of Honor at Delmonico's.

APPLAUSE FOR THE TRANSVAAL

Justice Woodward Evokes Cheers by His Plea for the Justice of Its Cause in the War.

The Albany Society held its annual dinner last night at Delmonico's. The main banqueting hall was filled with the sons of the capital city, who gathered to celebrate the sixth anniversary of their organization. A delegation of Albanians, headed by ex-Mayor Manning, attended the dinner.

The principal guest was Capt. Sigsbee, now Commander of the Texas and formerly of the Maine. Capt. Sigsbee is an Albanian and was appointed from that city to the academy at Annapolis after having been graduated from the Albany academy. He responded to the toast "The United States Navy," and received a tremendous ovation when he rose to speak.

Louis Stern presided in the absence of the President, F. P. Olcott, and William H. McElroy acted as toastmaster. Mr. McElroy started the after-dinner speaking by announcing that, although he was opposed to punning, he could not resist the temptation of saying that this was a "capital night." "Our mother Albany," he said, "at whose feet we gather, looks at us fondly, and like another Cornelia says, 'Exhibit 1—these are my jewels.'"

Mr. McElroy said that Albany beat Rome of old in that, while Rome only rested on seven hills, Albany could look down from more than that number, and could also occasionally look down on Troy, and where Rome only had the yellow Tiber, Albany had the blue Hudson at her feet.

Capt. Sigsbee was introduced after the health of the President of the United States had been drunk standing, and the company had sung "The Star-Spangled Banner." In introducing him Mr. McElroy spoke of him as an Albany boy, whose presence lent distinction to a high festival.

WELCOME TO CAPT. SIGSBEE.

When the toastmaster mentioned the Maine and her gallant commander, the assemblage rose to its feet and, waving handkerchiefs and napkins, cheered the Captain to the echo. Capt. Sigsbee said that he was doubly glad to be present, because in honoring him the company honored the branch of the service he loved and honored him as an Albanian. He then told of his days in the Academy at Albany and at Annapolis, of his forty years in the service, during which he had commanded four sailing vessels and five steam vessels, and said that any emergency would always find the navy ready to meet it.

In introducing Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff, who responded to the toast, "The Empire State," Mr. McElroy said that it behooved the company to make the most of its opportunity to greet the Lieutenant Governor, for the mutations of politics might soon send him from Albany to Washington. At this there was great cheering, which was kept up during Mr. Woodruff's speech.

Mr. Woodruff in his speech referred to local matters in Albany, and said that while not to the Albany manner born, he had yet been "brought up" there; "for," he said, "as a Trustee of Public Buildings, charged with the task of making all kinds of contracts for the Capitol and weighted with the responsibility of selecting a Superintendent of Public Buildings who, under the direction of the Trustees, can do the trick of serving the best interests of the State at the same time that he gives complete satisfaction to the Republican organization, I have been 'brought up' a great deal."

Justice John Woodward of the Supreme Court was warmly received when he rose to respond to the toast "The Dutch in Albany and in South Africa," and his references to the Boers and to President Krüger drew from the assemblage the warmest applause. Justice Woodward said in part:

JUSTICE WOODWARD'S SPEECH.

"We celebrate to-night a historic triumph. News has just come by way of South Africa that the Dutch have taken Holland, and I know that you will rejoice with me because of this unlooked for event. There will also be rejoicing on the other side when the Hollanders learn that the Dutch have retaken New York and that New Amsterdam has been rehabilitated by the descendants of the Patroons.

"The race so long accused by the British of wasting its slow energies in building beaver dams has diverted its powers to the production of dams to English aggression, and it is a diversion that the English do not seem to be very fond of either. It seems, indeed, to have had a rather depressing effect, for an Englishman no longer spells 'God' with a little 'g,' or uses a capital 'M' for his mighty 'me.' Tulips threaten to become more popular than roses, and Dutch orange may soon supplant the British red. The forgotten edicts of the canons of Dort are once more thundered from the cannon of the Transvaal, and their echoes encircle the world with applause. Gentlemen, the Boers, your cousins and my friends! (Applause.)

"I personally believe that the question now to be settled by the sword strikes deeper than the superficial subterfuge that has asked for its solution would lead us to believe. Let us, however, consider this subject dispassionately—free from prejudice and partiality. Let not the fact of our descent cause us to look at either side with favor; let not the identity of blood or the similarity of language and of institutions blind us to the true points at issue here. It is not race, it is not creed, it is not tongue that shall determine our attitude—it is justice."

Justice Woodward referred to the early struggles of the Boers, and, coming down to modern times, he said: "And now this corpse, this dead word 'suzerainty,' has been revived to justify the designs of a monster conspiracy, to overturn the whole fabric of the Boer republic, to secure the control of its valuable gold mines, and to annex its territory, 'by the grace of God,' to the British Crown.

THE FREE STATE'S GRIEVANCE.

"About 1870 the diamond fields of the Free State were discovered, and it was not long before England found a pretext to annex them. England indeed promised a compensation of £90,000—£90,000 for mines whose annual yield is £15,000,000. And the £90,000 still remain to be paid. Of the taking of these mines, Sir Arthur Cunynhame, commander in chief of the British forces, said: "It is downright robbery, and every English gentleman feels ashamed of it.' And when Sir Alfred Milner recently began to assert English suzerainty also over the Free State, what remained for her to do save to cast in her lot with the Transvaal?

"And thus arose this war. Is it not a magnificent spectacle, this struggle of an infant race of 300,000 people against an overgrown and gigantic empire of 300,000,000? This small band of patriots headed by the immortal Krüger stands guard at the Thermopylae of Afrikander civilization, guarding their country's liberties against the hordes of unrighteousness.

"What a splendid appeal, that of the Secretary of the South African Republic: 'Brother Afrikanders: The great day has come. The God of our fathers will fight with us, the Lord whose arm is not shortened, for He will help those who seek Him in their extremity. Let us not put our trust in Princes, but raise our eyes devoutly to God, our banner. By Him we shall perform great deeds. Even as mighty Spain, with its bloodthirsty Alva and its invincible Armada, was humbled in the dust, so, too, will the Lord deliver them into our hands.'"

Justice Woodward went at great length into the questions of the franchise and taxation, the first of which he said was the catchword to tickle the long ears of the crowd, while paramountcy was the sugar-coated pill prepared for the public palate. The greed for gold, he said, was the passion now flaming into the blaze of unholy battle.

In arraigning Great Britain Justice Woodward said: "Oh, England of the Magna Charta, political Utopia, of our youthful dreams, land of homes and the country of personal freedom, where every man's house is his castle,' how is thy glory fallen among the nations! O England of Hampden, apostle of peace, whose sword only a few months ago seemed about to be sheathed forever in splendid inaction, what is now thy attitude before the world?"

TOAST TO PRESIDENT KRUGER.

In conclusion the speaker proposed a toast to President Krüger in these words: "And now, let me propose a toast to that greatest of modern Dutchmen, the William the Silent of South Africa, the most remarkable personality alive, Oom Paul Krüger. What shall we say of this indomitable old hero, whose brawn built out of solid rock is the bulwark against which the chosen legions of time's mightiest empire thunder in vain? There he stands, stern and immovable, as firm-fixed in belief and as deep-rooted in principle as that grand covenanter of old, Oliver Cromwell. How can we magnify a Colossus, whose brain is the nerve of South Africa, whose personality is so gigantic that it overshadows both friend and foe, whose will is the shaping policy of his country and the aspiration of his race?

"Friends, I believe the longed-for dawn is at hand. I believe that your brothers, bone of your bone, flesh of your flesh, in South Africa will make that consummation nearer. They are perhaps solving the world riddle better than they know, as they break through the toils that the octopus of greed has woven around them. Like their forefathers and yours, they are the instruments that destiny has chosen for the accomplishment of a great work.

"Their drums are beating the recessional from the appalling decadence that is the tendency of our metropolitan civilization. They stand for the old principles of virtue and honesty. They are armed with the sword of justice and with the armor of righteousness. They are aglow with the ardor of faith, and they will win. And their victory will inaugurate a new century and dedicate it to justice and to peace."

In the absence of James W. Eaton, ex-Mayor Manning spoke to the toast, "The City of Albany." George H. Daniels responded to "What I Know about Albany," and Prof. H. P. Warren to "The Albany Academy."

MILAN PUBLIC SCHOOL BURNED.

Panic Seizes 300 Pupils in Michigan Town—Two Are Injured.

MILAN, Mich., Jan. 10.—Fire destroyed the Milan public school this morning. There were 300 pupils in the building, and the fire obtained a good headway before it was discovered. The children became panic-stricken, and but for the work of Preceptress Clara Eayes and Prof. C. H. Marriack great loss of life might have resulted.

Two pupils, Edith Cavanagh and Emma Bentley were badly burned and may die. Miss Eayes, after helping to get out the children, was compelled to jump from a window. She was not seriously injured. The building was valued at $10,000.

NEGROES DRAW COLOR LINE.

Refuse to Ride in the Same Trolley Cars with Italians.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Jan. 10.—Color lines are closely drawn on Neville Island, where the American Steel and Wire Company, the Wire Trust, is erecting an immense plant. Three hundred negro laborers working on the excavations for the buildings struck work to-day because they were forced to ride in the same trolley cars with Italians and other foreigners to and from the island. The foreigners are employed by the Pressed Steel Car Company. The negroes said they were afraid of contracting smallpox, which has been epidemic at McKee's Rocks.

SHOT THROUGH JEALOUSY.

Woman May Lose Her Life for Going Out with a New Admirer.

Charles J. Sweeney shot Mrs. Susan Parker early yesterday morning in the hallway of 185 East Eighty-first Street, where the two had been occupying a furnished room.

Mrs. Parker had gone to the theatre with a man named Reilly. Upon her return she found Sweeney waiting in the doorway with a revolver in his hand. Reilly ran away, and after some words between the two Sweeney fired point blank, the shot taking effect in the woman's left breast.

Mrs. Parker walked to the home of her parents, at 225 East Ninety-second Street, where she fell unconscious at the door. She was later taken to the Presbyterian Hospital, where she was revived. She told Coroner Zucca that Sweeney had shot her because he was jealous of her.

Sweeney was arrested an hour afterward. He was still flourishing the revolver. He said the shooting was accidental. He is a married man, twenty-eight years old, and until recently lived with his wife and two children at 301 East Ninety-first Street.

Mrs. Parker is twenty-one years old. She is the wife of Joseph Parker of 150 East Ninety-second Street. She left Parker shortly after their marriage. Her condition is said to be critical.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

Linoleum and Oil Cloth Remnants

LIBERAL pieces, though.

But remnants are our worst bugbear, and this morning we shall begin selling these at a fourth to half the full prices

Shorter the piece, shorter the price, but maybe this bit of detail will make it clearer—

Linoleums at the reduced prices are 15c to 50c a square yard—pieces run from 1 to 20 yards, and are not to be cut.

Inlaid Linoleums, 1 to 16 yard pieces, at 75c a square yard.

Oil Cloths, 8½c to 20c a square yard.

3,000 yards of Straw Mattings, in pieces of 15 to 20 yards, are marked at 7c to 25c a yard.

74 odd rolls of Chinese and Japanese Mattings are reduced a third.

All these goods have been moved to the Third Floor, and are ready as you read.

Important Upholstery News

PRICES REDUCED

American upholstery stuffs are practically all made in Philadelphia—at least, almost all the mills are there. All save one are smokeless now—a stubborn strike has scotched the wheels, and if it continues another month (as is likely), our next season's supplies must all be imported—and you'll have to pay for it. Good times have already sent prices up.

These facts you have a right to know.

But our stock adjustments go on, just as though higher prices were not here and coming stronger yet.

And reductions are large and important. Each bit is fresh, unless possibly among the remnant lots, and will serve you as well as though picked from a carload.

Twenty colorings of English double-face Cretonnes for draperies—15c yd.; were 25c to 50c.

Another group, also imported, 35c from 50c and 55c.

Another group at 45c. These were 60c. to 85c.

Gobelin Tapestry, $1.75 instead of $2.50 yd.

Silk-and-wool Tapestry, $2.75 instead of $4.75 a yard.

Corduroy, 85c instead of 95c a yard.

Silk Damask, $3, $4, $5, instead of $4, $5.50 and $6.25 a yard.

Figured Jute Tapestry, 60c instead of 75c and 85c a yard.

Imported Jute Tapestry, $1 instead of $1.25 to $1.50 a yard.

Cotton Tapestry, 45c instead of 60c a yard.

Remnants—Tapestries and Damasks at a third of their value, and less; Velours and Corduroys at half their value, and under.

Odd lots of portieres—single curtains and pairs, at prices reduced one-third and one-half—a dozen kinds, at $1.50 to $25, formerly $2.50 to $37.50.

January is a good time to have furniture renovated and reupholstered. Our factory facilities are ample and, not only are prices fair, but you may be able to select the coverings needed from among reduced-price lots. Good frames are well worth keeping and freshening by new covers; inferior pieces are not worth bothering with. Careful men will call and estimate on any work proposed. Their report will be candid and complete. Third floor.

Krell Elite Grand Piano used.

Women's Handkerchiefs Initialed. Full assortment of letters, but only a few dozens of each. All linen, of course; hand-embroidered initial. They were thought very moderately priced at 25c. An importer's excess purchase becomes ours briefly—yours, at 15c each.

Very Stylish New Dresses

Fashion writers have their work simplified this Winter. Keeping pace with our productions is keeping well to the front. No matter how much work and study we give to it all, the results are for you—and are pleasing.

Developing styles are most noticeable in the skirts—in fact, our tailors protest that we are really showing Spring styles. Well and good.

The new Suits are selling at $25 to $67.50.

The new Skirts at $4 to $45.

Plaid Dress Goods—Reduced While plaids are in the fulness of your favor we reduce prices a third to a half on certain pretty lots that we cannot or shall not re-order. Maybe these details will tell the story even better:

60c for $1 Foule Plaids. Twelve color plays.

$1 for $2 Mohair Boucle Plaid Cheviot.

$1 for $1.50 Camel's Hair Plaids.

$1.50 for $2.75 Mohair nub-knot Plaids.

$1.50 for $3.50 Mohair and Novelty-weave Shepherd Plaids. Rotunda.

More New Cotton Fabrics

The cotton dress goods store is abloom. Each morning finds new blossoms out—and how gladly you pick them! A list? What help would that be? Come and see them—see cotton dignified as silk could be, or as saucy as the flowers of May. 12½c to $1 a yard.

Some of the fine things have been put up as Robes—skirt shaped and partly made; plenty of fabric for bodice. The Mercerized (or silk-like) batistes are favored for this treatment. $10.50 to $22.50 for an outfit.

Rotunda facing Broadway.

Less than 20,000 yards remain of the 100,000-yard lot of French Organdies (American printed) at 12½c a yard. Fourth avenue.

Fancy China Table Ware—Many Bargains This offering is mostly of French china, though there's some Austrian ware, too. Worthy qualities all, without a flaw; in attractive designs, and wonderfully low priced. Some richly decorated plates are offered at just half prices.

Bread-and-butter and tea sizes, at 25c each—were moderate enough at 50c.

Plates for salads, fruit, ice-cream, at 50c each, instead of $1.

There are various fine French china plates reduced this way: $1.50 sort at 75c each; $1.50 quality at $1 each; $2.10 quality at $1.25 each; $3 kind at $1.50 each.

$12 ice-cream sets are now $7; $6 pudding sets, 3 pieces, are now $3.75; $1 olive dishes are now 50c; $2 sugars and creams are now $1 a pair; $1.50 celery trays now $1, and $1 sugar baskets, now 65c.

And these are all of Austrian china; choose at 10c each though they were a good value at 25c. Tea and breakfast plates, oatmeal bowls, fruit saucers, tea cups and saucers and after-dinner cups and saucers—all 10c instead of 25c. Basement.

A Sale in the Japanese Store The exhibition here of things Japanese is always interesting. It has been made doubly attractive. Lowered prices on many pieces—jardinieres, pedestals and articles for general kitchen and dining-room use. Half prices, two-thirds prices, and others already far below to-day's market values.

Here are Tokanabi jardinieres, plain and gilt, in fancy designs, flower pot shapes, at 25c for 7-in. size, instead of 50c; the 7½-in. at 40c, though cheap at 60c, and the 8½-in. at 60c, formerly $1. Like reductions on Taizan, Imari, Seiji, and blue and white ware.

Some fancy colored 6-in. pots are 65c, instead of $1.25, and other sizes up to 10 in.—the latter reduced from $7.50 to $3.75.

And jardinieres with pedestals that were $6.50 to $9, are now $4.50 to $6.50.

Blue and white bowls, 7½ to 12 in., at 20c to $1—all greatly reduced prices. And plates, dishes, trays, chocolate pots, teapots and so, all exceptionally low. Basement.

More News of Furs Reducing so much of our regular fur stock a full fourth below recent current values has caused even more comment than the special selling of another furrier's fine stock at a loss.

Wanamaker furs stand for rightness in style and in quality. The inexpensive pieces are as good in their way as one could wish, while the finer pieces are really exceptional.

Collarettes of lynx, $15 from $20.

Storm Collars of stone marten, $38 from $55.

Storm Collars of dyed Alaska sable, $11.25 from $15.

Chinchilla Collarettes, pointed; ruffle and jabot; $75 from $100.

Combination Collarettes of Persian lamb and chinchilla; $93.25 from $125.

Combination Collarettes of Alaska seal and Hudson Bay sable, trimmed; $125 from $200.

Combination collarettes of stone marten and Persian lamb; $75 from $100.

Blue lynx Collarettes; $55 from $75.

Mink Capes; $90 from $125. Second floor.

The Muslin Underwear Sale

"More Room!" has been the cry from the heads of stocks. That more space is required for each succeeding event of this nature is most gratifying evidence of your appreciation. Indisputable proof, too, of how these semi-annual sales continue to grow in magnitude. Now, after trying to get along for a week, we've been obliged to devote a large area on the Fifth Floor to the selling. Here will be found these special lots, from some of which not more than three garments will be sold to any one buyer—

Cambric Corset Covers at 8c.

Drawers at 10c, 15c and 18c.

Night Gowns at 38c, 50c and $1.

Petticoats at 35c, 50c, 75c and 90c.

Eiderdown Sacques, all seams felled, 50c.

Seersucker Petticoats at 50c.

On the second floor:

Gowns at 38c—not more than 3 of these to a buyer; some at 50c, at 75c, and on up to $7.50. Numerous styles, too, at most of the prices.

Chemises at 18c—three to a buyer, if you wish, but no more; others at 25c, 35c and upward to $3.75.

Drawers at 10c—you may have but 3 of this quality; same rule applies to those at 15c; others at 25c and at 50c—up to $3.75.

Petticoats at 35c—no buyer may have more than three at the price. Some at 50c, at 65c and at $15, with many good qualities and attractive styles at between-prices.

Short Petticoats at 25c—same rule—only three to a purchaser. Other prices are 35c, 50c, and upward to $2.75.

Men's Eiderdown Robes Half Prices All that remain—too bad there are so few—go to-day at half. Thoroughly good in making and in patterns. Take the $6 sort for $3, the $5 kind for $2.50, and those that were $4 at $2.

Men's Store, Ninth and Broadway.

Men's Knit Vests, $2—Were $5 and $6 These are fine imported vests, in patterns the most stylish. Only a little while ago they were in favor almost exclusively with those men who wore Prince Alberts, without top coats. The vests were then worn under another. But they're really too swell to be hidden. We sold many of these at $5 and $6. Closing out the line now at $2 for choice. Men's Store, Ninth and Broadway.

Pretty Embroideries at Half Price and Less

Queer case, surely—an importer fetched over these Nainsook Embroideries (matched sets) with a special purchaser in view. And he endeavored to make sure of his sale by having the embroideries put up in a certain queer way. Steamer was late and the whole scheme fell through.

Here are the embroideries—not many but fine—the very finest worth $1.50 a yard; the very cheapest is worth 25c. Well, we shall sell them by the piece—4½ yards for 50c; for 75c; for $1; for $1.25, and for $1.50, (making five groups of the hundred styles). All made on hand-worked machines, giving perfection of stitch and fast edge.

Come early if you wish to get matched sets—come to-day if you expect to get any of them. Broadway.

CONSOLIDATION OF BANKS

The Bank of Commerce and Union Directorates Take Action.

TALK OF GREATER COALITION

J. Pierpont Morgan and the Mutual Life Interested—National City Bank Mentioned.

The Directors of the National Bank of Commerce and the National Union Bank have decided to consolidate. Their action must be ratified by the stockholders, but no doubt that such a ratification will be forthcoming is felt, and the decision of the two directorates means that another powerful banking institution is soon to enter the field. This new bank will take the name of the older of the two uniting institutions, the National Bank of Commerce, and will occupy the offices in the Bank of Commerce Building, 31 Nassau Street, in which the older bank is located. It will have a capital of $10,000,000, which was the capital of the Bank of Commerce prior to 1877, when the figure was reduced to $5,000,000. Its President will be Joseph C. Hendrix, now the President of the National Union Bank.

The importance of this consolidation, it is pointed out, while of course largely apparent at first glance, may prove to be even greater than is supposed. There was some talk in Wall Street, where the news was discussed with exceptional interest, of the possibility of this merger presaging a still greater coalition. The Bank of Commerce is an institution in which the interests of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. are recognized as being powerful, and J. Pierpont Morgan himself has for years been its Vice President. The National Union Bank is closely identified with the Mutual Life Insurance Company, the President of which, Richard A. McCurdy, and several of the trustees of which, are Directors in the bank. Three of the Mutual Life trustees are also Directors of the Bank of Commerce. The President of another prominent banking institution in this city said yesterday: "In fact, the Mutual Life will really own the new Bank of Commerce." However that may be, the rumor found some credence in Wall Street that even the National City Bank, which recently authorized an increase in its capital stock from $1,000,000 to $10,000,000, may consolidate with the future Bank of Commerce, thus forming the greatest institution of the sort in this country. Report also says that this is a project of Mr. Morgan, and that President James Stillman of the National City Bank is seconding it.

The relations of the two uniting institutions have for some time been close, although it is understood that they have not been involved jointly in any business transactions. Three men, Augustus D. Juilliard, Joseph C. Hendrix, and George G. Haven, (the last named two are, respectively, President and Vice President of the National Union Bank,) are Directors in both institutions. The consolidation is laid to the general conclusion that the two institutions would be stronger together than apart, and the plan also has the merit, it is said, of providing for the Bank of Commerce the President which it has been looking for since W. W. Sherman retired from the place last July because of ill-health. William C. Duvall, who was cashier under Mr. Sherman, has been acting as President since then. It was at one time reported that the post was offered to Secretary of the Treasury Gage.

The capital stock of the Bank of Commerce, which has paid 8 per cent. yearly, or a trifle less, for a good number of years, and which is quoted at 250, amounts, as stated, to $5,000,000, and its surplus and undivided profits amount to $3,500,000. The stock of the National Union Bank, the Directors of which have used their earnings to pile up a surplus until recently, when they declared a semi-annual dividend of 5 per cent., (their first,) is quoted at 400. It amounts to $1,200,000, but the plan of consolidation provides for the issuing of new stock enough to bring the amount up to $5,000,000. This sum added to the bank's surplus and undivided profits will bring the National Union Bank's contribution to the consolidation nearly up to that of the Bank of Commerce. To equalize matters, the Bank of Commerce will spend some of its undivided profits in a 10 per cent. dividend to its shareholders.

The National Union Bank shareholders will probably meet in about thirty days to ratify the Directors' action. This action was taken at noon yesterday, the National Bank of Commerce Directors having voted favorably on the proposition on Tuesday. It is undecided yet just when the shareholders of the National Bank of Commerce will meet to vote on the matter. There appears to have been unanimity in regard to the step in both Directorates.

The Bank of Commerce Directors are J. P. Morgan, John Claflin, G. G. Haven, Joseph C. Hendrix, (President of the National Union Bank,) James N. Jarvie, A. D. Juilliard, John S. Kennedy, Woodbury Langdon, Charles Lanier, Alexander E. Orr, Charles H. Russell, and Frederick Sturges. The bank was founded in 1839, with $10,000,000 capital, and Samuel Ward was its first President. Many prominent New Yorkers have acted as its Directors. In 1865, when it was considering the question of becoming a National bank, the Directors were disposed to demur, because unwilling to submit to the law which provided that all shareholders of National banks were liable for debts of the bank for a gross amount equal to double the par value of their holdings. A law was passed through Congress in the interest of the Bank of Commerce providing that State banks having at that time a capital of $5,000,000 or more and surplus and undivided profits amounting to 40 per cent. of their capital stock should be more favorably treated, their shareholders being liable only for an amount equal to the par value of their holdings. The Bank of Commerce and the American Exchange Bank are the only two which reap the benefit of this act. The Bank of Commerce also has the advantage of a charter which makes its Directorate a self-perpetuating board.

The Directors of the National Union Bank, which was formed on June 1, 1893, and is situated in the Mutual Life Insurance Building, are Samuel D. Babcock, John D. Crimmins, Frederic Cromwell, G. G. Haven, R. Somers Hayes, Joseph C. Hendrix, Augustus D. Juilliard, Daniel S. Lamont, Richard A. McCurdy, F. P. Olcott, Henry H. Rogers, H. McK. Twombly, and William C. Whitney.

The National Union Bank started business with the same officers it has now. E. O. Leech came to act as its Second Vice President and cashier, vacating the post of Director of the Mint, after having been allied with the mint service twenty years.

Joseph C. Hendrix is forty-seven years old and a native of Missouri. He settled in Brooklyn after leaving Cornell College, and was for some years a newspaper reporter there. He was once the Democratic candidate for Mayor of Brooklyn, being defeated by Seth Low. He served a term as Postmaster of Brooklyn. When chosen President of the National Union Bank he was a Representative in Congress from a Brooklyn district, and was also President of the Kings County Trust Company.

MIDDLESEX COUNTY BANK.

Receiver Overrules Preferred Claims of the Suspended Institution.

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 10.—Receiver Campbell of the Middlesex County Bank of Perth Amboy, which suspended in July last, to-day overruled all preferred claims notwithstanding that the Newark City National Bank, of which Mr. Campbell is President, is one of the largest preferred claimants. The receiver admitted all ordinary claims proven.

Counsel for the preferred creditors objected to this and has taken the matter on appeal before Vice Chancellor Pitney. The case will be heard on argument Feb. 1.

Will Fix Parliament's Meeting Date.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The Privy Council will go to Osborne, Isle of Wight, where the Queen is now residing, on Thursday. The meeting of the Council will be a purely formal function for the purpose of fixing the date for the reassembling of Parliament.

Colombian Rebels Twice Defeated.

COLON, Colombia, Jan. 10.—The insurgents have again been defeated at Cerritos and Bucaramanga. San José de Cucuta has been occupied by the Government troops. Gen. Velez, with 3,000 Antioquains, is on the way to Bogota.

Emigration from German Ports.

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—Emigration from Hamburg and Bremen last year reached 145,000, of whom 19,540 were Germans, as against a total emigration of 100,368 in 1898.

LADY ALICE MONTAGU DEAD.

Consumption Carries Off Noted English Beauty—Her Mother Is the Duchess of Manchester.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Lady Alice Montagu, sister of the Duke of Manchester, died to-day at Davos-Platz, a health resort in Switzerland. She had been suffering from consumption. The Duke of Manchester was summoned from America to her bedside several weeks ago.

Until she was stricken by the illness which has now proved fatal the Lady Alice Eleanor Louise Montagu occupied a unique position in English society. Never before her time had a young unmarried woman become one of the recognized leaders of that society, and the fact that the only advantages she possessed were good birth and beauty—for, as is well known, the means possessed by her family are small—made the fact still more surprising.

Lady Alice was a beauty of the typical British type—many persons declared that she was the most beautiful Englishwoman of her time; others said that she was only second to the late Duchess of Leinster, and it is a curious fact that both these women were carried off within five years by consumption.

The death of Lady Alice Montagu leaves the present Duke of Manchester the only surviving child of the eighth Duke, who married, in 1876, Miss Consuelo Yznaga, daughter of Don Antonio Yznaga del Valle of Cuba and Ravenswood, L. I. The death of her only surviving daughter will doubtless be a terrible shock to Consuelo, Duchess of Manchester. The third child, a twin sister of the Lady Alice, died, also from consumption, at Rome in 1895. Lady Alice showed the first symptoms of the disease soon after her sister's death.

Lady Alice was born about twenty-one years ago. From the earliest years she promised to become a woman of exquisite beauty, and this promise was abundantly fulfilled before she was seventeen years old. Her hair was of a golden bronze color, with a natural wave that displayed its beauty to the utmost; her eyes were of rare deep violet hue, and she had dark eyebrows, while her complexion was as delicate and clear as of a piece of Sèvres porcelain. To these qualities of beauty were added the charming vivacity and bright wit which made her such a favorite in society.

GALES ON THE FRENCH COAST.

A Number of Vessels with Their Crews Go to the Bottom.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—Heavy gales are blowing along the entire French coast, and a number of small vessels, with their crews, have been lost, although several lifeboat rescues are reported.

A fishing boat foundered off Boulogne-sur-Mer, nine of the crew perishing. The bark Jeanne Eugenie sank near Cherbourg and five persons were drowned.

Heavy weather is reported from all Mediterranean ports.

FRANCE EXPECTS A SETTLEMENT.

Officials Believe Santo Domingan Difficulty Will Be Adjusted.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—The Foreign Office officials here express themselves as sanguine that a satisfactory settlement of the trouble between France and Santo Domingo will be reached soon. The only question now remaining, it is pointed out, is reparation for the insults offered France, and this, doubtless, will be arranged at an interview to be had to-day between Admiral Richard and President Jimenes.

In official circles here the belief is expressed that the presence of an American war vessel in Santo Domingo will conduce to a prompt arrangement.

French Navy Yard Open to Americans.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—On the request of the United States Naval Attaché, Lieut. W. S. Simms, the Minister of Marine, M. Lanessan, has authorized Assistant Naval Constructors Dobosc, Eggert, and Powell to visit the naval yards at L'Orient. Every facility compatible with the regulations governing the entry of strangers into the arsenals will be accorded to the United States officers.

Bring Back an Alleged Embezzler.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 10.—The White Star Line steamer Oceanic, which sails from here to-day, will have on board Michael J. Sampson of Chicago, who is under a charge of embezzlement. He will be in the custody of American detectives. Sampson was arrested in Limerick, Ireland, in November last and was arraigned in the Bow Street Police Court, London, Dec. 23, for extradition to the United States.

Influenza Rages in England.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—The epidemic of influenza is spreading throughout the whole country. The newspapers contain long lists of notable sufferers from the disease and the death lists are abnormally long. The royal household at Osborne House, Isle of Wight, has not escaped. Many of its members have been removed to a sanitarium.

GEN. LUDLOW IS CRITICISED.

Havana Newspapers Continue Their Attacks on His Course.

HAVANA, Jan. 10.—The Lucha, in a long editorial to-day regarding the fines which Gen. Ludlow has recently imposed upon that paper and the Cubano, reaffirms the articles objected to in its own columns, alluding to Gen. Wood's suspension of an order expelling from Havana a man named Magrino, acknowledges the receipt of another letter imposing an additional fine of $10, and says it will not recognize the authority of the Military Governor, though it will cheerfully pay the fine when ordered to do so by a properly constituted court.

"Gen. Ludlow," says the Lucha, "has gone outside the limits of his jurisdiction on more than one occasion, but this last usurpation of authority is the greatest."

Gen. Ludlow asserts that, so long as the Lucha continues to reaffirm "maliciously false stories," he will continue to impose fines and will increase their amount.

The Cubano declares that it will lay the matter before the Governor General and hear from him before making further criticism of the course of the Military Governor.

Thus far the other papers have refrained from allusions to the matter, but, judging from private statements made by the editors, the latter consider that the liberty of the local press would be endangered if such a course as Gen. Ludlow has taken should be indefinitely tolerated by his superiors.

STORIES OF DISCONTENT DENIED.

Cuban Generals Resent Charges of Fomenting Discord.

SANTIAGO DE CUBA, Jan. 10.—Gens. Rabi and Castro to-day denied emphatically a statement made in a Santiago newspaper that their present mission is to arouse the Cubans in this part of the island against the Americans, or in any other way to foment disorder.

They realize that the people of the province are ardently patriotic, but believe, nevertheless, that a large majority will patiently await the fulfillment of the promise of the intervening Government to establish the independence of Cuba. They express confidence in Gov. Gen. Wood.

Gen. Wood to Pardon Prisoners.

HAVANA, Jan. 10.—Before the end of the week Gen. Wood probably will have issued pardons to about 200 persons now confined in the Havana prisons who have served terms longer than the Board of Prison Investigation considers either just or necessary. Many of these have never been put on trial at all. Some have been awaiting trial for periods longer than the maximum penalty of imprisonment that could have been imposed had they been found guilty of the charges against them. Probably the 200 are not a fourth of the number similarly treated.

NEW BOATHOUSE FOR HARVARD.

To Have Fire-proof Building—Launch to Replace the Thompson.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 10.—It is announced that the Harvard Graduates Club of New York has increased the original contribution for a boathouse for the Harvard crews by $15,000. This sum, with the insurance on the building recently burned, will give $43,000, which will be used for a fire-proof brick building.

The insurance on the launch Frank Thompson, which was burned in the boathouse fire, will be used for a new boat, to resemble the Thompson in many ways, but to be 51 feet long, 7 feet 10 inches beam, 36 inches draught, and 10½ knots speed. She will be ready for a trial trip March 10.

PROBING MORRISON CASE

Affidavits of Dr. Ferris and the Boy Reymon.

District Attorney Andrews on the Alleged Plea of Insanity—Insomnia Troubles Morrison.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, Jan. 10.—District Attorney Andrews of Westchester County put in a hard day's work in conjunction with the Police Department of this place in probing into the case of Prof. Alfred Morrison, who shot and killed his second wife on the night of Dec. 28 while under the influence of an attack of somnambulism, as he alleges.

Two of the most important witnesses in the case, neither of whom was called by Coroner Banning in the investigation which resulted in Morrison's exoneration, were closeted with the District Attorney and Chief of Police Foley for several hours in the latter's office this afternoon. These witnesses were Dr. I. W. Ferris, the physician who reached Mrs. Morrison within a half hour after her husband had shot her, and Elias Reymon, the eleven-year-old son of a jeweler here, who, as has been stated, was on terms of the closest intimacy with the Morrison family, calling at the house frequently and often stopping over night. Affidavits said to be exceedingly damaging to Morrison were secured from both Dr. Ferris and young Reymon.

Dr. Ferris, as has already been told, found that the bullet from Morrison's revolver entered his wife's shoulder and took a diagonal course downward through her body, lodging in the abdominal cavity. Both Morrison and his wife told the physician that the woman had been standing up in the room when Morrison fired the shot from his bed. The course of the bullet after striking Mrs. Morrison showed, the physician said, that this part of the story was necessarily untrue. Dr. Ferris also told of Morrison's expressions, indicating great fear of being arrested for the act.

Young Raymon is looked upon as the most important witness in the case. He was the last person at the Morrison house on the night in question and left there only a little while before the shooting. He had gone to visit the Morrisons with his older brother, Samuel. The latter went away at 8 o'clock, leaving Elias to stay over night.

Later, Morrison, on some excuse, sent the boy home. Soon afterward Mrs. Morrison was shot. The boy has been exceedingly reticent, but it has been believed that he knew more about the affair than any other living person except Morrison himself. He was closely questioned for over an hour to-day by District Attorney Andrews and Chief of Police Foley, and, it is said, his affidavit will form the principal basis for the proceedings which, it is now declared, will surely be taken against Morrison, looking either to testing his sanity or prosecuting him for deliberately killing his wife. The tale of the shooting as an extraordinary result of somnambulism has been utterly rejected by the officials.

Morrison is still under close surveillance in the house at 7 Rich Avenue, guarded by a policeman. The man is now quite unable to sleep except with the aid of drugs. He continues to smoke cigarettes all day long and almost all of the night. Yet the District Attorney scouts the idea that the man is insane. When questioned on this point to-day Mr. Andrews said:

"It is nonsense to say that I will contend the man is crazy; that is his business. Mine is to find out if there is anything criminal in the case and if so to prosecute him. The law holds a man sane until he is proved insane, and I am not the person to prove the man suspected of crime insane. My business would be to controvert such a contention."

It is understood, however, that if Morrison is arrested he will be taken before County Judge Lent and be committed to the county jail pending an examination as to his sanity.

The District Attorney refuses to say what will be his ultimate action in the case.

"I cannot say what will be done," he said to-day, "until I have completed my investigations. I have already affidavits from many persons and hope to complete my investigations to-night."

The District Attorney left for Manhattan to-night.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 10.—Mrs. Henry E. Ellinberger, sister of the dead wife of Prof. Alfred Morrison, whom he claims to have shot in a dream, to-day declared that she had had a dream in which Mrs. Morrison appeared to her. The apparition declared that her husband was guiltless of crime and begged her not to prosecute the husband.

Mrs. Ellinberger was to go to Mount Vernon to-morrow to appear against Prof. Morrison, but she says now she will not go.

MR. COFFEY TO FIGHT.

The indications are that there will be a bitter fight between Senator Michael J. Coffey and the Brooklyn Democratic machine over the charges of disloyalty to the organization preferred against the South Brooklyn leader. The Coffey side of the inquiry, it is said, will be looked after by Lawyers Isaac M. Kapper and Luke D. Stapleton. If the matter finally goes to the courts it is said that William C. De Witt will conduct the case for Mr. Coffey.

Senator Coffey said yesterday afternoon that he was prepared to show, if the proper witnesses were subpoenaed before the special committee which is to hear the charges, that orders were given by the party leaders to vote against the regular Democratic nominees for Assemblyman and Alderman in the Ninth District merely because they were his (Coffey's) friends.

"When the figures are looked into," said the Senator, "it will be seen that the falling off in the vote in the Ninth District was no greater than in many other districts. If we get the opportunity, there are many interesting questions we can ask. They ought to ask Mr. Maguire, Chairman of this committee, for instance, how it was that he lost his Assemblyman and Alderman. There are others who should be asked the same question."

GRUBER'S FRIEND CHOSEN.

The annual election of the Riverside Republican Club in Abraham Gruber's district was held last night. There was only one ticket in the field. Henry G. Dorsch, one of those nominated as a member of the House Committee, is a warm friend of George C. Austin, who seeks to wrest the district leadership from Mr. Gruber. While nearly every candidate on the ticket received 142 votes, Mr. Dorsch obtained only 100.

The following officers were chosen: President—William D. Holmes; First Vice President—M. Linn Bruce; Second Vice President—Joshua T. Easton; Third Vice President—Josiah M. Thompson; Corresponding Secretary—George M. Seib; Financial Secretary—Joseph Sentner; Recording Secretary—P. J. O'Hare; Treasurer—William McAdie; Sergeant at Arms—Ernest L. Foster.

Mr. Holmes is one of Mr. Gruber's warmest adherents.

SECRETARY GAGE'S REPLY

Justifies to Congress His Deposits of Internal Revenue Receipts.

NATIONAL CITY BANK'S PART

Sale of Custom House Building and Large Deposits Made Explained in Detail.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Secretary Gage to-day sent to Congress his reply to the resolutions recently introduced in the Senate by Mr. Allen of Nebraska and in the House by Mr. Sulzer of New York. The text of his reply, which is an exhaustive exposition of the management of that branch of the Treasury finances under his administration relating to National bank depositories, contains about 9,000 words, which is supplemented by special reports from department officials relative to special inquiries in the resolutions, including copies of over 1,000 letters on the subject under consideration. In summing up his reply to the inquiries the Secretary says:

"First—That the reason for utilizing National banks as depositories for public moneys, as authorized by law, when the receipts of the Treasury were exceeding its expenditures, has been to avoid the disturbance to business which the withdrawal of large sums of money from active circulation to the Treasury vaults must inevitably cause. The policy thus pursued by me has been the established policy of the Government for many years, and a departure from it under similar conditions would certainly cause disastrous results.

"Second—The reason for directing the internal revenue receipts into depository banks at this time is that the revenues now largely exceed disbursements from month to month and seem likely to do so for an indefinite time. This condition would be a menace to the business world if assurance were not given that this surplus would be diverted from the Treasury vaults to public depositories, where, while secure to the Government, it would remain available to business use.

REASON FOR USING ONE BANK.

"Third—The reason for directing all of the internal revenue receipts to one depository was that it is more convenient to first collect the receipts of numerous offices into one place and make the desired distribution from it than to give new instructions daily to 113 collectors. The most convenient agency to effect such distribution is a bank which is a member of the New York Clearing House.

"Fourth—The reason for selecting the National City Bank as such distributing agent was that at the time the order was issued it was one of but two banks which had offered bonds sufficient to cover the amount of the daily deposit. Its bond deposit was $4,000,000, and that of the Hanover National Bank $1,910,500. The National City Bank was therefore the one most naturally chosen. Of the sixty-eight banks applying for a share of the deposits, the National City Bank, the Hanover National Bank, and three others, applicants for over $800,000 each, are the only ones out of those constituting group one, which have not been supplied the full amount for which they had offered security.

SALE OF THE CUSTOM HOUSE.

"Fifth—The Custom House property was sold to the National City Bank as the highest bidder on July 3, 1899. Under the terms of the sale it had the option of paying in cash all of the purchase money at any time or any part it might elect above $750,000, which sum it was absolutely obliged to pay. It exercised this option by choosing to pay $3,275,000, leaving $50,000 yet due. No deed will be executed until full payment has been made.

"The payment received was turned into the Treasury by deposit in the National City Bank, it having been the established custom of Treasury officials, under the counsel of their legal advisers, supported by decisions of the Supreme Court, to consider moneys on deposit to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States in designated depositories as moneys in the Treasury. This deposit was made in a depository bank for the same reason that other deposits have been made in them, viz., because to withdraw the currency into the vaults of the Treasury, where it was not needed and could not be utilized, would have required a withdrawal of credit that was being extended in commercial circles, and to that extent a disturbance to the usual course of business would have followed. To have required its payment by the National City Bank to another designated depository would have been an ungracious discrimination without substantially changing the fact.

"Finally under my administration of the Treasury Department no discrimination in favor of one bank against another has been made. Generally speaking, when an increase in depository banks was desired, all have been invited to qualify themselves for receiving such money, and have been equally and equitably considered in their respective relations to the Treasury."

MR. GAGE REVIEWS HIS COURSE.

Before proceeding to respond to the resolution specifically, Secretary Gage gives a general review of his whole course in the branch of public finances concerned with National bank depositories. He notes the provisions of the statutes which make "all National banking associations designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury depositories of public money, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary."

The statute became a law June 3, 1864, and its first marked recognition was in the refunding operations of 1879, when Secretary Sherman thought it necessary to place with National Bank depositories sums of money which reached as high as $279,544,645. Secretary Fairchild, in 1887-8, during a period of abnormal receipts of revenue, increased the number of depository banks, and allowed such banks to accumulate balances reaching $61,546,000.

On March 1, 1897, there were 159 National bank depositories, holding a total of $16,198,410. With few exceptions, these institutions received deposits from Internal Revenue Collectors and remitted to the Sub-Treasuries any surplus over the amount of the fixed balances which they were permitted to hold. The amount of public deposits remained about the same during the first six months of this Administration. In November began those large payments which resulted from the successful settlement of the Union Pacific Railroad indebtedness, payments under which aggregated $58,448,223. It was thought expedient, as a part of this enormous transaction, to utilize for a few days the services of depository banks, with the result that at the end of December, 1897, such deposits had increased to $49,182,717. The reason for this action was to avoid the injurious effect on trade and industry of a too sudden withdrawal from public uses into the vaults of the Treasury of so large a sum as $58,000,000. By the end of May, 1898, these public deposits had been reduced to $28,329,359.

PROCEEDS OF THE WAR BONDS.

Soon after this the Government was confronted with the necessity of raising immediately a large fund for war purposes, and, acting under the authority of the War Revenue act, the people were called upon to subscribe to an issue of $200,000,000 of bonds. On the day the books were opened the National City Bank of New York and its associates offered to take, at par and accrued interest, any portion of the bonds that might not be subscribed for by the public, and on the same day J. P. Morgan & Co. and their associates, numbering fifteen of the greatest financial houses of the country, also subscribed to the entire issue of $200,000,000, or any part that might not be subscribed for by the general public.

It will be readily recognized, the Secretary adds, that the absorption of $200,000,000 within the space of a few weeks could not fail to disturb most seriously the general business of the country. The Secretary of the Treasury feels some measure of just pride that the financing of the war loan of 1898 was accomplished without the slightest interruption to that revival of commerce and the industries of the country which has made the present a period of unexampled prosperity.

By the end of 1898 the number of National bank depositories had been increased to 316, located in forty-three States and Territories, and holding $94,863,000. The New York banks were able to control more bonds and qualify themselves in larger proportions than the banks in the interior cities. With a view to securing a more equitable distribution of the funds the Secretary early in 1899 designated forty or fifty additional depositories, and, while thus increasing the deposits outside of New York City he at the same time drew down the balances in the New York City banks.

With the beginning of the present fiscal year the Treasury was feeling the influence of the revival of commerce. For the six months ended Dec. 31, 1899, the excess of receipts over expenditures aggregated $21,028,000. This absorption of money from an active use into the Treasury, where it could serve no present useful purpose, was a source of apprehension to the public and of anxiety to the department. The situation was intensified by the fact that the Fall movement of currency to the interior for the movement of crops operated to reduce the cash reserves at all commercial centres.

THE PANIC OF LAST DECEMBER.

The Secretary was indisposed to increase deposits in public depositories and in order to avoid that he offered to anticipate interest on the public debt and later offered to buy $25,000,000 of bonds. The movement toward stringency in the money market had assumed too great momentum to be averted by such means. Dec. 18 a financial panic occurred. Prices of investment securities fell ruinously. Interest rates rose to a fabulous height and a general constriction of the money market was apparent. While this state of affairs found its most violent expression in the security market it excited a state of anxiety and alarm throughout our industrial and commercial communities. The situation was believed to be so grave as to justify the utmost interference. The receipts of the Treasury for December, it was perceived, would exceed the expenditures by seven or eight millions. Under these conditions a peculiar responsibility was thrown upon the Treasury. The statutes conferred authority to place public money, except customs, in designated depositories, and gave power to relieve the situation without possible prejudice to the Treasury's needs. It was, therefore, announced Dec. 18 that the Secretary would deposit internal revenue collections with depository banks to the amount of thirty or forty millions, should so much be applied for.

DIRECT ANSWER TO RESOLUTIONS.

From this point on the Secretary makes direct answer to the Congressional inquiry. His principle of action has been to so manage the receipts and expenditures as to produce the least disturbance in that part of the money supply which must be at the service of commercial and industrial use. Since June 1, 1898, the receipts of the Treasury have amounted to $1,100,000,000. By the aid of depositories the amount in the Treasury at the close of any quarterly period during that time never rose more than $29,500,000 above the average for the whole period. Tables presented show that substantial equilibrium was maintained at all times between the supply of money in the Treasury and the supply in commercial uses.

Taking up the history of the Government's connection with the Hanover National and the National City Banks, specifically inquired into by the resolution, the Secretary shows that the National City Bank was appointed a depository July 21, 1898. It was used as a depository for internal revenue collections until the bond sale in 1895, when the then Secretary of the Treasury deemed it advisable to use that bank, together with four others, as depositories, and about $23,000,000 was deposited with those banks. When another issue of bonds was made in February, 1896, the then Secretary of the Treasury again used the National City Bank and the Hanover National Bank as depositories, each for nearly $10,000,000. Late in 1897 more than $58,000,000 was to be paid into the Treasury, as the result of the Union Pacific settlement. To avoid the transfer of so large a sum from public uses to the Treasury vaults, the New York banks were invited to qualify as temporary depositories. Eight banks so qualified, the National City for $24,000,000, and others for smaller amounts. These deposits were gradually withdrawn by transfer to the Sub-Treasury, until the several balances were finally discharged.

When the two-hundred-million-dollar war loan was made, it was seen that the paying into the Treasury of such a sum could not be otherwise than a dangerous thing for the public interests and a useless thing to the Government finances. The Treasury announced to the National banks its desire to place temporarily on deposit a portion of this amount, and all banks, without regard to size or location, were invited to qualify as temporary depositories. All applications were accepted. None was refused. The National City Bank deposited $14,000,000 of bonds, and the balances held on this account never exceeded $14,000,000. The Hanover National deposited $11,000,000 of bonds and received a balance never larger than $11,000,000.

PROCEEDS OF CUSTOM HOUSE SALE.

The connection of the National City Bank with the sale of the old Custom House property in New York is described in a memorandum prepared by the Supervising Architect's office. In that connection, however, the Secretary calls attention to the allegation that he has violated the law by depositing the proceeds in a bank depository, when the act decreed that the proceeds should be deposited "in the United States Treasury." Every United States depository bank is, within the meaning of Section 5,153 of the Revised Statutes, a part of the United States Treasury. The moneys which may be deposited in such a bank include all classes of receipts except customs, and when such moneys are deposited in such a bank to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States "they are in the Treasury" just as much as if they were physically on deposit in the Treasury vaults at Washington. The Secretary cites decisions of the Supreme Court which establish beyond question the legality of his action.

The Controller of the Treasury, whose decision is binding upon the executive branch of the Government, holds "that money is paid into the Treasury of the United States by being deposited with the Treasurer of the United States here in Washington or to his credit with an Assistant Treasurer, or in a designated depository."

That has been the uninterrupted and universal rule governing the accounting officers of the Government for many years. Letters from officials of thirty or forty years' service in the Treasury are quoted, showing that money deposited in a depository bank is as much deposited in the Treasury of the United States as when deposited in any Sub-Treasury. The customs property was sold July 3, 1899, to the National City Bank for $3,265,000, which amount was $190,000 larger than that tendered by the next highest bidder. Aug. 28 certificates of deposit were forwarded to the Department, covering $3,210,000 credit as proceeds of the Custom House property in the general account of the Treasurer with the National City Bank, a depository bank. The Treasurer duly accepted the fund as a "deposit in the Treasury." It was subject to his jurisdiction and orders. Subsequently the National City Bank was ordered by the Treasurer to transfer to the Sub-Treasury and other National bank depositories sums aggregating $3,800,000. No rent has been paid to the National City Bank for the Government's occupancy for the reason that such payment awaits appropriation by Congress.

The correspondence betwen the department and the National City Bank is quoted, showing the refusal of the department to give the National City Bank its full balance of $4,000,000 except concurrently with all other banks in the first group, the balances of the National City Bank and the Hanover National Bank being built up pro rata with all other banks.

$10,000,000 Bonds from Second Group.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Secretary of the Treasury closed to-day the second group of banks which have deposited bonds and asked to participate in the temporary deposits of internal revenue funds. This group contains about seventy-five banks, and represents about $10,000,000 in bonds deposited, making approximately $27,000,000 in all. The Secretary's offer has been open since Dec. 18, and it is not now expected that any additional banks will be designated. This determination, however, may be reconsidered if the demand warrants such action.

Mr. Levy's Bill Requiring Interest.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Representative Levy of New York to-day introduced in the House a bill to provide for the payment of interest on all internal revenue receipts now on deposit, or hereafter deposited in National banks of the United States.

RECIPROCITY WITH FRANCE.

Proposed Treaty May Fail Because It Favors Both Parties.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Private reports that reach the diplomatic circle here from Paris indicate that the reciprocity treaty between the United States and France is in a hazardous position, with more than a possibility of defeat when it comes to the final vote in the French Chambers.

The Administration here is filled with grave concern for the fate of the treaty in the United States Senate, and thus the convention is in the singular position of being exposed to rejection by both parties, on the ground that it is favorable to each.

NEW SHIPPING BILL IS URGED.

Vessel Owners, Aided by ex-Senator Edmunds, Argue for the Proposed Measure.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The representatives of the shipping and shipbuilding interests were given a hearing to-day by the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, on the measure generally known as the Shipping bill and entitled "A bill to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States, and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary."

Many of those prominent in the shipping world were present, including C. A. Griscom, President of the International Navigation Company; W. D. Munson of the Munson Line, H. P. Booth, President of the Ward Line; Lewis Nixon, the Elizabethport (N. J.) shipbuilder; Dennis Clyde of the Clyde Line, and Aaron Vanderbilt, long identified with the shipping industry.

Ex-Senator Edmunds appeared in behalf of the shipping interests to present the general views on the bill.

Mr. Griscom made an introductory statement, showing the composition of the committee which framed the measure, including those engaged in building and in operating ships, manufacturers, merchants, &c., comprising representatives of diversified industries having an interest in the extension of American trade and shipping.

Mr. Edmunds then submitted a general argument in favor of the measure.

Mr. Edmunds said that one of the great and fundamental principles of the bill was that it gave no scope for combinations or syndicates of shipowners and no field for trusts, as its operations were open to all alike, and the advantages conferred were as free as the ocean itself. He explained the measure section by section, urging that if we are in earnest as to the extension of American commerce, as every one seems to concede, some broad measure of this character could best aid in bringing about that end.

In answer to Mr. Hopkins's inquiry as to what extent discriminatory duties could revive shipping and trade, Mr. Edmunds said discrimination was a remedy open to all nations. If begun by the United States it would quickly be followed by our great commercial rivals, each discrimination being retaliated in kind on duties, harbor charges, &c., so that there could be no real remedy on those lines. Mr. Edmunds said another plan had been put forward by some opposing interest, he believed, perhaps by some of the railways running through Canada, to the effect that this shipping bill did not afford the real remedy, but that an export bounty on corn, wheat, &c., sent abroad would help the farmer as well as the vessel owners. He expressed the belief, however, that such an enactment would be unconstitutional, being contrary to the principle of equality.

Messrs. Clyde, Nixon, and Search also spoke in favor of the bill.

The hearing will be continued next Tuesday.

FREE TRADE FOR PUERTO RICO.

Protectionist and Southern Resistance Developed to the President's Recommendations.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Insular Committee of the House that has taken up the question of providing Puerto Rico with some opportunities to recover from the depression and dissatisfaction into which its people have fallen since their political condition was changed approaches very slowly the President's recommendation that all customs duties between Puerto Rico and the United States shall be abolished.

At the meeting of the committee to-day it was not touched upon, although a member of the committee added that it was unquestionably the most important one to be considered by the members. The committee has been informed by Gen. Davis that something must be done to afford the inhabitants of the island an opportunity to better their condition. Under Spain they had commerce with that country and the United States. Now they have no commerce with Spain and they cannot obtain any advantages in trade with the United States, not even those they enjoyed when Puerto Rico was a colony of Spain.

Some protectionist resistance is felt and some Southern resistance, regardless of party, to adopting the recommendation of the President to give Puerto Rico like free trade advantages to those enjoyed between States of the Union.

An officer of the United States Army, who has been on service in Cuba and who says that it is inevitable that Cuba should become a part of the United States, said to-day that, while it would come as a result of American occupation of the island, and because Cuba would never be ready to be released, nothing would compel it so quickly as the extension to Puerto Rico of trade without tariff. Once Puerto Rico can trade freely with the United States Cuba will be in self-defense constrained to ask to be put on the same political and trade footing.

STATUS OF NEW POSSESSIONS.

House Committee Named to Ascertain If They Are in Fact Parts of the United States.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The Ways and Means Committee of the House to-day held a meeting, at which the following resolution was adopted upon motion of Mr. Newlands of Nevada:

"Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed by the Chair to report the authorities and the law as to the meaning of the term 'United States' in that provision of the Constitution which declares that 'all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States,' viz., whether it includes simply the area actually included within the boundaries of States, or whether it covers also the territory belonging to the United States."

Chairman Payne appointed Messrs. Dalzell of Pennsylvania, Grosvenor of Ohio, Hopkins of Illinois, Republicans, and Messrs. Richardson, Democrat, and Newlands, Silver.

The resolution was the outcome of considerable discussion in the Ways and Means Committee, covering several meetings as to whether the customs laws of the United States were not extended to our new possessions when they became United States territory. The immediate cause of its adoption was a resolution to extend the customs and internal revenue laws of the United States to Hawaii, which was under consideration.

Mr. Newlands suggested that the whole subject should be investigated. This led to a general discussion of the question as to whether the provision of the Constitution providing that the customs and revenue laws of the United States should be uniform did not cover the territory acquired under the treaty with Spain.

Mr. Dalzell argued strenuously that the territory acquired was not subject to these laws until it had been formally annexed, and in support of his contention cited several Supreme Court decisions, among others the insurance company versus Canters in the First Peters in which Chief Justice Marshall, after the acquisition of Florida, decided that the United States had the power to acquire foreign territory.

Mr. Swanson of Virginia, taking the opposite view, cited the case of Gross versus Harrison, in which the Supreme Court decided that the customs laws of the United States were extended to California as soon as the territory was annexed to the United States. He also cited the case of Lansbury versus Blake, in which Justice Marshall gave the opinion.

As a result of the discussion, the resolution offered by Mr. Newlands was unanimously adopted.

Would Delay Legislation Five Years.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Representative Weeks of Michigan has introduced a joint resolution reciting the unsettled status of the people in the islands acquired from Spain and providing that for five years the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, shall continue military authority in said islands, and that Congress shall deal with the subject at the expiration of this five-year period. In the meantime it is provided that reciprocity reductions not exceeding 25 per cent. may be made on the products of the islands brought to this country

TRIBUTES TO MR. HOBART

Eulogized by Members of the United States Senate.

MR. DEPEW PRAISES HIS WORTH

Words of Commendation for the Late Vice President Delivered by Mr. Sewell, Mr. Kean, and Others.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The session of the Senate to-day was devoted to the paying of tributes to the memory of the late Vice President, Garret A. Hobart. In a beautiful and impressive invocation the blind Chaplain at the opening of the session referred to the distinguished services of Mr. Hobart and called down the blessings of God upon the bereaved family.

Mr. Sewell (Rep., N. J.,) then called up the resolutions he had previously offered, providing that the business of the Senate be suspended in order that the distinguished public services and private character of Mr. Hobart might be fittingly commemorated.

Mr. Sewell addresed the Senate, saying, among other things:

"Mr. Hobart was removed from his earthly career at an age when the magnificent status of his manhood was reaching its prime, when the grand elements of his character were ripening to their full development, when his great usefulness to the Nation was becoming more and more apparent. His public duties were marked by zeal and devotion to the interests of the people. The general welfare rather than the conserving of private interests engaged his time and attention. The performance of his duties as President of the Senate has ever evoked the favorable criticism of the members of this body, and the justness and fairness of his rulings have elicited their warmest commendation.

"The character of Mr. Hobart was as the open day—neither darkness nor shadow rested upon it. His loyalty to truth, his fealty to duty, his unswerving devotion to the interests of his constituents have carved for him in the hearts of men an enduring tablet. Sensitive to reproach and injury, his sympathy reached out to those who were maligned and forbade the entrance of resentment. His course in life indicated obedience to duty and resignation—duty nobly performed toward his neighbor and to himself, resignation to whatever might betide, cheerfully and willingly displayed. Ah, Mr. President! we need no inspiration to show that so noble a soul cannot taste of annihilation. Mr. Hobart has passed to the better and higher life that lies beyond the confines of mortality—a life the span of which, unmeasured by the flight of years, is filled with immortal significance and joy. The lessons of his life, whose pleasant remembrances rob even death of sadness, let us treasure, and may they prove a stimulating influence in the conduct of our own."

Mr. Depew, who followed Mr. Sewell, said:

Mr. Hobart was an illustration of what is possible under American conditions and with American opportunities, with equal laws for all, and no class or privilege barring the way to the highest places in the land. At nineteen he was a graduate of Rutgers College, and for six years teaching school and studying law; and at twenty-five he was called to the bar and began his battle with and in the world. Without money or influence, but with brains, education, health, industry, and character, his was the typical beginning of most of the youth of our country. His confidence in himself and his future led to an early marriage and an ideal domestic life.

"At fifty-three he was among the foremost citizens of his State in every department of its activities. He was a leader in his profession of the law and of his political party; he had been repeatedly honored by his fellow-citizens in positions of trust and power; he had accumulated a fortune, and was Vice President of the United States. The idle and the incompetent will find no comfort here for their favorite theory that life is luck.

"At the threshold of his career, by profession and membership, he proclaimed himself a Christian, and as he began so he continued until his death, a consistent child of the Church. His was not the religion which in Jonathan Edwards's period filled the churches with terror and in our time empties their pews, but the religion of the Evangelist Moody, which rests upon the golden rule. Preferring always his own way, he recognized, with a broad charity, that the paths pursued by others led to the same heaven, and could be more easily trod by them. He had no aggressive faith which fought on dogma other creeds and sects, but he was at all times active in the good works which are common to all creeds and all sects.

"The Vice President was not troubled with illusions or bound by theories. He pitied the man who perpetually longs for the good old times and mourns the decadence of the present, and sympathized with the far more useful one who is providing for the unborn millions of the coming century. Mr. Hobart was not a State builder or a prophet, but he was among the master workmen who, as the years go by, slowly perfect the structure of government by providing for its present needs, and are digging trenches or leading the assault against those who would destroy it.

"Coming into this high office, his talent of common sense and his charm of personality made him from the beginning the friend and chosen counselor of the President. He lifted the office out of the rut of conventionality and possibility to a position of dignity, usefulness, and trust. He won the warm affection of his party associates and the esteem and respect of his party antagonists. He had the faculty of the wisely busy man of always having plenty of time, and that he shared with his friends in that hearty and healthy companionship which has made his name a hospitable memory at the Capitol. Though he died in his prime, with apparently years of usefulness before him, yet his was a full and rich life and a nobly rounded career. It is fitting that such a man should fall in battle with his armor on. The conspicuousness of his departure gives lustre to his example. Statesman, citizen, husband, father, friend, the sum of his worth among us is that he performed with faithfulness and fidelity, with conscientious care and magnetic ardor, all the duties of public and private life."

Demonstrations of approval by the occupants of the galleries greeted Mr. Depew's speech.

Mr. Lodge (Rep., Mass.,) said of Mr. Hobart's services:

"I trust and believe that when the history of the momentous times in which he rendered his greatest public services comes to be written he will receive the very high meed of praise which he deserves. Those who knew him and saw him in that eventful period know well what he did and appreciate at their right value the courage, loyalty, and ability which he displayed. We mourn him as a friend, as an eminent and patriotic public servant, faithful to his country in all relations of life. His death while he was still in his prime was a grievous loss, not only to those who loved him, but to the country which he loved and which he served so well."

Tributes of respect were also paid by Mr. Daniel (Dem., Va.,) Mr. Cullom (Rep., Ill.,) Mr. Cockrell, (Dem., Mo.,) Mr. Davis, (Rep., Minn.,) Mr. Morgan (Dem., Ala.,) Mr. Chandler, (Rep., N. H.,) Mr. Caffery, (Dem., La.,) and Mr. Allen (Pop., Neb.)

The concluding address of the day was delivered by Mr. Kean (Rep., N. J.)

"If the State of New Jersey," said he, "gave Mr. Hobart birth and education, so, too, had he contributed much to the old Commonwealth. He had not only the desire to be useful, but he knew how to be so by the shortest course. Loyalty was one of his strongest characteristics, and to his country and to his friends he gave his time and best abilities. No question was ever raised as to his honesty and definiteness of purpose. He made friends easily and as easily kept them. He dwelt in an atmosphere which drew men to him, and he endeared himself not only to the people of his own State, but to those of the entire country."

At the conclusion of Mr. Kean's eulogy, on motion of Mr. Sewell, at 3:15 P. M., as a token of additional respect, the Senate adjourned.

FIGHT FOR SENATE OFFICES.

Delay in Reorganization Due to a Determined Struggle for the Secretaryship.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—There has been much talk, since the meeting of Congress, about an imminent reorganization of the Senate force of employes. The employes who are in have been not less anxious than the persons who desire to occupy the offices that would have to be filled, and the pressure has all been from the outsiders. The Senate is aware of the fact that some improvement can be effected by a change of some of its officers. It is also aware that the impatience of some candidates is not stimulated by a desire to do good service so much as it is to fill places rewarded by high salaries and affording some opportunities to persons of enterprise.

A day or two ago it was rumored that the reorganization was to be made at once, and the new issue of the Congressional Directory was said to have been delayed in order to afford the printer a chance to add the names of the new Senate officers to the other corrections made since the first edition was issued. This rumor was at once authoritatively denied.

But there was something afoot, and to-day a caucus was held to consider steps to be taken to secure a reorganization. The result of this caucus was the appointment of a committee to consider and report a plan of reorganization which is to be reported on Jan. 19 for consideration in caucus. It is learned from several Republican Senators that a reorganization might have been effected much more promptly but for a difference of opinion upon a candidate for Secretary of the Senate.

The candidate most talked about is James S. Clarkson, now of New York and formerly of Iowa. Mr. Clarkson is urged by Senators Platt and Depew. But the many other Senators he is opposed. The opposition is both political and personal. That it is serious is admitted here in public print. The opposing Senators insist that a man who has been too prominent as an advocate before Congress or near it for certain commodities chiefly concerned when the McKinley Tariff bill was forced through to favor those interests is not just the man to be chosen for a place of prominence.

It is also asserted that one candidate for the Secretaryship demanded of Secretary of the Treasury Foster, during the administration of President Harrison, favors in the way of decisions that the head of the Treasury could not in self-respect allow to be granted. One Senator answers this assertion by saying that the man who made this demand was merely discharging certain obligations entered into before the election, and was following political custom.

It is asserted by Senators who oppose the nomination of Mr. Clarkson that they will resist his selection for the office of Secretary with all their power, not because they have any personal hostility to the candidate, but because they wish to avoid scandal after the election of a man about whom there is so much talk in his own party.

PLAN TO DESTROY THE TRUSTS.

Senator Butler Unfolds a Scheme in a Resolution Introduced in Senate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Senator Butler (Pop., N. C.,) to-day introduced a resolution "declaring the duty, power, and purpose of the Government to destroy trusts by removing the causes that produce them."

The plan proposed is to control the issuance of money and to control the railroads and telegraph and telephone lines by the Government, when, the resolution sets forth, "the three great trusts for evil known to civilization will have been destroyed, and at the same time the causes which have logically and inevitably produced the aggregation of great industrial trusts will be forever removed, and the reign of monopoly will be at an end."

Eulogies Delivered in the House.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Miscellaneous business of minor importance occupied the attention of the House to-day until 1 o'clock, after which an hour was devoted to eulogies upon the life and public services of the late Representative Green of Nebraska. The House then adjourned until Friday.

CONGRESSIONAL NOTES.

Representative Shafroth of Colorado has introduced a resolution proposing a woman suffrage amendment to the Constitution.

Senator Allen yesterday introduced a bill granting a pension of $10 a month to every soldier and sailor who served in the civil war for three months or more.

The House Ways and Means Committee ordered a favorable report upon Mr. Payne's bill to transmit goods in bond through the United States without the payment of duty, with a proviso authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend the operation of the act so far as it relates to the transmission of goods in bond into the free zone of Mexico so long as the Mexican free zone law exists.

Congressman Fitzgerald of Massachusetts yesterday introduced a bill for a "more equitable distribution of Chaplaincies in the army and navy." Mr. Fitzgerald says that at the present time the communicants of the Catholic Church form a larger percentage of the men in both the army and navy than those of any other Church, and that the percentage of Catholic Chaplains in the service is far below that of other Churches.

By the terms of a joint resolution introduced in the Senate yesterday by Mr. Turner, Washington, the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to erect at the Naval Academy at Annapolis a marble monument to the memory of Lieut. Philip V. Lansdale, Ensign John R. Monaghan, and the men who lost their lives in battle with the Samoans in April, 1899. The resolution appropriates $5,000 for the monument, and provides that it shall be inscribed suitably.

The flagship New York has sailed from St. Lucia for Barbados.

The transport McClellan has left San Juan de Puerto Rico for New York by way of Santiago.

The Old Hartford Starts for New York.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 10.—The Hartford, Admiral Farragut's historic flagship, sailed to-day on a cruise to New York in charge of Commander Hawley. The old warship has a complement of 340 men on board. She will first call at San Diego and then proceed to Valparaiso and Montevideo, and from there to New York.

WILL OF HARRY L. CHRISTIAN.

Counsel for the Estate Thinks There Will Be No Contest.

Harry L. Christian, who died at his home, at Fort Hamilton Avenue and Eighty-eighth Street, Brooklyn, on Saturday, left an estate estimated to be worth $600,000. In accordance with the will of Mr. Christian, the bulk of the estate will go to his family, consisting of his widow and four children. There are a number of bequests, however, including one of $30,000 to Mrs. Lucy De Freese; $10,000 to the Hans Christian Deaconesses' Home, in President Street, Brooklyn, and $5,000 to the Norwegian Hospital, Brooklyn.

There was a report that the will might be contested as a result of the bequest to Mrs. De Freese, but Park Commissioner George V. Brower, who is counsel for the Christian estate, said yesterday that he believed the estate would be settled in accordance with Mr. Christian's wishes.

Queens Expects a Lower Tax Rate.

The assessments for the year 1900 in the Borough of Queens show a reduction of about $1,000,000. The decrease is principally in Long Island City, but there is no increase in farm assessments over the figures of 1899. It is figured that the tax rate in the borough will be about 2.75 this year, as compared with 3.27 last year.

SECRETARY GAGE'S REPLY.

The reply of Secretary GAGE to the resolutions of the Senate and the House in regard to his course in depositing the internal revenue receipts with certain National banks is an evidently candid and straightforward statement of the general policy of the Treasury Department and of the facts specifically inquired into. Everybody knows that making these deposits is no new thing, and that it is provided for in a law enacted soon after the National banks were established. It serves the very important purpose of preventing an excessive accumulation of surplus funds in the Treasury, which would thereby be withdrawn from current use. No argument is needed to justify this policy, while a failure to pursue it whenever the occasion arises would defeat the purpose of the law and subject the Secretary to just criticism.

Mr. GAGE recalls the several occasions when these deposits have been made on a large scale, as during the refunding operations in 1879, at the time of the heavy surplus receipts in 1887-8, when the indebtedness of the Pacific Railroads to the Government was settled, in 1897, and when the loans were made to replenish the redemption fund under the last Administration and to raise a war revenue under the present one. All these cases fully justify themselves and need no defense. The Secretary then rehearses the efforts of the Treasury to relieve the stringency of the money market in the latter part of last year, including the anticipation of interest payments and the offer to purchase Government bonds, and states the reason for making the deposit of public money in the banks in pursuance of the same efforts. All these preliminary steps were not merely justified, but they were taken in the execution of an important trust imposed upon the Treasury and discharged by the present Secretary with scrupulous care and prudence.

These explanations would appear to be quite unnecessary but for the ignorance displayed in much of the criticism inflicted upon Secretary GAGE for his manner of performing a plain duty. That an explanation and justification of his manner of performing that duty should be deemed necessary is more humiliating to the public than to him, for his course in this matter showed the same careful and judicious regard for the public interests that he had previously displayed. There were internal revenue collections to be made at 113 offices and distributed at the outset to 68 depositories in proportion to the Government bonds put up by them for security. To make the distribution direct would be a clumsy and costly process, involving confusion and delay. The obvious solution of the difficulty was to designate one bank, which had put up sufficient security to cover the daily receipts, to receive the collections in the first instance and distribute them to the other depositories pro rata. It was inevitable that this should be one of the Clearing House banks of New York, and of these two, and only two, had promptly deposited the requisite amount of bonds. That one was chosen which had deposited the larger amount and had the better facilities for the work. The explanation is simple and it is sufficient. The choice requires no other defense than a plain statement of the facts.

The resolutions of inquiry raised another question intended apparently to reflect upon the motives or the integrity of the Secretary of the Treasury. It so happens that the same bank which was designated as the agent of the Treasury Department in receiving and distributing the internal revenue receipts, for the simple reason that it could not be legally done by the Sub-Treasury, had purchased the old Custom House building by bidding $190,000 more for it than was offered by anybody else. It was required to pay down any part of the purchase money in excess of $750,000 that it saw fit, and it chose to pay $3,215,000, or within $50,000 of the purchase price. It was advisable to leave this sum on deposit somewhere, and it was left where it was, credited to the Government, instead of being transferred to some other depository. This looks like a businesslike proceeding. The Custom House continued in possession of the Government under a lease, as the law required, though the title could not be passed until the final payment was made, but no rent has yet been paid for lack of an appropriation for the purpose. All this is a "plain tale" by which the critics of the Secretary of the Treasury are effectually put down.

A THING OF SHREDS AND PATCHES.

Mr. NEWLANDS, a Representative from Nevada, who is not a Democrat, being classed as "Silver," attended the caucus of the House Democrats on Tuesday night. He appears to have been the chief speaker of the evening, advising a union of "the elements opposed to the party now in power," and suggesting that an Advisory Committee be organized to consist of one member from each State, to be chosen from "Democrats, Populists, Silver Republicans, and Silver Independents."

A few days ago Populist leaders were in consultation with Mr. BRYAN at his home. The subject under discussion was the date of the National Convention of the Populists. The conclusion was, we believe, that it would be better to put off the Populist convention until after the Democrats had nominated BRYAN. It was feared that a prior Populist nomination might be distasteful to Democrats with foolish old-fashioned notions about their party.

And is it to this mongrel brood that the name and charter of the Democratic Party have been committed? There is no Democracy in them. They are alien to the teachings of JEFFERSON, JACKSON, and TILDEN. They revile the traditions of the Democratic Party, they are as ignorant as the beasts of its principles, they have no part in its heritage.

No mantle of Democracy covers the shoulders of these men. They wear a fool's motley, grotesquely patched together from the rags and tatters of Socialism, shiftlessness, discontent, and paranoia. Upon one side they touch elbows with the Social Democracy of EUGENE V. DEBS. On the other they blend indistinguishably with a mooncalfing multitude to whom the boon of sanity and the reasoning mind has been denied. Every type and variety of political adventurer and nondescript, the visionary and brainless "reformer," the windy preacher of new and raw faiths, the social nostrum man, the plain criminal, waiting for the looting to begin, and the perfectly unprincipled seeker after notoriety and office, these and other freaks and accidents of politics are all brought together under the banner of BRYAN.

The thing seems like some great and horrid joke, as if nature had paused in her steady evolution of political institutions to turn an awkward flipflap or two just to show that her unchanging purpose would not be checked or imperiled by a little cumbersome nonsense.

EXAMPLES OF UNSELFISH MILLIONAIRES

There appears to be some public interest in the millionaire and his millions, how he got them and what he does with them. THE TIMES pointed out the other day that Mr. CARNEGIE'S generous gifts to found libraries and endow schools of instruction in the mechanic arts constituted a justification of his wealth. Many readers of the paper forthwith wrote letters to it taking up the discussion and in general expressing the opinion that no man's fortune could be justified by its bestowal if it had been gathered in oppression and injustice. Altogether THE TIMES printed some three columns of letters upon this subject in its issue of last Sunday; and many more it was unable to print. The volume of the letters and the sentiments they expressed indicate a somewhat lively interest in the subject.

For one reason or another most persons who write letters to the newspapers about the millionaires are not friendly to them. There is a widespread notion that they are selfish and grasping. Some possessors of millions who might be named do seem to be open to that charge. At least, during their lifetimes their behavior gives color to the belief that they do not lie awake nights planning how they shall do good with their money daytimes. But to say that all millionaires are selfish and greedy is to express an opinion that is much too harsh and sweeping.

The example of Mr. CARNEGIE proves that the rule is not of universal application. Of course, he was working for himself primarily in the years of labor that brought him his fortune, but nobody would have the hardihood to deny that he did a vast amount of incidental good to others by giving employment to thousands of men and enabling them to support their families. And now, having withdrawn from active business, Mr. CARNEGIE is spending his large income in numberless benefactions that seem to have one common purpose—the promotion of the cause of popular education. We presume nobody will say that this is an indication of selfishness.

There has recently come to the knowledge of THE TIMES another example of unselfishness in association with millions, and it is not by any means the only example of its class. A gentleman who is at the head of a great industry in which he has amassed a fortune while giving employment to many thousands of wage-earners declares his intention of employing his wealth in such a manner that his works and factories shall be continued upon an assured and permanent foundation in order to protect his thousands of workmen against the calamity of being thrown out of employment. He feels that it would not be right for him to give away his money, because his business requires a very large capital, and its permanence might be imperiled if he withdrew his share in order to bestow it, by gift or bequest, upon objects of benefaction. In his view, the noblest, the most generous, and beneficent use he can make of his money is to leave it invested in his business under conditions that will assure the continued employment of his men.

He may be right or wrong about that. Perhaps some students of these highly interesting social problems will disagree with him. But at least, when a millionaire is thinking about the future of his workmen and making provision for their staying after he goes, it cannot be said that he is wholly selfish and greedy.

We think it would be well for the writers and teachers of the doctrines of modern Socialism to study the millionaires at first hand, not from pictures and the reports of yellowish newspapers. If the natural history and habits of the species were closely and candidly studied many a millionaire who is now put in the octopus class would be set down as a well-meaning and useful person.

"PALATIAL" FIRE TRAPS.

The fire in East Fifty-fifth Street by which two persons lost their lives reinforces the moral taught by the burning of the Windsor Hotel and by the burning within the last year or two of a number of private residences in fashionable parts of the city attended with loss of life. The moral is that the lavish expenditure of money either in taking up one's quarters at a fashionable hotel or in buying a costly house affords the lodger no guarantee whatever that the primary conditions of safety have been looked out for in his temporary or permanent abode.

No tenement house fire could have found a more easily combustible edifice than the Windsor to work its will upon. No frame house which the law allows to be built in the outlying parts of the city, or which may have survived the march of improvement in the heart of the city, could have offered less resistance to the flames or allowed its occupants a smaller chance for their lives when the fire broke out than the costly and apparently substantial residences which have been so quickly and completely consumed. These houses cost more than a hundred thousand dollars each. They were built in fashionable quarters, by fashionable architects and builders. The purchaser of one of them could not have ascertained for himself whether it was substantially or flimsily built, whether it would resist fire long enough to insure the safety of all the inmates, or whether it would burn like tinder and give them but a desperate chance of escape, without tearing off the costly "finish" and investigating the construction. No purchaser does in fact take that precaution. No purchaser ought to be required to take it. It ought to be a matter of course that the law has looked out for that. It is an impeachment of the civilization of New York that the law should not have looked out for it and that the buyer of a modern and very costly dwelling should find it, when the test came, without the most rudimentary precautions against swift destruction by fire.

It is not as if these precautions were unknown. In fact, they are perfectly well known and in the "tall buildings," commercial and domestic, they are applied. They are so effective that within a week a fire which broke out in one of the tall modern office buildings was confined to the floor in which it originated. A new building more than seven stories in height must be fire-proof in the sense of containing no combustible material in its structure. Below five stories it may be a mere fire trap, the danger of which is mitigated only by the exterior fire escapes which have so often been proved to be frail reliances. And in single dwellings even this precaution is omitted.

It is a municipal disgrace that this should be so. There are cities in which it is not so. In Vienna, in Paris, or in Berlin such a tragedy as that of the Windsor or such tragedies as have attended the destruction of these private houses would be out of the question. Why should we not enforce as high a standard of construction as is enforced anywhere? There is no satisfactory answer. The materials for the fire-proofing of interiors, metal and baked clay, were never anywhere so abundant or so cheap as they have been in this country during the past few years. And there have been made here ingenious and economical new applications of them. It is safe to say that the decorations of a fashionable house built for speculation in New York would pay for the cost of making it fire-proof or at least "slow-burning," so that the tragedies which have occurred in such houses would be impossible. It is not to be supposed that the speculative builder will spend, in ways which do not show, more money than the law compels him to spend. It is the law which is in fault in setting a lower standard of construction than prevails in more civilized communities and in occasionally, in consequence, sacrificing a family to the Moloch of "speculative building."

THE TRAFFIC OF FIFTH AVENUE.

We hope no reader of THE TIMES interested in the question of reserving Fifth Avenue for pleasure driving during certain hours overlooked the facts and figures given in yesterday's TIMES concerning the traffic of that avenue. Especially we hope that the showing was brought to the attention of every member of the Municipal Assembly. There is nothing like exact information to check vague rhetorical denunciation.

What this investigation showed was, in the first place, that the pleasure vehicles constitute a large majority of all the traffic upon Fifth Avenue in the afternoon. The afternoon selected was a normal fine Winter afternoon, and any such afternoon would doubtless show approximately the same results. The two hours selected were from 3:15 to 5:15, just before the close of business hours, and probably, in deliveries, the busiest of the day. The smallest proportion of pleasure to business traffic in any part of the avenue was two to one, the greatest seven to one, the average four to one. Therefore the drivers of pleasure vehicles have the rights of a distinct and overwhelming majority.

In the first place, this is to be considered in their favor. In the second place, it is to be considered that this is the only avenue from the central and the eastern parts of down town to the Park. Any other route would result in forcing the driver of a carriage to make his way to the Park across a narrow and crowded cross street, thereby adding to the congestion and confusion. On the other hand, the drivers of business vehicles, unless their destination is in the avenue itself, have other and less crowded routes at their command. They can take Madison Avenue, Lexington Avenue, Sixth Avenue, or Broadway, and on any one of them be able to get on faster, while they themselves constitute less of an obstruction. The inference is that they crowd Fifth Avenue because their drivers like to look at the show of equipages, though in doing so they both obstruct the procession and make it less worth seeing. There is another consideration of much weight. The pleasure carriages, if the roadway were reserved to them, could all move at a trot and in two lines, one bound north and one south. The irruption of loaded business wagons and trucks which move at a walk reduces the pace of the procession, and interferes with the enjoyment of everybody in it and of every pedestrian who takes pleasure in looking at it.

At the hearing announced by the committee of the Council for to-morrow, the advocates of restriction will have no difficulty in showing that restriction is demanded by the greatest good of the greatest number.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—That "all signs fail in a dry time" is a theory of remote formulation, and its acceptance has been so general that there is considerable reason for crediting it with the modest element of truth which all that even the best of proverbs possess. An argument for at least hoping that indications usually trustworthy do lead even the wisest astray in seasons of drought is to be found—joyfully by those of us who try to believe in the Weather Bureau—in the fact that in the unusually dry time of the past few months the Governmental prophets have been steadily diminishing whatever reputation for accuracy they may have had before. Formerly their critics have had to complain about the arrival of unheralded storms; now the grievance is that regularly once or twice a week these salaried seers gravely announce the speedy arrival of snow or rain—and the charming but unseasonable weather continues to threaten all this part of the country with the dangers and inconveniences of a severe water famine! And the salaried seers do not deign either to apologize for their failures or to explain them. Perhaps they, with their proper scientific contempt for ancient maxims, cannot be expected to take refuge behind a defense that has well served the needs of many an amateur student of cloud forms and wind currents. Still, any harbor is better than none, and really the weather men here and in Washington do owe us something more than haughty silence when they prognosticate tempest after tempest and nothing comes of it. They could easily and with no appreciable lack of dignity add to each of their daily bulletins a brief reference to that of the day before, telling just what happened to deflect or assuage the elemental anger in the path of which we had been supposed to be. The matter may seem a small one to the occupants of the tall towers scattered all over the country, but attention to our plea would materially accelerate the increase of public trust in their powers, upon which the improvement of the bureau's facilities so closely depends.

—A fierce correspondent, whose letter we published yesterday, used the harsh phrase, "alien vampires," in describing the foreign laborers who come to this country, work a few months or years, and then return to their homes, carrying with them the few hundred American dollars that in some parts of the Old World pass for a snug fortune. Our correspondent is certainly right in holding that these are not desirable immigrants, but we cannot help thinking that he greatly exaggerated their drain upon the Nation's financial resources, and that words much milder than "alien vampires" would adequately express the emotion they justify in calm observers. These temporary residents of the United States are simply the unassimilable element in the common run of immigrants, and it is just as well that they should betake themselves away as soon as they have acquired the only thing in America for which they have any use. The money they take or send abroad is not stolen, but earned by the performance of labor which real Americans, native or imported, have no particular inclination, or a very particular disinclination, to undertake. All the potentially good citizens we keep, and the others—well, their employers do not accuse them of getting something for nothing. It must be remembered, too, that these very fellows who have no ambition to acquire American privileges by the assumption of American responsibilities, go home in some degree bettered and broadened as well as enriched by their short stay in a land of freedom and progress, and that they therefore raise the level of their class in their own countries. Now every such elevation is directly profitable to us as well as theoretically pleasing, for it means an increase in the number of our foreign customers and a greater demand for our surplus products and manufactures. On the whole, the "alien vampires" deserve pity rather than hatred, and their scanty savings, though aggregating a few millions, perhaps, are as nothing compared with the amount of foreign capital that seeks and finds permanent investment here. Indeed, they are little more than nothing as compared with the total increment to our currency that is made by the immigrants who come and stay.

—If one could know just what amount of influence over their countrymen is possessed by the military politicians of Cuba it would be easier to decide what degree of foolishness of talk in which these eloquent fellows continue so frequently to indulge. On the one hand, they are few in number, and their volubility and fierceness are in inverse ratio to their demonstrated prowess on the field of battle. The average Cuban cannot fail to note these facts, and, not lacking intelligence, whatever else he may lack, it is possible that he pays no more attention to the vaporings of his fire-eaters than the average American does to the views of his irresponsible Aldermen on questions of National and international policy. On the other hand, the Cuban "Generals" of the baser and stupider sort are men with a dexterous command of high-sounding phrases—wherein they are vastly superior to their Aldermanic rivals—and they address auditors laid open to delusion by ignorance and prejudice. It is a notable fact that the preachers of distrust and advocates of rebellion talk in quite another tone when they know that their words are to reach American ears, and especially the ears of American officials. For instance, the four leaders whose return to Santiago from Havana caused so much excitement this week were loud in their criticisms of Gen. WOOD while waking the echoes of their own clubhouses, but later, when interviewed by The Associated Press representative, they expressed fervid confidence in the honest intentions of Gen. WOOD and his Government to permit Cuba to make, and as soon as possible, the promised trial of the delights of independence. Fanaticism as flexible as this is not especially dangerous, and there is probably not one of these professional orators who could not be permanently silenced by appointment to a modest office under those whom they denounce so bitterly as "intruders."

—A peculiar development of feminine enterprise is reported by The Portland Argus. It seems that two young women in Aroostook County—where potatoes grow large, many in the hill, and very good—recently asked themselves why they could not attain the joys of a visit to Boston at small expense by acting as fire tenders on a train of cars loaded with the easily freezing tubers. Hearing no objections from any quarter, they secured from one of the local potato exporters an appointment to the responsible but not very laborious position they sought, and when interviewed in Portland they expressed perfect contentment with their journey so far. The potato cars, while not luxurious, are comfortable enough, and nobody had troubled the guardians of the fires—fires necessary if not sacred, and in their unpoetic way quite as admirable as those of the ancient Vesta. It would be interesting to know how the young women will employ their time during the brief stay in Boston which their earnings will permit. One thing is certain—yes, two—they won't devote it to the hearing of anti-imperialist speeches, and they will return to the Aroostook with innumerable marvels to rehearse and none to suppress.

—If ALBERT JEREMIAH BEVERIDGE, the suddenly notable Senator from Indiana, had known what lancinating pains his speech on the Philippines would inflict on The Springfield Republican, he—well, of course, he would have made it just the same, but we are sure that pity for The Republican would have impaired his enjoyment of the applause that greeted his "maiden effort." For The Republican is very badly hurt, very badly, indeed. The Senator's theory as to where responsibility for the shooting of American soldiers lies is almost unendurable to it, and it finds little comfort even in closing a long editorial moan with this picturesque statement: "It is our opinion that Mr. BEVERIDGE talks like a young Attila come out of the West, and that if his Americanism is now the true brand, then indeed is the Republic no more."

—A few months ago an estimable and intelligent lady of this city sent a letter to this paper urging the claims of the so-called Christian Science and criticising THE NEW YORK TIMES for its opposition to that dangerous delusion. Only a few days ago the lady's illness was reported, and then came the announcement that she was attended by an educated physician, not at all given to the practices of the Bakerites. The explanation of the apparent discrepancy between theory and practice, which was offered when inquiry was made, is that the lady did not really mean all that she wrote. Much might be said by way of comment, but of what avail? It would be interesting, however, could one but learn in how many instances the real leaders of the pestilent sect resort to accepted methods and actual physicians when they themselves are suffering from physical ailments.

EXAMINATION OF PRINCIPALS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Much hilarity has recently been created in educational circles by the publication in the secular and educational press of the questions of the last Principals' examination. In view of the examination for Principals in March next, the questions, it is said, have a special interest for teachers. Below are a few specimens in psychology and the history of education. Wherever these questions are read aloud to fellow-teachers—as in schools, at the meeting of the Teachers' Association at the City College lately, in homes where teachers congregate—the reading is always greeted with shouts of laughter.

"It is also, I think, to be noted that it is above all, that philosophy of mind which regards mind as being, under more or less disguise, a process of sense-agglutination, which will generate a method in the forming of mind as pedantic in practice as it is unsound in theory. The growth of a mind, &c."—ad nauseam.

"Draw up in a series of propositions what you understand to be the meaning of this excerpt, and give briefly, with reasons, your views as to the truth of each proposition.

"Discuss the following:

"'The principle of association by previous contiguity in consciousness, we affirm to be the one psychological principle underlying all the mechanism of successive associated ideas.'

"'The presence of an idea of result in the motive helps the organism to make its movements precise and accurate, weeding out the useless movement ideas, and planting arrangements for the performance of useful movements.'

"Illustrate this statement and state educational corollaries."

And it is upon the mental mastication, digestion, and assimilation of such "educational rot" as the above that Principals of our public schools are made to-day! "Upon such meat do these our Caesars feed."

These examinations prove nothing, mean nothing, demonstrate nothing, except an ability to cram. Sentiment is beginning to crystallize against them. They are ridiculed, torn to shreds, by some of the very men who have succeeded. No such method of proving efficiency, therefore, can be right.

In our schools to-day we promote pupils from grade to grade and from the highest grade to the high schools without examination. And this is in accordance with the consensus of the best educational opinion. Yet first assistants, with long periods of successful experience behind them, must submit to the indignity of an examination for promotion in rank.

While it is true that some good material has been brought out by this method, (even the worst of methods will produce some good results,) it is also true, as you may be aware, that a great deal of good material has been knocked out—some of the very ablest first assistants in the schools. The self-respect of others of the first assistants precludes their going to these examinations, which they regard as an indignity to their professional pride, their professional experience, their professional ability.

Trained intellectual efficiency and executive ability must stand aside, and Principalships are awarded to-day on ability to cram. These examinations are educationally wrong—wrong in theory, wrong in principle, and wrong in practice.

What a farce it all is!

SUGGESTION TO LICENSE DRIVERS

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You take very good ground in yesterday's editorial on the subject of Fifth Avenue and what, if it be not "reckless," is at least "loose" driving. Would not the former be a very pertinent subject to bring before the Merchants' Association? If the bulk of the owners of our city delivery facilities (who are many of them also interested in the pleasure driving to which Fifth Avenue should mainly be devoted) voluntarily refrain from allowing the former or lesser interest to interfere with the latter, which they are probably long-headed enough to see, is really the greater—when they think of it—then the proposed Guggenheimer law will cause very little opposition or trouble.

As to the danger of putting boys in charge of delivery wagons, you state the case mildly, but I do not think boys are the only offenders. We have a regulation on the subject already, but it is only half effective. Here is a matter that comes home daily to every dweller in the city, yet it is endured, and daily accidents are witnessed and risks run because it is "everybody's business." We compel every owner of a steam boiler and every engineer to take out licenses before one can be used. Yet in every street where there may be no boiler within a mile we turn loose a horde of incompetents to maim, murder, and mangle more people than were ever hurt by boiler accidents. The wonder really is that more are not run down.

Why should there not be some police examination and license as to ordinary intelligence, sobriety, and knowledge as well for drivers as for engineers? Street car companies see to it that their men have some capacity and training because such a policy is to them plainly economical, but the ordinary owner of one or two delivery vehicles, be they carts, wagons, or trucks, seems to consider "any old" man or boy fit to drive, even if fit for nothing else. One need only observe the amelioration of conditions on the Boulevard since the police regulations were made and enforced, to say, "Let the good work go further."

THE FUTURE OF THE PACIFIC.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The sentiments which are to aid in the solution of the knotty problems in the Far East are those which are consistent with American history, greatness, and spirit, and in harmony with American opportunity and destiny. These sentiments courageously face the impending future and stand in marked contrast with those of regret and blame, of distrust and dread, which do not help the past, but hamper the present and hinder the coming events. The United States owes its present power to the principle of personal liberty in religion and politics; and why should men try to check the application of this principle in other lands where the iron hand of spoliation has made this application the only possible cure for the wrongs endured?

Our ancestors fought that the people of our Nation might be free; our fathers fought so all within our territory should be free; and now the spirit of liberty has reached out beyond our shores, and our brothers have fought that those near us may be free. The color line was crossed for liberty in the civil war, and territorial limits for liberty have been passed in the Cuban war. As in the civil war, the Nation scarcely knew what it was really doing, so now we hardly realize all, but the territorial boundaries of American liberty have been passed for Cuba, and who can show why the Philippines may not share the same blessings of liberty? These are the steps of liberty: First, liberty for ourselves; second, liberty for the enslaved among us; third, liberty for those oppressed near us, and we are taking a fourth, liberty, a genuine liberty, for those far from us. Before the nineteenth century closes an opportunity for true liberty, in religion and in government, will extend from the West Indies to the East Indies.

There is another view of this question. It may seem Utopian and unreal, but it is in the air as well as in the ether. It is based on the solidarity of the human race, and may be thus expressed: The whole is greater than its parts. The world is larger than any nation. In ancient times tribes strove incessantly; in later times, nations contested occasionally; now six European nations and one American represent the main centres of initiative in war. All other nations practically depend on the actions of these seven powers, which may, perhaps, be reduced still further to five living powers. Although three-fourths of the population of the world is under these five nations, we know they control the destinies of the world. By conquest or by commerce the political and religious standards of these living nations are being set up in all the nations. This is an admitted situation. Again, we know these five nations all belong to the great historic race. The Mongolians, the Indians, the Malays, and the negroes are all coming under the leadership of the Caucasian race in one or another of its greatest branches—the Teutonic, the Italic, or the Slavonic. Judging these powerful divisions by the standard of personal liberty in religion and politics, we must agree that the Teutons stand first. The Anglo-Saxon and Germanic nations have more liberty, and will give more liberty in the extending of their influence in Africa, in Asia, and in the islands than either the Latins or the Slavs. It is better for the world that freedom in conscience, in speech, in the press, in trade, and in government shall permeate the undeveloped races than that the monarchical and aristocratic, the military and exclusive ideas shall prevail among them.

For many centuries the shores of the Mediterranean formed the theatre of the world's most important events. The discovery of the Western Hemisphere transferred these great movements to the coasts of the Atlantic. The course of recent events indicates that the theatre of the world's greatest movements in the twentieth century is to be transferred to the coasts of Asia, Australia, and America, washed by the waves of the Pacific. The great cities of Australia and China face this way. Shanghai and San Francisco, equidistant from each other and from London, the world's metropolis, are bound to be centres of immense and intense action. Westward the star of the empire of freedom is bound to go, till it arouses from its sleep of ages the empire of China, with its hundreds of millions. It is decreed in destiny. Men can hinder it; men can hasten it. The Nicaragua Canal, the Pacific cables, the new steamship lines cannot be prevented much longer by the selfish interests of transcontinental railroads or the false ideas of transatlantic commerce. One-half the people of the world live in Asia alone. Hidden in the unworked mines of China are many times the coal and iron of Europe; the world wants this coal and iron, and will have it developed. New needs and aspirations are being awakened by missionaries and by merchants throughout domains to which the undeveloped resources of Europe are as insignificant as the Mediterranean of the days of Rome and Carthage seems to the future Pacific of San Francisco and Shanghai. Some of us will live to see these things. What is our attitude toward them?

Does the grocer refuse to deliver goods at a distance because he has not yet secured all the trade on his block? Does the minister expect ever to see in his congregation all to whom his is the nearest church? Shall we ignore the commerce of the Orient because we have not all of the Occidental trade? Shall we think all problems of local government must be solved before we help in the problems of the islands?

No. Let us boldly show the Filipinos how to develop their own islands, with only such temporary qualifications of suffrage, perhaps, as shall insure the success of democratic ideas. Doing only our duty by these islands, we shall stand by England in her "open-door" policy and find that by our attitude now, before the Russian Trans-Siberian Railway is completed and the partition or conquest of China has been effected, that we have prevented the amalgamation of the Slavonic and Mongolian resources, which is the really impending menace to the world-wide extension of the principle of liberty of conscience and in government offered through the Anglo-Saxon race. IRELAND AND CIVILIZATION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In an editorial last Saturday, speaking of a certain enthusiastic Hibernian of Chicago who objects to what he considers a biased version of English history, taught in the schools, you go out of your way to insult the memory of an eloquent and learned Irish priest by impugning his veracity and casting ridicule upon his statements.

The priest you speak of was the famous Father Tom Burke, without doubt one of the greatest Irish scholars and the greatest English-speaking pulpit orator of the century. What he said concerning the culture and proficiency in the art of music and the civilization of the Celts of the early centuries, as compared with the English of the same period, was not a figment of imagination, but merely a recital of historical facts. If you doubt this, you have but to read carefully the old annals of the Four Masters or seek information in the ancient Keltic manuscripts which are so abundant in the monasteries of Europe. You may not be aware of the fact that the most numerous collection of ancient parchments now existing are written in the ancient Irish language. I think that your would-be witty reference to the "po'try" of Ireland showed that your argument was so weak that you thought ridicule would serve to make your readers laugh. Ridicule, however, is a poor answer to facts. If Father Burke is dead, there are any number of priests of Irish origin who will be perfectly willing to prove to you, by appealing to historical facts, the truth of what Father Burke said concerning the relative civilization of England and Ireland in the ancient times.

Appeals in Law Cases.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Although averse to "rushing into print," I cannot forbear to answer the palpably unfair statements in the communication published in THE TIMES to-day over the signature "A. E. O."

I take it to be an axiomatic truth that of the two parties to a suit, one of them must fail. If that party happens to be in good financial circumstances and is convinced of the merit of his cause, it is dollars to doughnuts that an appeal will result. Appeals cost money; too much money, some in the profession think. And if the party who fails is poor, why an appeal is usually abandoned. This is only another instance of the power of wealth.

What shall the lawyer do? Advance the money? His highest duty to his client cannot demand that he act as his client's banker.

Now, why is it necessary to go further in order to explain why more appeals are not taken? Why continue on to a general tirade against the oft-maligned legal profession? Is it not a fact that they are better equipped now for their arduous duties than they ever were before? Is it not a fact that the morally perverse lawyer is the exception to-day rather than the rule? A fine encouragement, indeed, to the young aspiring practitioner, with high moral aims. Forsooth, if he is a "book-made lawyer," he is likely to "be found as deficient in moral integrity as in mental sense"! And as for the client who is told that "an appeal to a court of law for the righting of a wrong" is "a very uncertain, unsafe, and unsatisfactory business," what hope for him? Anarchy is his only salvation.

But as anarchy is out of the question, I suggest it still remains for "A. E. O." in his dilemma, to give warning to all those intending to apply to the law for a redress of their wrongs, by placing over the entrance to every law office and every law court in the country Dante's famous label to the infernal regions, "All hope abandon ye who enter here!"

A GERMAN FOR BRITISH SUCCESS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In regard to the controversy arising from the trouble between the English and the Boers, I would say that you have given space to the American, English, Irish, Dutch, and French points of view. I am a German, and at least in my case it is hard to form a distinct opinion on the same.

Having naturally had, like most of my countrymen, while in the Fatherland, more sympathy for the Boers, for the simple reason that a German understands and appreciates their character better, I came to this country about fifteen months ago. Having fortunately seen a great deal of the world while traveling, I found out soon enough that there is only one country, viz., the United States.

Considering the fact, that the latter is a daughter of Great Britain, that besides this all of the present British colonies flourish more or less, and, furthermore, knowing that the Boers are a slow, conservative, even uneducated set of people, I hope for liberty's and civilization's sake that the English will soon gain the desired success.

For the Care of Inebriates.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of to-day I read an account of the annual meeting of the Church Temperance Society. In the general conference the subject discussed was "Inebriates, and How to Treat Them." The proposition to commit inebriates to "workhouse, penitentiary, county jail, or reformatory" for a given period of time is doubtless an excellent one, but may I suggest an improvement on the plan? Would it not be just, considering the vast consumption of beer and spirits, and the vast income derived by certain individuals from this source, that these same individuals should bear the expense of maintaining the reformatory, &c., which is to house their victims, these purses they empty, and whose minds and bodies they degrade? Let a stamp tax be levied for this purpose upon every barrel of beer or spirits and a heavy fine imposed for adulteration. A course so singularly consistent with justice would without doubt result more beneficially to the community than a general tax levied for the purpose proposed. I. W. K.

Apology for English Criticism.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have noticed on different occasions in your "Topics of the Times" column extracts from English papers relative to, in their opinion, American shortcomings. I have also noticed that the extracts are nearly invariably from the same sources. The expressions uttered are not more irritating to Americans than to Englishmen, who regret such vaporings. The views thus aired are written by sundry superficial Britons, of whom a majority of their fellow-countrymen are heartily ashamed. I trust THE TIMES will be lenient in its criticisms for the sake of the greater number of Englishmen who deprecate but cannot prevent such articles. AN APOLOGIST.

Disposition of a Wife's Estate.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of the 6th inst., your "Answers to Correspondents" tells "Name Unnecessary" that under the laws of this State, if a woman dies without a will, leaving a husband and children, one-third of her estate goes to the husband and two-thirds to the children. Is this a correct statement of the law? It certainly is so far as personal estate is concerned. But not quite so as to the real property which a wife may leave under such circumstances. By the provisions of Section 1, Title "Descent," Birdseye's Revised Statutes, Page 858, whenever a person dies leaving real estate undevised, it descends, first, to the lineal descendants; second, to the father; third, to the mother, and fourth, to his collateral relatives. By Section 29 of the same title, it is provided that the estate of a husband as tenant by the courtesy shall not be affected by any of the provisions of said chapter. This is simply a life estate, and not an absolute estate, in the one-third of the realty. E. J. M.

A GENEALOGICAL HOMILY.

From The Bismarck Tribune.

You may believe 'tis true that your coursing blood is blue,
But science stern assures us that all healthy blood is red.
And the longest pedigree that grows on a family tree
Isn't half as beneficial as a good, long head.

You may refer with pride to your ancestors, beside Whose fame your light is dim, for letters, art, or pelf,
But I trust you will believe it is nobler to achieve
Enough that you may be some time an ancestor yourself.

The watchdog well who serves and who carefully observes
The strangers who approach and wakes the family with his bark,
Tho' he had no pedigree is a better dog for me
Than the dog that sleeps, e'en tho' his ancestors were in the Ark.

It is right that you admire, and admiring, you aspire
To trace a noble pathway in your genealogy,
But permit me to assure that no person, rich or poor,
Ever plucked a plum of greatness off the grandest family tree.

The man who is a King, Duke, or Lord, or anything
That's noble, tho' his ancestors were cobblers at the last
Has a much more honored way in this little world to-day
Than the cobbler whose ancestors governed kingdoms in the past.

And full many a man to-day, to whom honor we might pay
Has been overcome in living up to a proud ancestry,
And full many a man been laid, in an everlasting shade
By the branches of a towering, spreading, ancient family tree.

So don't take it much to heart when a man takes you apart
And tells you he was bred 'mid aristocracy's environs,
Tho' his ancestors came o'er in the Mayflower to this shore.
The logbook, still, may show that every one came o'er in irons.

GERMAN LINER LAUNCHED

The Emperor Sees the Deutschland Enter the Water.

VON BULOW MAKES A SPEECH

Refers to America's Friendship and Says Nothing Must Stand in the Way of Germany's Progress.

STETTIN, Jan. 10.—The Hamburg-American Line steamer Deutschland was successfully launched at the Vulcan dockyard at noon to-day in the presence of Emperor William and many notable people. The Minister of Foreign Affairs, Count von Bülow, christened the vessel. In his speech Count von Bülow dwelt upon the powerful development of the Hamburg-American Line, which, he said, with the North German Lloyd, had, during half a century, grown to be the greatest shipping company in the world. The new ship to-day added to their fleet, he continued, was to run on that high road of North Atlantic traffic which connected Germany with a friendly nation, the United States.

The ship had been built at the Vulcan dockyard, which began its career in as modest a way as the Hamburg-American Line, and now provided foreign navies with every type of ship. The Deutschland was intended to be the most powerful ship in the world and to surpass in speed all vessels afloat. As the capability of the Hamburg-American Line and the Vulcan yard increased, Germany, during the same period, began to regain what had been lost since the days of the Hanse. Since the decline of the latter, which went into ruin because the old empire did not afford it adequate support, and because then the German merchant was not sufficiently backed up by the State, Germany had turned away from the sea.

It was not until after the nation had regained its unity as a State, through the great Emperor and his immortal advisers, and the spirit of sacrifice and patriotism upon the part of all races and classes of the German people, that it again entered the theatre of the world.

Germany's present transoceanic policy was evolved from her mighty economic revival, which, in its turn, was the outcome of the creation of the empire. When German labor had won for itself a position in the markets of the world, Germany's foreign policy had to follow the development of her economic forces. Germany felt more and more that a nation which allowed itself to be pushed away from the sea would stand aloof from the busy life of the world. Germany, whose imports during the last four decades had risen from two and a half milliards in 1869 to eight and a half milliards in 1897, who, within thirty years, had increased fifteen-fold the tonnage of her merchant navy, who had moved up into second place in the shipping trade, ought not to remain behind in economic or political rivalry. Germany, who long had ceased to be an inland country in the heart of Europe, and who had also become commercially a world power in the front rank of rivalry, must also be strong enough on the sea to guard everywhere German peace, German honor, and German prosperity. Concluding, Count von Bülow said:

"If we have to overcome obstacles on the path marked out for us by destiny, to pass over difficult places, this will neither disconcert nor discourage us. Courageously, steadily, and energetically we must, and will advance toward our goal. The name this ship is to receive is the name of the first ship of the Hamburg-American Line, a small sailing vessel, which put to sea in 1888, from Hamburg to New York, with 220 passengers, that name which is the dearest, most sublime, and most sacred—Deutschland. I christen thee with the name of Deutschland."

After breaking a bottle of champagne across the steamer's bows, Count von Bülow said: "God bless and protect this ship. Protect the friendship and commerce between us and the United States."

The Minister then called for cheers for the "Leader of the Nation, the Emperor."

The weather was unfavorable and foggy. The Berliners arrived on two trains, the Emperor's party including, besides Count von Bülow, Admiral Tirpitz, Secretary of the Navy; Baron von Rheinbaden, Minister of the Interior; Dr. Studt, Minister of Public Instruction; Herr Thielen, Minister of Public Works, and Baron von Hammerstein, Minister of Agriculture, a number of Generals, the Hereditary Prince of Oldenburg, Secretary Jackson of the United States Embassy, and Commander Keehler, the United States Naval Attaché. The United States Ambassador, Mr. White, was unable to attend. There were also present the various Naval Attachés and the whole of the Chinese Embassy.

On the arrival of the Emperor and his suite they embarked on the Government yachts Dresel and Staewer, reaching the Vulcan wharf promptly at noon. Vociferous cheerings greeted the disembarkation of the Emperor, and the bands present simultaneously struck up the national anthem. His Majesty and his suite traversed the brief distance to the platform constructed for the occasion amidst the cheering of thousands of people and reached a pavilion, profusely decorated with flags, over which the imperial standard was run up as the Emperor entered. Count von Bülow, who was already there, wore a frock coat, and removed his hat as the Emperor entered. But he replaced it on a motion from his Majesty.

The Foreign Minister's speech was delivered resonantly and easily, without notes. He sharply accentuated each point. The Emperor listened attentively, frequently nodding his approval, especially when Count von Bülow declared Germany would not be cast down by difficulties and obstacles unexpectedly arising in her path. This evidently referred to the British seizures of German ships.

When Count von Bülow expressed the wish that the friendship of Germany with America would continue to grow, hearty applause emphasized the feeling of his hearers.

The whole speech was regarded as a fine effort. The Emperor congratulated the Minister, and scores of other distinguished people did the same.

The Emperor watched the launching of the steamer with keen interest. Everything was carried out smoothly. As the vessel glided into the water the assembled throngs, following the Emperor's lead, doffed their hats or helmets and hurrahed.

Commodore Albers has been appointed as Captain of the ship when she goes into commission.

The Deutschland is a twin-screw, 16,000-ton vessel, with engines of 35,000 horse power, and guaranteed to have a speed of twenty-three knots, which her builders claim she will exceed. Steam will be supplied by twelve double boilers, each provided with eight furnaces, and four single boilers, each with four furnaces. The boilers are constructed with a view to a working pressure of 225 pounds.

In magnitude the Deutschland is only surpassed by the Oceanic, which exceeds her slightly in dimensions and horse power.

The dimensions of the Deutschland are as follows: Length, 686¼ feet; width, 67¼ feet; depth, 44 feet. The staterooms will contain everything conceivable to enhance the comfort of the passengers, and a number of rooms will be arranged for the sole occupancy of those who would prefer to have a room to themselves.

This steamer, like all the others of the Hamburg-American Line, will be supplied with bilge keels, which are so great a factor in reducing the motion of a vessel that many passengers entirely escape the dreaded seasickness.

GERMANY'S FINANCIAL STATUS.

Surplus for 1898-9 Is 84,360,000 Marks —Budget Is Most Favorable.

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—In introducing the estimates in the Lower House of the Diet to-day the Minister of Finance, Dr. von Miquel, declared the budget was the most favorable ever submitted. He added that the surplus for 1898-9 was 84,360,000 marks, and the current year was expected to furnish equally satisfactory and favorable results. The new estimates, he explained, were no longer based on railroad receipts to the same extent as formerly. Dr. von Miquel also referred to the reserves contained in the estimates available for times of distress, and said debts amounting to 900,000,000 marks had been redeemed during the last decade.

Spain Honors German Crown Prince.

MADRID, Jan. 10.—The Queen Regent has appointed the Duke of Veragua, the descendant of Columbus, a Special Ambassador to go to Berlin for the purpose of investing Crown Prince Frederick William with the insignia of the Golden Fleece, her Majesty having signed a decree yesterday appointing the Crown Prince a knight of that order.

ADA REHAN TO APPEAR AGAIN.

A Company to be Formed for Her Under the Management of Klaw & Erlanger.

Miss Ada Rehan, after an absence from the stage of a period covering ten months, caused by the sudden death of Augustin Daly, her late manager and adviser for many years, has decided to resume her stage career and under the management of Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger, who obtained her signature to a contract yesterday calling for a ten weeks' tour, which will embrace the larger cities, beginning her engagement at Ford's Opera House, in Baltimore, March 12.

An effort will be made to sign as many members of Miss Rehan's original company as possible. Nearly all of them, however, are under contract with various managers. George Clarke, who went abroad with "The Children of the Ghetto" company, but has since returned, will be a member of Miss Rehan's cast. The répertoire in which the company will be seen consists of "Taming of the Shrew," "School for Scandal," "The Country Girl and Subtleties of Jealousy," "Love on Crutches," "Much Ado About Nothing," "Twelfth Night," and "The Last Word."

Richard Dorney, who was Augustin Daly's business manager, and one of the executors of the Daly estate, is responsible for the contract having been made with Klaw & Erlanger, and while the company is touring Mr. Dorney will accompany it and act as Miss Rehan's personal representative.

"LE PROPHETE" AT THE OPERA.

M. Alvarez Makes His First Appearance in the Title Role.

The season at the Metropolitan Opera House has at last reached the acute stage of Meyerbeer. This stage always causes more or less suffering among the seriously musical, but it does not last long and is never fatal. Usually this stage sets in with a vigorous attack of "Les Huguenots," but this year it has opened with a milder outbreak of "Le Prophète." These attacks are always of a recurring nature, but "Le Prophète" seldom comes back as often as "Les Huguenots." Whether it is that skating on the stage is exasperating, or that the burning of devoted mothers is not popular when not done in Italian, Meyerbeer's setting of the story of John of Leyden is not a strong attraction. It was heard last night by a large audience and there were both applause and the invaluable shouts of bravo, without which the life of a tenor robusto is a painful failure.

Yet the performance cannot be said to have made a deep impression, or if it did then the operatic public is easily impressed. It was far from being an inspiring representation of the work. There was more than the usual number of slips and hitches. Once the Prophet himself was late in keeping his appointment with the conductor, and Berta was generally afraid of the music, as if she were unfamiliar with it. The troops marched as if they had been fed on contract canned beef, and as if they were sadly in need of a few sharp drills. And the skaters skated as gracefully as usual. Of course the pageantry of the coronation scene had a bright assistance, but the antique coronation march, with its unchurchly vulgarity, had its usual effect on the nerves of the artistically sensitive. In truth, it is hard to take "Le Prophète" seriously. There are so many delicious absurdities in the unsuitability of the music to the sentiment that unless one is wholly ignorant of the meaning of the text the setting of Meyerbeer is simply annoying. That there are some good tunes for those who do not care about the words must be admitted. They would make an excellent quadrille.

M. Alvarez, the principal tenor, made his first appearance here in the rôle of John of Leyden. Those who thought they had rightly measured the abilities of this singer confidently predicted that in this part he would attain a degree of success not previously reached by him. That he did not make a profound impression was, therefore, a disappointment. His impersonation was dignified, but it was wholly deficient in the atmosphere of exaltation and mysticism which should surround the Prophet. His voice was certainly heard to better advantage than heretofore in some of the declamatory recitative, but in the more melodious passages it sounded choked, and was without charm. The famous "Roi du ciel" did not make its wonted effect.

Mme. Schumann-Heink sang Fides for the first time in French. Here praise for a consistent and touching dramatic interpretation must be coupled with some reserve in speaking of the singing. However, as the text must have presented many difficulties to the artist, she must be credited with sincerity of purpose. Miss Suzanne Adams was the Berta, and, as has been intimated, she did not seem to be very familiar with the part. M. Plançon was the familiar Oberthal of old, and Messrs. Bars, Devries, and de Reszke were the Anabaptists. The chorus discharged its duties in its customary style, and the orchestra contributed one of the most satisfactory elements to the performance. Signor Mancinelli conducted.

"MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM."

Herbert Beerbohm Tree's Production Well Received in London.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—Herbert Beerbohm Tree's production of "Midsummer Night's Dream," at Her Majesty's Theatre, this evening was received with the utmost enthusiasm. The mounting, costumes, and fairy scenes are very beautiful, although Puck's antics, in the hands of Miss Freear, are almost too prominent. The attention paid to the spectacular side of the production is altogether exceptional.

MISS GREY WANTS DAMAGES.

Mansfield's Former Leading Lady May Bring an Action Based on Alleged Harsh Treatment.

Katherine Grey, until recently Richard Mansfield's leading lady will not again appear as Roxane with Mr. Mansfield in "Cyrano de Bergerac." There appears to be some likelihood, however, of the actor and actress appearing in the roles of litigants in court. Miss Grey is ill in her apartments in the Hotel San Remo. She attributes her illness, which is of a nervous character, to Mr. Mansfield's harsh methods in rehearsals. Her condition became so serious that she was at length compelled to abandon her part, and she will seek to recover damages from the Mansfield Company, incorporated, of which Mr. Mansfield is one of the principal members, and A. M. Palmer the Secretary.

Mr. Hummel of Howe & Hummel, who is Miss Grey's attorney, said yesterday that no papers had been served in the case and that it was hoped that it might be settled out of court. By an arrangement with Mr. Palmer and Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer, the attorney for the Mansfield Company, Mr. Hummel will write a letter to Mr. Dittenhoefer setting forth the claims of Miss Grey, and if possible a settlement will be effected. Mr. Hummel said yesterday that if an amicable settlement could not be reached Mr. Mansfield would have to face the charges in court.

Mr. Hummel said that Miss Grey's contract was for a season of thirty weeks, dating from Oct. 2, 1899. There is no two weeks' cancellation clause in the agreement, so that her services were to be retained for the entire thirty weeks. Miss Grey says that Mr. Mansfield was violent in his treatment of her at rehearsals and used profane language. His treatment was such, she says, that it caused her to have an attack of hysteria, a condition closely approaching nervous prostration. Dr. Benjamin Torrens, her physician, says that if she does not return to the company she will be well in two weeks, but that if she returns, or the present trouble is prolonged, she is likely to fall into a state of melancholia.

Miss Grey has been advised by Mr. Hummel that under the conditions she describes she will not be compelled to go back to the company. The specific charges which may be made have not been given out, and if Mr. Mansfield agrees to concessions they will not be, as the case will be dropped, nor is the amount stated for which it is proposed to sue.

If suit is begun it will be on the ground. Mr. Hummel says, that no servant need work for an employer if he makes it so objectionable that it is impossible for the servant to continue, and on this basis Miss Grey, he says, has an unquestionable cause for damages. Miss Grey yesterday sent to the theatre for her trunks and properties.

A New Theatre for Brooklyn.

A new theatre is to be erected in the old Williamsburg section of Brooklyn by Hyde & Behman, to take the place of the Empire Theatre in South Sixth Street, near Bedford Avenue. About three feet of the rear of the old playhouse will have to come down to make room for the new East River Bridge. The new building will be at Graham Avenue and Debevoise Street. The building will have a seating capacity of 1,400 and will be completed in the Fall.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The morning yesterday saw the avenue and the fashionable streets up town comparatively deserted, and the rain gave a good excuse for the devotees of gayety to stay indoors. The clubs were well filled with the men of leisure, and the women who are going out this Winter were glad of the opportunity to rest after the gayeties of the last few days. "Le Prophète," which was sung at the Metropolitan last night, brought out a large audience, and the curiosity seekers in the parquet, and especially the people from out of town, had the treat of seeing some of the gowns worn Monday night at the Drexel ball, and which were donned again for the opera.

***

The incidents of yesterday, for the day brought more of incident than event in the social world, were a theatre party given by Mrs. H. De B. Parsons (Miss Walker) for Miss Evelyn Parsons, a dinner by Mrs. E. Livingston Ludlow of twenty covers, and numerous "at homes," including those of Mrs. Livingston Center and Miss Inness of 120 East Twenty-fourth Street, and Mrs. William A. Perry of 7 East Fifty-sixth Street.

***

To-day's social programme is much more full of incident than was that of yesterday. Receptions will be given this afternoon by Mrs. George F. Shrady, Sr., at which her daughter, Mrs. Edwin Gould, and her daughters-in-law, Mrs. Henry M. Shrady and Mrs. George F. Shrady, Jr., will assist, and by Mrs. Francis Burrall Hoffman (Miss Shattuck) of 58 East Seventy-ninth Street. This last reception will mark Mrs. Hoffman's re-entrée to society, from which she has been absent nearly two years on account of mourning for her mother, Mrs. Shattuck. Mrs. George S. Scott of 15 Washington Square will give a dinner of eighteen covers, and Mrs. John Rockefeller of 4 West Fifty-fourth Street will give a dinner for their fellows on their trip to Alaska last Summer, and Mrs. Charles S. Abercrombie of 29 Madison Square North will give a luncheon. There will be a "Kipling afternoon" at the residence of Mrs. Henry Holt, 711 Madison Avenue, and the evening will bring the second Cinderella cotillion at Dodworth's and a dance at Sherry's, to be given by Mrs. Adolphe De Bary for her daughters. The Knickerbocker Whist Club will also meet at Mrs. Edward Lyman Short's residence, 20 West Thirty-seventh Street, this evening.

***

La Champagne, sailing for Havre to-day, has booked among other passengers M. Victor Capoul, M. D. Howell, Mrs. Warren Knapp, F. B. Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. A. Taylor and child, and E. R. Townsend. The report that the St. Paul of the American Line had been chartered as a transport by the British Government for use in the Transvaal war is denied.

The open Winter has permitted the devotees of fox hunting on Long Island to continue their runs with the hounds even to this unusually late day. There was a hunt on Tuesday morning, with a run after three live foxes, two of which gave up their brushes, and among those who rode were Mr. and Mrs. C. Albert Stevens, Mrs. J. E. Smith Hadden, H. S. Page, William A. Hazard, Ernest Hayes, J. E. Willard Roby, Maxwell Stevenson, George A. Magoun, and Harry K. Vingut.

The news of the death of Lady Alice Montagu, second daughter of the Duchess of Manchester, formerly Miss Consuelo Yznaga of this city, which occurred yesterday at Davos-Platz, a health resort in Switzerland, well known through the description of it given by Beatrice Harraden in "Ships That Pass in the Night," while it occasioned no surprise, was received with great regret. There was universal expression of sympathy for the Duchess of Manchester, who has now lost within two years her two beautiful daughters, Lady Alice's elder sister, Lady Mary, having died in Rome of typhoid fever in 1898. The grandmother of the dead girl, Mrs. Yznaga, is now at her plantation in Louisiana. The young Duke of Manchester and the sister and brother of the Duchess of Manchester, Miss Emily Yznaga and Mr. Fernando Yznaga, were at the deathbed.

Mrs. H. De Berkeley Parsons of 294 Madison Avenue gave a theatre party last evening for her niece, Miss Evelyn Parsons, a daughter of Mrs. Schuyler Livingston Parsons and granddaughter of Mrs. William Barclay Parsons. The débutante guests were, besides Miss Parsons, Miss Marian Fish, Miss Dodge, and Miss Josephine Williams, and the young men guests were Mr. Maxwell Stevenson, Mr. Bradish Johnson, Mr. Barclay Kountze, and Mr. Edgar Phelps. Following the play a supper was served at Mrs. Parsons's residence.

***

The engagement was announced yesterday in Washington of Mr. John P. Story, Jr., one of the most prominent of Washington's young bachelors, and Miss Jane Abert, a beautiful débutante of the capital. The young couple are said to have met only five weeks ago. Their wedding will be celebrated at Eastertide. The first Bachelors' cotillion of the season will be given at the National Rifles' Armory in Washington on Tuesday evening next. Mrs. Burke-Roche and Mr. and Mrs. Edmund L. Bayles of this city have been visiting Washington, and were the guests of Senator Depew at dinner on Tuesday evening.

***

To-morrow night will bring the first Assembly Ball in Philadelphia. Among the New Yorkers who will go over will be Col. William Jay and Mrs. Jay, who leave to-day for the Quaker City, and who will there be the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer. The first St. Cecelia Ball will take place this evening in Charleston, S. C. The Charleston St. Cecelia and the Philadelphia Assembly Balls are the oldest in America, and have eventful and interesting histories.

***

On the evening of Feb. 22 a bal poudré will be given in the armory of the new Berkeley School, at Forty-ninth Street and Madison Avenue. The patronesses are Mrs. J. Wells Champney, Mrs. George S. Shrady, Mrs. Henry H. Rogers, Mrs. E. L. Alexander, Mrs. Edward Holbrook, Mrs. Joseph Eastman, Mrs. Charles Pfizer, Jr., Mrs. Minot J. Savage, Mrs. Bruce Price, Mrs. R. S. Peale, and others, who form the Board of Managers and officers of the Messiah Home for Children. The proceeds of the bal poudré are to be turned over to this charity. It is intended to make this ball a very pretty one, and it is hoped that it will net a large sum for the Messiah Home.

The engagement is announced of the Rev. Stephen Van Rensselaer, a son of Mr. Eugene Van Rensselaer of 110 East Thirtieth Street, this city, and a nephew of Mrs. Howard Townsend, and Miss Mary Carpenter of Milbrook, N. Y., a daughter of the late Jacob Carpenter and a sister of Mrs. J. Tuckerman Tower. Miss Carpenter is a clever writer and a member of the organization known as the "Little Sisters of the Pen." Mr. Van Rensselaer is in charge of the Episcopal parish at New Lenox, Mass.

Thus far no notable entertainment, private or public, has been announced for the night of Feb. 1, and the managers of the Charity Ball, to be given that evening in the Astoria ballroom and Astor Gallery, are very hopeful that New York hostesses will respect their suggestion and request that the evening be left for the ball without other distractions. The boxes are selling well, and the usual long list of patronesses and Floor Committees is being prepared and will soon be published. Mr. Alexander Hadden is to be floor manager, as usual. The Charity Ball has taken a new lease of life since its managers' very wise move of the affair to the Astoria, and promises to be even more successful this year than last.

Jekyl Island has an unusual number of visitors for this season of the year. Game has been extremely abundant there. Ringneck pheasants are now seen all over the island, and there are many young quail, as there was no rainy season last Summer to drown them out, while wild turkeys are numerous. Robert Goelet and Arthur Iselin of this city have been there of late shooting, with a party, among whose members were also Mrs. Stickney and Miss Struthers of Philadelphia. Last week the party had an exciting mink and coon hunt, which resulted in a bag of two minks and nine coons. Among Philadelphians at Jekyl Island are Mr. and Mrs. William Struthers and William S. Ellis.

Philadelphia has been trying the plan of holding days at home, so strenuously advocated by the New York Social Register for this city, in certain districts on certain days. The idea was put to a test on Monday last, when most of the women living in Spruce Street, below Broad, were "at home," and as a consequence all had very successful days and were unanimous in praising the new idea. It seems a pity that New York society women cannot come together and put this same plan into execution here.

Mrs. Chauncey McKeever, wife of Gen. McKeever, died in Washington on Tuesday. She was Miss Fanny Chauncey, a daughter of the late William Chauncey of this city, and the mother of Mrs. John Henry Purdy of New York and the Misses Helen C. and Elsie McKeever, and the aunt of Mrs. Hoffman Miller and Mrs. Philip Blagden Thompson of this city.

***

Mrs. J. B. Haggin of 587 Fifth Avenue gave a dinner dance last night for her sister, Miss Armisden, who is spending the Winter with her, and for Miss Edith Lounsbery, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard P. Lounsbery. The guests included the Misses Fanshawe, Hollister, Low, and Robinson, and Messrs. Hollister, McVickar, Raborg, and Whitman. The dancing was to banjo music.

SENATOR DEPEW ENTERTAINS.

Gives a Dinner at His Home in Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Senator Depew and his niece, Miss Paulding, entertained at a large dinner last night at the Corcoran home, where the drawing rooms and ballroom were elaborately adorned with roses and ferns.

The Senator's guests included the British Ambassador and Lady Pauncefote, Justice and Mrs. Brown, Justice Brewer, the Secretary of State and Mrs. Hay, the Secretary of War and Mrs. Root, the Minister from Austria-Hungary and Baroness Hengelmuller, Senator and Mrs. Wetmore, Senator and Mrs. Lodge, Senator and Mrs. T. C. Platt, Gen. and Mrs. Miles, Mr. and Mrs. Wayne MacVeagh, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Andrews, Mr. and Mrs. Baylis, and Mrs. Burke-Roche of New York, Mrs. John Davis, Miss Hegeman, Senator Hanna, Senator Kean, and Mrs. Smalley.

A BALL FOR MISS BIDDLE.

J. L. Biddle Entertains in Honor of His Niece in Philadelphia.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 10.—Horticultural Hall was the scene of a brilliant assemblage of guests this evening, when Joseph Lyman Biddle gave a large ball in honor of his niece, Miss Edith Biddle. The large foyer was beautifully decorated with greens, smilax, and white flowers, while the arches in the room were lined with orchids and American Beauty roses, through which numberless electric lights cast their light.

Mr. Biddle received his guests at the head of the grand stairway, and was assisted by Mrs. Arthur Biddle and Mrs. Henry William Biddle. Supper was served at midnight at small tables up and down stairs. The cotillion began at 2 o'clock, and 150 couples took part in it. It was led by Sidney Keith and Miss Edith Biddle. Silver matchboxes, walking sticks, and pipes for the men, and parasols and workbags for the women were the favors.

WEDS GEN. MILES'S DAUGHTER.

Capt. Samuel Reber, U. S. A., the Bridegroom, Is Also a Second Cousin of the Bride.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—Miss Cecelia Sherman Miles and Capt. Samuel Reber, United States Army, were married to-day at St. John's Church, the Rev. Dr. Alexander Mackay-Smith, officiating, assisted by the Rev. Dean Davis of St. Louis. A breakfast at which several hundred guests were present followed at the residence of Gen. and Mrs. Miles, after which Capt. and Mrs. Reber left for a Southern trip. They will go later to Governors Island, where the Captain is stationed. St. John's Church was far from large enough to accommodate the guests comfortably.

The bride and groom being second cousins, the interest in the event among the various ramifications of the Miles, Sherman, Hoyt, Reber, and other families connected by marriage brought together a large representation of relatives. The ushers were Capt. Montgomery Macomb of the artillery, Col. Francis Michler of Gen. Miles's staff, Capt. Squires of the Signal Corps, Major T. B. Mott, aide to Gen. Merritt; Dr. Patterson of Philadelphia, Mr. P. T. Sherman, son of the late Gen. Sherman, and Mr. John B. Henderson, Jr., of this city.

When the bride and Gen. Miles arrived, the ushers led the bridal procession to the chancel. The bridesmaids followed in couples. They were Miss Reber, sister of the groom; Miss Sherman of Cleveland, Miss Jessie Gary of Baltimore, Miss Gilmore, Miss Deering, Miss Marion Lowery, and Miss Rosina Hoyt. Last of all came the maid of honor, Miss Annie Hoyt, preceding the bride and her father.

The groom and his best man, Mr. Max Reber of St. Louis, entered the chancel from the vestry, the officiating ministers preceding them. At the chancel rail Gen. Miles relinquished his daughter to the groom's keeping.

The bride's gown was of white satin, and so profusely trimmed with point lace as to present the appearance of a lace dress. A yoke of lace had a soft bertha effect of narrow lace, in which gleamed a diamond harvest-moon brooch. Her veil was deeply bordered with lace like that on her dress, and fell away to the end of her train. A wreath of orange blossoms was worn and another spray trimmed the corsage.

The dress of the maid of honor was of chantilly lace over white silk and rosettes of white liberty velvet trimmed the bodice. The bridesmaids' dresses were of the same lace, similarly made, only the velvet rosettes were in pale blue, as was the high trimming of the white toques.

Mrs. Miles wore cream lace over white silk, with touches of turquois velvet and edges of dark fur in the trimming. A jetted tulle bonnet was worn. Gen. Miles and all the military men of the bridal party, as well as all the army officers present, were in full uniform.

Ex-Secretary of War and Mrs. Daniel S. Lamont sat near the Miles family and in the pews reserved for the Diplomatic Corps there were present Lord and Lady Pauncefote, the German Ambassador, the Mexican Ambassador and Mrs. Aspiroz, the Russian Ambassador and Miss Cassini, Mr. and Mrs. De Wollant, and the Belgian Minister and other representatives of foreign Governments.

Other guests included Secretary and Mrs. Hay, the Misses Hay, Mrs. Grant, Mrs. Fred. D. Grant, Miss Sartoris, Mrs. Hamlin Lane Johnston, Justice and Mrs. White, Justice and Mrs. Brown, Assistant Secretary Meiklejohn, Col. and Mrs. Bingham, Mrs. Gage, Mrs. Smith, Miss Griggs, Miss Cockrell, Gen. and Mrs. Rochester, Gen. and Mrs. Wilson, Mrs. Bloomer, Mrs. John Davis, Miss Davis, Mrs. Audenreid, the Chinese Minister and Mrs. Wu, Mrs. Fairbanks, Senator and Mrs. Hoar, Mrs. Cushman K. Davis, Mrs. S. B. Elkins, Mrs. Westinghouse, Mrs. J. Thomson Swan, Gen. Moore, Mrs. C. C. Glover, Major and Mrs. Parker, Gen. and Mrs. Sternberg, Mrs. R. R. Hitt, the Misses Patten, the Misses Sheridan, Adjt. Gen. Corbin, Mrs. Hattie Plaine-Beale, Mrs. Burrows, the Misses Greely, Mrs. Mackay-Smith, Miss Adee, Mr. and Mrs. Hamlin, Mrs. J. S. Webb, Miss Webb, Mrs. Richardson Clover, Mrs. and the Misses Foraker, Mrs. and the Misses Quay, the Swiss Minister and Mrs. Pioda, Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge, and Mr. and Mrs. Henry Villard of New York.

Mrs. Samuel Reber of St. Louis, mother of the groom, was present. Several hundred guests attended the wedding breakfast at Gen. and Mrs. Miles's house, in N Street. The presents were of great value and beauty.

Della Rovere—Tilghman.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 10.—This morning, in the beautiful Church of the Augustinian Fathers, at Villa Nova, near Philadelphia, a marriage of international interest took place. Miss Susan Tilghman, daughter of Mrs. Richard Tilghman, was married to Don Roderico Lante Della Rovere. Owing to the recent death of the bride's father the wedding was a quiet one, the invitations being confined to the relatives and intimate friends of the bride's family. The guests left the Broad Street station at 10:45 o'clock and arrived at Villa Nova by 11:30 o'clock, the hour named for the ceremony.

The decorations in the church were not elaborate, and the altar was decorated with white roses. There were no bridesmaids or ushers. Miss Tilghman entered the church upon the arm of her brother, Benjamin Chew Tilghman, who gave her away. She wore a gown of white cloth and hat trimmed with white feathers. She was preceded up the aisle by her niece, Miss Edith Nalle, who acted as flower girl.

The bridegroom was attended by Robert Toland, who acted as best man. After the marriage service a nuptial mass was said. Immediately after the ceremony a breakfast followed at the residence of Mrs. Jesse Nalle, the bride's sister, at Bryn Mawr.

The wedding which took place to-day unites two families which have played conspicuous paris in the history of their respective countries. The bridegroom is the son of the Duca Lante Della Rovere, one of the most ancient of Italian families. His history is closely identified with that of the Eternal City itself, for in its long and eventful history it can boast two Popes and a number of Cardinals. It has also been renowned for loyalty to the Holy See. The mother of the present Duke was an American, a Miss Davis of New York. His country place is thirty miles from Rome, and is one of the show places of Italy.

The bride comes of one of the oldest and most distinguished of American families. They trace their descent in England as far back as the reign of Edward III., and came to this country as early as 1664. They settled in Maryland, where they became distinguished in the social and political life of the country. Edward Tilghman, cousin of the celebrated Chief Justice Tilghman, was the first one to come to Philadelphia, in 1769. He married a daughter of Chief Justice Chew.

Mulford—Day.

Special to The New York Times.

ORANGE, N. J., Jan. 10.—At Grace Episcopal Church to-night Miss Madeline Emma Day, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Horace W. Day of East Orange, was married to Vincent Strong Mulford of Montclair, by the rector of the church, the Rev. Dr. Anthony Schuyler, assisted by Archdeacon Mann. The church was filled with society people. The wedding march from "Lohengrin" was sung by the full vested choir of the church as the bridal party entered. The ceremony was followed by a large reception at the home of the bride's parents. Miss Florence Day, the bride's sister, was the maid of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Agnes Putnam of Saratoga, Miss Katharine Whiting of New York, Miss Louise Lord, Miss Sally Coolidge, and Miss Caro Ward of the Oranges. Charles Hickok was best man, and the ushers were Lewis Mulford, the bridegroom's brother; Leslie Parsons, Percy Ingalls, and J. Fraser Goodwin of Montclair, Clarence Crocker and J. Warren Alford of East Orange. The bride wore a gown of white satin, en traine, trimmed with chiffon and orange blossoms, the bodice being of duchesse lace and orange blossoms and the veil caught up with a diamond sunburst, the gift of the bridegroom. She carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley, orange blossoms, and white roses.

Robinson—Abell.

Mr. Eugene Nugent Robinson, son of Mr. Nugent Robinson, a Commander in the New York Naval Reserve, better known to his friends as "Jingo" Robinson, and Miss Alice Louise Abell, daughter of Mrs. De Lancey Treadwell Smith of 222 West Seventy-first Street, were married yesterday at noon in the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, Seventy-first Street and Broadway. The Rev. Matthew Taylor, rector of the church, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Paschal of Washington, performed the ceremony. The church was decorated with palms and white roses. The bride entered the church on the arm of her brother, Charles Lee Abell, of Buffalo. Miss Mary Edna Abell, a sister of the bride, was her maid of honor. The bridegroom's best man was his brother, Mr. St. John Robinson, and the ushers were Major Thomas E. Buek, Twelfth Regiment; Mr. Gerard B. Townsend, Mr. Arthur R. Pope, and Mr. Frank Orr. The bride's gown was of white satin, with corsage of Renaissance lace and white chiffon. Her tulle veil was fastened with a diamond crescent, and she carried a bouquet of lilies of the valley. The young maid of honor was in white mull and point d'esprit, and carried pink roses. The flower girl was Miss Eugenia Kelly. A breakfast of about 100 covers was served after the ceremony at the residence of the bride's mother.

Owsley—Fowler.

Dr. Henry Farrer Owsley and Miss Gertrude Isabelle Fowler, daughter of Dr. George B. Fowler, were married yesterday afternoon in the Collegiate Dutch Reformed Church, Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street. The Rev. Dr. Abbott E. Kittredge, pastor of the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, performed the ceremony.

The bride wore a gown of white satin brocade, trimmed with point lace. Miss Annie Wilbur of Flatbush, L. I., a cousin of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore a gown of white lace. The bridesmaids were Miss Mabel Prince and Miss Sadie Longmire of Brooklyn, cousins of the bride; Miss Louise Owsley, a sister of the bridegroom; Miss Louisa Worthington, Miss Mabel Denman, and Miss Lilian Peck. Their dresses were of yellow and lilac, with hats to match. The flower girls were Miss Dorothy Black and Miss Mildred Havens, also cousins of the bride. Dr. Owsley's best man was his brother, William Owsley. The ushers were Mr. Benjamin Prince, the bride's uncle; Mr. Charles Owsley, brother of the bridegroom; Mr. Edward Fowler, and Dr. Nelson Pattison.

Ormsbee—Putnam.

Miss Edith Lawrence Putnam, daughter of Charles Franklin Putnam of Fitchburg, Mass., and Malcolm Hammond Ormsbee, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herman W. Ormsbee of 55 Willow Street, Brooklyn, were married last evening at the home of the bride's aunt at 137 Henry Street, Brooklyn. The Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, performed the ceremony. Dr. Rodney Fiske, Aaron Claflin, Sterling Peters, and William E. Carhardt acted as ushers. After a honeymoon trip of one month the couple will live in Brooklyn.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Philip Bissinger.

Philip Bissinger, President of the German Savings Bank, and head of the diamond importing firm of Bissinger & Co., 20 John Street, died yesterday at his apartments, 19 East Thirty-fourth Street. Mr. Bissinger was born in Fiehingen, Germany, in 1827. In 1849 he came to New York as the agent of a German diamond house, and shortly afterward went into business on his own account. In the same year he and nineteen other young men founded the German Savings Bank. The original capital was $5,000, of which each subscribed $250. Mr. Bissinger was a Director in the German-American Bank and the Manhattan Life Insurance Company. He was a member of the Chamber of Commerce, the Liederkranz, the New York Club, and numerous philanthropic organizations. He was President also of the German Immigration Society.

Jefferson Kearny Clark.

Jefferson Kearny Clark died Tuesday at his home, at 35 East Fiftieth Street. He was seventy-six years old. Mr. Clark was a son of William Clark, Territorial Governor of Missouri and the explorer of the Lewis and Clark frontier expedition. He was born in St. Louis, but spent his boyhood in Flushing. After receiving his education he returned to St. Louis.

In 1849 he married Miss Glasgow of St. Louis, a daughter of William Glasgow and Sarah Mitchell Glasgow of Virginia, who was a lineal descendant of Sir Humphrey Forester of Aldermaston, England. Six years ago Mr. Clark came to New York. The last years of his life were spent in travelling and in experimenting with electricity. The funeral will take place in St. Louis.

Col. A. D. Hope.

Col. A. D. Hope died at his home in Roselle N. J., yesterday, from heart failure, following a long illness. Col. Hope was eighty-three years old. He was born in Clinton, N. J. He was the founder of the Hope Express Company, which was afterward merged with the Adams Company. During the civil war Col. Hope served on the staff of Gov. Alden. He leaves a wife and two sons.

Gen. Felipe Berriozabal.

Gen. Felipe Berriozabal Minister of War and one of Mexico's ablest commanders and patriots, died Tuesday night in the City of Mexico. President Diaz called at the Minister's house several times Tuesday and displayed the greatest sorrow over the illness of his former companion in the army and present member of his Cabinet. The Minister's son, who is Mexican Consul at Chicago, has been summoned by telegraph.

STATE APPOINTMENTS MADE

Gov. Roosevelt Sends a Long List to the Senate.

New Tax Commissioner, Manager of Elmira Reformatory, and State Charity Commissioner Among Them.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—The adjourned session of the Senate was opened at 8:30 o'clock to-night, Timothy E. Ellsworth presiding, in the absence of Lieut. Gov. Timothy L. Woodruff, who is in New York. Conspicuous among the floral decorations was a gift of bridesmaids' roses on the desk of Senator Ford from the Twenty-first Assembly District. Republican Senators Grady and Stranahan were also the recipients of flowers.

The Governor sent in the following appointments for confirmation, which were referred to the proper committees:

Manager of the exhibit of the State of New York at the Pan-American Exposition of 1901, Andrew S. Hammersley of New York County.

Attorney of the Seneca Nation of Indians, Eugene A. Nash of Little Valley.

Member of State Board of Tax Commissioners, Lester F. Stearns of Dunkirk.

Manager of the Collins State Homeopathic Hospital, George W. Seymour of Westfield.

Manager of New York State Reformatory at Elmira, Charles A. Beckett of New York City.

Commissioners of the Watkins Glen reservation, William B. Osborne of Victor, William H. Walt of Watkins, Jonas Vanduser of Horseheads, John Allen Clute of Watkins, and James B. Rathbone of Elmira.

Commissioner State Board of Charities—Eugene A. Philbin of New York City.

Manager of the Thomas Asylum for Orphan and Destitute Indian Children—Chester C. Lay of Versailles.

Commissioner of Quarantine—Hugh McRoberts of Tompkinsville.

Managers of the House of Refuge for Women at Hudson—Anna Teall Halcomb of Syracuse, Thomas Wilson of Claverack, Marcia Chase Powell of Ghent, and Howard Townsend of New York County.

Managers of the Western House of Refuge for Women at Albion—Sarah E. Gavin of Buffalo, Francis H. Gates of Chittenango, William J. Sterritt of Middleport, Frederic Almy of Buffalo, Etta Elsner Falker of Syracuse, and Emily F. Swett, M. D., of Medina.

Manager Hudson River State Hospital—Catharine Augusta Newbold of Poughkeepsie.

Manager Craig Colony for Epileptics—George Elmer Gorham, M. D., of Albany.

Manager Utica State Hospital—Frederick T. Proctor of Utica.

Manager Binghamton State Hospital—Andrew J. French of Oneida.

Manager New York State Reformatory for Women at Bedford—Ernest H. Schmidt, M. D., of White Plains.

Special County Judge of Monroe County—John B. M. Stephens of Rochester.

Also the following, in relation to mismanomers:

Manager Buffalo State Hospital—Sheldon B. Broadhead of Jamestown. Trustee of New York State School for the Blind, at Batavia—Austin W. Wheelock of Leicester.

The Senate adopted resolutions of respect to the memory of William P. Dodge of Utica, late Financial Clerk of the Senate, and adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Charles Henry Beckett was born in Williamstown, Vt., in 1859, and was graduated from Dartmouth College in the Class of 1881. He came to New York and entered the Columbia Law School, from which he was graduated in 1883, and then began the practice of law in this city, and continued until he was appointed assistant to Surrogate Rollins. When Rastus S. Ransom was elected Surrogate Mr. Beckett, at the request of the lawyers and others, was retained as an assistant. In this request politics was lost sight of in the recognition of Mr. Beckett's familiarity with the office work and his qualifications. Several years later Mr. Beckett resigned to enter the firm of Booraem & Hamilton, which then took its present title of Booraem, Hamilton & Beckett. In this firm, of which he is a member, he has had charge of all its practice in the Surrogate's Court. He married Miss Newman of Watkins Glen, N. Y.

Eugene A. Philbin was formerly associated with Justice Beekman of the Supreme Court in the firm of Ogden & Beekman, and is now the senior member of the law firm of Philbin & Beekman. He has long been interested in charities, being a member of the Board of Trustees of the Catholic Orphan Asylum and one of the organizers of the United Catholic Charities. Mr. Philbin is a Democrat, but was conspicuous in the unsuccessful fight for the re-election of Justice Daly to the Supreme Court.

ASSEMBLY PROCEEDINGS.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Speaker Nixon in the Assembly to-night announced his committees for the session of 1900, which created quite a little stir among the members.

A communication was received from the House of Representatives of the State of Colorado favoring woman's suffrage and urging the New York State legislative body to pass a law for equal suffrage. It was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Assemblyman Harburger of New York attempted to introduce from the floor a resolution condemning the Raines liquor tax law as a blot on our civilization, and urging its repeal from the statute books. He was declared out of order by the Chair, Monday nights only being devoted to the introduction of resolutions.

The report of the State Controller and also of the commission appointed by the Governor for the preservation of the Palisades were received and filed. Accompanying the commission's report is a bill which embodies the recommendations of that body.

A resolution introduced by Mr. Allds fixing the hours of the sessions in the Assembly at 8:30 Monday evenings, and 10 o'clock in the morning on other days, and 10 o'clock on Fridays, was adopted.

Clerk Baxter read a protest from Edward B. Sabin of Syracuse, contesting the seat of Abraham D. Hymon of Onondaga County. It was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Election.

The Assembly then adjourned until Thursday at 11 A. M.

SENATOR HIGGINS TO RETIRE.

Reported that He Would Like to be the Next Lieutenant Governor.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Senator Frank Wayland Higgins, who represents the Fiftieth Senate District, comprising the Counties of Cattaraugus and Chautauqua, announced to-day that he would not be a candidate for re-election to the Senate next Fall. Well informed Republicans say that Senator Higgins will be nominated for Lieutenant Governor by the Republicans, to succeed Timothy L. Woodruff, whose higher aspirations are well known. The friends of Speaker S. Frederick Nixon of the Assembly say that the retirement of Senator Higgins clears the way for Mr. Nixon's elevation to the Senate.

While Senator Higgins would not admit that he will be a candidate for second place on the next State ticket, he said that, while he would retire as Senator, he had no intention of abandoning political life. He has been in the Senate since 1894, and is Chairman of the Finance Committee. He has been a consistent Republican, and is regarded as a thorough organization man. He is a close personal friend of Senator Platt, and the Republicans from the western part of the State who have been here since the opening of the legislative session say that the second place should go to some man from their section of the State. Personally, Senator Higgins is held in high esteem by his Senatorial colleagues. He conducts a general merchandise business in Olean, and manages his father's estate.

TO SAVE NEW YORK'S COMMERCE.

Some fifty or more canalboat captains and persons interested in canal traffic met at the chapel in Coenties Slip yesterday afternoon and discussed the best means for preserving New York's commercial supremacy. Capt. Melvin Depew presided and addresses were made by State Senator John G. Boyd and Cornelius G. Kolff of the Staten Island Chamber of Commerce.

Resolutions were adopted reciting the strong competition which is assailing the commerce of New York from Southern, Eastern, and Canadian ports. The success which was asked from the Legislature was the enactment of laws which would destroy the alleged railroad terminal extortions on State canal commerce at New York and Buffalo. This was, it was said, to be brought about by several important provisions. A number of storehouses and grain elevators should be constructed and operated by the State in its canal grain thaffic at these ports, it was declared. The Greater New York charter, the resolutions said, should make the docks and wharves in the port as free to all commerce as the parks and streets are to the people. Railroads should be prohibited from discrimination in rates. A maximum freight rate of three mills per ton per mile and a passenger rate of one cent per mile on all trunk line railroads in the State should be established. The locks in the Erie and Oswego Canals should be enlarged.

BACK PAY FOR REAR ADMIRALS.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—The President to-day nominated Henry L. Howison, Albert Kautz, George C. Remey, and Norman H. Farquhar to be Rear Admirals.

These nominations grow indirectly out of the Sampson-Schley controversy. The officers named to-day are already on the list of Rear Admirals, and would have acquired their present rank several months earlier than they did but for the fact that both Sampson and Schley were advanced over them. When the Senate failed to confirm the action of the President in advancing Sampson and Schley, the Rear Admirals named to-day made application for pay commensurate with the rank they would have held if they had been promoted in regular order. It was to enable them to get this back pay that the nominations were made to-day.

SCHOOL BILLS INTRODUCED

Controller Coler's Measure Provides for Transferring Funds.

MR. ELSBERG'S BROAD PLAN

To Arrange a Complete Reorganization —Senator Ford Wants a Territorial Allotment of Funds.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Among the important bills proposed in the Legislature to-night were propositions for the relief of the New York school teachers. These measures are of great variety, and the different methods suggested will afford scope for wide discussion.

The different propositions submitted to-night were proposed by Senators Grady, Elsberg, McCarren, and Ford, and their scope ranges from a provision for the immediate payment of the teachers to a complete reorganization of the educational department of the City Government.

The bill introduced by Senator Grady is the one brought here by Controller Coler of New York City, which he says will suit all interests in the school teachers' salary trouble. The bill provides that the Board of Estimate and Apportionment shall have the power at any time to transfer the unexpended balance of any appropriation of either the general school fund or the special school fund for any year which may be found by the Board of Education to be in excess of the amount required or deemed to be necessary for the purposes and objects thereof to any appropriation of either the general school fund or the special school fund for which the appropriations in such year are insufficient, provided, however, that in case of any such transfer from any appropriation forming part of the general school fund, the consent of the School Board having the administration thereof shall first be obtained.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment shall also have power to transfer funds to any appropriation of either the general school fund or the special fund which may be insufficient in any one year from the unexpended balance of any appropriation for such year which may be found by the head of the department for which such appropriation shall have been made to be in excess of the amount required or deemed to be necessary for the purposes or objects thereof.

Senator Elsberg's bill proposes a complete reorganization of the School Department of the city. It provides that the Board of Education shall be increased from nineteen to thirty-nine members, to be appointed by the Mayor, and also for a School Board of twelve instead of forty-five members for the Borough of Brooklyn, twenty-one for the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, and three, instead of nine, for the Boroughs of Richmond and Queens.

The board is to be organized on the second Wednesday of February, 1901, and on the same date in each succeeding year by the election of one of its members as President. As the terms of the members expire the Mayor shall in the month of January each year appoint their successors for a full term of three years. They shall serve without pay.

The board shall have power to lease property required for the purposes of said board and of the several School Boards, and to make contracts for the erection and repair of school buildings, for the purchase of school furniture, books, and stationery, for printing, and for any and all other purposes of the Department of Education.

The Superintendent of Schools shall select from among the Borough Superintendents and Associate Superintendents heretofore appointed, three persons to be Deputy City Superintendents. Such persons shall serve out as Deputy City Superintendents the terms of office for which they were appointed by the respective School Boards, and on the expiration of their terms of office their successors shall be appointed by the Board of Education on the nomination of the City Superintendent, for a full term of six years. For the year 1900 such Deputy City Superintendents shall be paid out of the general school fund apportioned to the borough or boroughs from which they were respectively selected; thereafter those salaries shall be fixed by the Board of Education and paid out of the special school fund. The City Superintendent may empower a Deputy City Superintendent, during his absence or disability, to execute all the duties of the City Superintendent.

In regard to salaries this bill provides that no teacher shall receive a salary less than $600, and after ten years of service $1,000, instead of $900, and after fifteen years $1,500.

Senator Ford's bill deals particularly with the school funds. It provides that the general school fund shall consist of all moneys raised for the payment of salaries of Borough Superintendents and the Associate Superintendents, Supervisors of special branches, and all teachers in day schools and evening schools. The special school fund shall contain and embrace all moneys raised for educational purposes not comprised in the general school fund. It shall be the duty of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and of the Municipal Assembly to include in the budget in raising the special school funds the respective amounts thereof which shall be available for use in the territory within the jurisdiction of each of the School Boards.

In the month of July in each year each School Board shall transmit to the Board of Education an estimate in detail of the moneys needed for the purposes of the general school fund within the territory under its jurisdiction during the next succeeding calendar year. The Board of Education shall, thereupon, restate, rearrange, revise, and verify such estimates, and shall have power, in its discretion, to amend or reduce the same, and thereupon shall submit an estimate for the entire school system of the city, but the general school fund shall not be reduced below an amount equivalent to 4 mills on every dollar of assessed valuation of the real and personal estate in the City of New York liable to taxation, inclusive of the State school moneys apportioned by the Superintendent of Public Instruction for the payment of teachers' wages.

It is further provided that the general school fund shall be apportioned in December of each year for the next succeeding year.

The bill of Senator McCarren provides merely for the existing exigency and the payment of the teachers for the current year. It is as follows: "The Board of Estimate and Apportionment of the City of New York is hereby authorized and required to direct the issue of revenue bonds to provide funds sufficient, in addition to all other funds apportioned for salaries to the various boroughs of said city for the general school fund for the year 1900, to enable the School Boards of any or all the boroughs of said city to put into effect for, in, and during the year 1900 the schedules of salaries for teachers and others employes that were in effect in September, 1899."

THE PUBLIC EDUCATION COMMITTEE.

New York City Has But One Representative on It.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—There was much comment heard to-night among Democratic Senators and Assemblymen, when the Assembly Committee assignments were read, over the failure of Speaker Nixon to designate any member representing a district in New York County to a place on the Committee on Public Education. This committee will have considerable legislation affecting the school system to consider, and Democrats from New York say that, in view of the school situation in their city, they should be represented.

Greater New York has but one place on the Educational Committee, Mr. Remsen of Kings. Neither Tammany Hall nor the Democratic organization in Kings County has any representation, and many Democrats who are here to-night predict that the Republicans are prepared to deal with the school question in a partisan manner. Mr. Lewis of Monroe, who heads the committee, is a friend of George W. Aldridge, former Superintendent of Public Works.

ARMORY FOR TROOP C.

Bill Introduced in the Assembly Provides for a $200,000 Site in Brooklyn.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Assemblyman Fiske of Brooklyn to-night introduced a bill in the House providing for the purchase of a site for an armory for Troop C, National Guard, New York, in the Borough of Brooklyn, and appropriating $200,000 therefor.

The Governor and Lieutenant Governor and the commanding officer of Troop C are named a commission to select and purchase a site, and to acquire title to such lands by condemnation in case the same cannot be purchased by agreement. The Governor and Lieutenant Governor may be represented in said commission by such persons as they may appoint in their place.

MORE SUPREME COURT JUDGES.

Senator Grady's Measure Provides an Increase of Four in First Department, Including New York City.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Senator Grady introduced to-night an amendment to the Constitutional amendment made at the last session providing for an increase of four in the number of Supreme Court Judges in the First Department.

Last year's amendment provided for an increase of three in the Second Department because of the increase in the number of cases for their consideration. The First Department, which includes New York City, is even further behind than the Second, hence Senator Grady's amendment. Furthermore, the Judges from up the State are elected upon a platform which prevents their going to New York City upon assignments, and aid cannot be had in that direction.

TO TAX ALL STOCKHOLDERS.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Mr. Gale of Queens, in the House to-night, introduced a bill providing that the stockholders of every bank, or banking association or trust company, organized under the authority of this State, or of the United States, shall be assessed and taxed on the value of their shares of stock therein; said shares shall be included in the valuation of the personal property of such stockholders in the assessment of taxes in the tax district where such bank or banking association or trust company is located, and not elsewhere, whether the said stockholders reside in said tax district or not.

TO LEGALIZE AN ELECTION.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Senator Plunkitt, representing Tammany Hall, and Secretary Manchester of the Republican County Committee of New York, agreed to-night to the introduction of a bill in the Legislature to-morrow for the purpose of legalizing the special election in the Thirty-first Assembly District in New York, which has been called for Jan. 23.

Senator Plunkitt says that it is doubtful if the manner of nomination of candidates for member of Assembly in that district was in accordance with the primary election law, which says that a convention shall not be held on the same day as the primary to select delegates to that convention. Both parties did that in the Thirty-first District, and it is to remedy that condition that the bill has been prepared.

BILL FOR STREET CLEANERS.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Senator Ford to-night introduced a bill to provide extra compensation for drivers and sweepers at a prorata rate of their wages for work performed on Sunday. It also provides that in case of a snowfall or other emergency, the Commissioner of Street Cleaning may employ extra men only upon the approval and consent of the Mayor.

The rate of compensation for such extra drivers and sweepers shall be $2 a day. They shall be employed directly by the Department of Street Cleaning, and not through any contractors. Absence upon account of illness shall not be considered a resignation, and standing upon the uniformed force shall not be affected thereby.

Securities for Savings Banks.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Assemblyman McEwan introduced in the Assembly a bill authorizing savings banks to invest in the securities of the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company and providing that such banks may invest in the first mortgage bonds on the whole or a part of the property of railroad companies in whose securities they are permitted to invest or in mortgage bonds issued by such companies to wipe out an existing indebtedness.

Brooklyn's Water Supply.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Senator McCarren to-night introduced a bill whose purpose it is to give to the Borough of Brooklyn power to take water from the streams in neighboring towns and counties. It repeals an act of 1896, which gives to Boards of Supervisors exclusive control over the streams in their counties.

Ramapo Charter Restriction.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Assemblyman Demorest of New York will introduce a bill in the House to-night repealing a law of 1895 which gives to the Ramapo Water Company special privileges by extending the scope of its charter and authorizing it to take private property by condemnation proceedings.

Registration Law Amendment.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Senator Martin to-night introduced a bill which repeals the law requiring lodging house keepers in New York to report both to Superintendent of Elections McCullagh and the Board of Health the registration in their lodging houses.

Other Bills in the Assembly.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Assemblyman Maher of New York has introduced a bill in the House which compels all steam railroads in incorporated cities to charge a 5 cent fare between all intermediate stations; also a bill making 8 hours a legal days' work in cities of the first-class, for members of the police force; also a bill to abolish capital punishment. Under its provisions murder in the first degree is punishable by imprisonment for life, and in the second degree by thirty years' imprisonment.

Assemblyman Merten E. Lewis of Monroe introduced his bill of last year which provides for an entire repeal of the Horton law which permits scientific boxing under the auspices of a regularly incorporated athletic club and limiting the rounds to twenty-five.

Assemblymn Wissell of Queens has introduced a bill extending the time in which property owners of Long Island City have to pay assessments on city improvements from four to ten years.

Assemblyman Henry of New York introduced a bill in the House amending the election law by increasing the pay of election officers.

He has also reintroduced his bill of last year for the protection and improvement of the purity of the waters of the State.

Assemblyman Degraw introduced a bill in the Assembly to-night repealing the act exempting from certain taxes vessels owned by Americans and registered in American ports.

He also introduced a bill in the Assembly to-night exempting from railroad constructions Rush Street, in the City of Brooklyn, between Division Avenue and Clymer Street.

In the Senate.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—Senator Elsberg has introduced a bill appropriating $2,000 to reimburse the Inspector of Gas Meters of New York City for expenditures incurred during the year 1899.

FRANCHISE TAX ASSESSMENT.

ALBANY, Jan. 10.—The real estate not placed upon the assessment rolls by the Tax Commissioners of New York City on account of the special franchise law, said to amount to about $66,000,000, is to be assessed under the provisions of that law, together with the special franchises of the corporations owning such real estate. The assessment of the real estate and special franchises will both be made by the State Commissioners and certified to the Tax Commissioners of New York City before May 1.

The provision of the law authorizing review of assessments by the courts expressly states that there shall be no stay of proceedings, so that the tax levied on the assessment made by the State Tax Commissioners must be paid, and the corporations left to contest its validity in the courts, and recover it back, in case they are successful.

STUDENTS ARGUE FOR A PRIZE.

ITHACA, N. Y., Jan. 10.—The annual debate for the '94 memorial prize was held at Cornell to-night. The question under discussion was "Resolved, That the Administration of Municipal Government in America Should Be Entirely Non-Partisan." The prize was won by Frank H. Hausner of New York. The other contestants were F. E. Cardullo, Titusville, Penn.; E. F. Clark, Newburg, N. Y.; C. C. Hawley, Seneca Falls, N. Y.; J. R. Nolan, Reading, Penn.; W. M. McCrea, Salt Lake City, Utah; L. J. Reynolds, Potsdam, N. Y., and M. M. Wyvell, Alma, N. Y. No official announcement of the second honor was made.

The debate council met immediately after the contest to elect a team to represent Cornell in the Cornell-Columbia debate. F. H. Hausner, J. B. Nolan, and L. J. Reynolds were elected to the team, with W. M. McCrea as alternate.

The judges in to-night's contest were W. H. Hotchkiss of Buffalo, C. I. Avery of Auburn, and W. H. Smith of Ithaca.

Robert V. Bliss Dead.

Robert V. Bliss, son of the late William Bliss, died yesterday of pneumonia, aged twenty-nine years. Funeral services will be held to-morrow at 11 A. M. at the residence of his uncle, Ernest C. Bliss, 30 Fifth Avenue.

INSURANCE RATES GO UP

New York Fire Exchange Repeals Reduction of Last Year.

ACTION DUE TO HEAVY LOSSES

Disastrous Fires of This Month, the Companies Say, Prompted Them to Conserve Their Interests.

The New York Fire Insurance Exchange, which includes in its membership nearly all of the 160 fire insurance companies doing business in the State of New York, at a meeting held yesterday in the rooms of the New York Board of Fire Underwriters, voted unanimously to repeal the 30 per cent. reduction in metropolitan fire insurance rates, which was made in the old tariff on March 8 of last year, when the Exchange was formed.

This action, which effects an increase in the insurance rates on all property in Greater New York and Jersey City, was taken because of the excessive fire losses of 1899. The step was precipitated by the number of large fires in this city since Jan. 1. The losses of the first nine days of this month bid fair to equal in volume the losses sustained by several of the largest companies during the entire month of January, 1899.

For several days prominent underwriters had been sounding each other as to their opinion regarding the proper time to order an increase and the best method of accomplishing this result. When the Exchange met yesterday it was not generally believed that either losses or rates would be mentioned, although it was admitted that the moment the matter came before the Exchange, an advance would be ordered.

Several routine measures relative to the Exchange agreement had been acted upon and the meeting was nearing adjournment, when Secretary E. H. Betts of the Lafayette Fire Insurance Company inquired whether the members were going to adjourn without taking up the question of rates, in view of the disastrous fire losses of the companies. He supported his inquiry by the introduction of a resolution, which was carried without debate and without a dissenting voice.

The resolution in substance was to the effect that rates in the handbook be restored, as prior to the reductions of 30 per cent. and 10 per cent., and that the manager of the Exchange be requested to promulgate a bulletin to the companies requiring all net rates now in the cabinets to be increased by a margin of 3-7 or 1-9, as the case might require.

The Exchange then readjusted its fixed rates on storage stores as follows: Non-fibre stores, 40 cents per $100 of insurance instead of 30 cents; cotton stores, $1.25 instead of $1; hemp and jute stores, $1.75 instead of $1.50. In the last two classes the rates on buildings and contents are to be the same.

Another resolution was then adopted empowering the Arbitration Committee to issue a ruling, waiving that section of the agreement which prohibits the transfer of policies on contents moved from one storage room to another.

The action was made to take effect immediately, so as to prevent brokers from placing their February and March business of yesterday afternoon at the low rates.

President William N. Kremer of the German-American Insurance Company, when seen after the meeting, said:

"The enormous losses in this city during the last fourteen months fully justify the course taken by the New York Fire Insurance Exchange to-day. The action must meet with the approval of all property owners within the jurisdiction of the Exchange, as they must have been made aware by the almost daily destructive and even tragic fires which have been occurring in this city of the necessity of the companies obtaining an adequate premium to enable them to provide for the great drain upon their surplus occasioned by these disastrous losses."

Officers of other large New York companies, managers of many of the foreign companies, and managers and agents of the out-of-town domestic companies alike commented upon the advance in rates as the most vital step for the conservation of fire insurance interests that have been taken since the Exchange was organized last March to end the rate war of 1898 which followed the dissolution of the old New York Tariff Association.

The seven years which ended with the close of 1897 were the most profitable in the experience of the companies and brought in a large amount of outside capital. The consequent competition resulted in the breaking of the tariff compact, and the first year which followed reduced the premium receipts by nearly one-half. When the Exchange was formed the companies hoped to recoup the losses sustained in the fight, but the fire losses of 1899, which were the heaviest for at least ten years, prevented the accomplishment of this purpose.

INSURANCE TROUBLE ENDED.

What Officers of the New York Life and the Equitable Say.

The officers of the Equitable Life Assurance Society and the New York Life Insurance Company yesterday asserted that their respective companies had won the fight which began last Monday through the decision of many of the New York Life agents in this city to go to the Equitable.

Second Vice President Perkins of the New York Life said: "There is no bitter feeling between the two companies. The Equitable was approached by one of our managers, who agreed for 'some red apples, perhaps,' to deliver to the Equitable a certain number of our metropolitan agents. But men cannot be delivered like horses, and this manager consequently failed to carry out his agreement."

Robert E. Whitney, General Manager of the Seaboard Department of the New York Life, sent a letter yesterday to each of his agents, instructing them to put no confidence in the reported importance of the difficulties between the two companies.

Second Vice President Gage E. Tarbell of the Equitable issued a statement, in which he said: "There seems to be an impression abroad that there is an insurance war. There is no such thing." He then reviewed the trouble from the Equitable's point of view and asserted that the agents who had changed had done so because of the difference in the plans of compensation utilized by the two companies.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

R. G. McCullough has been appointed special agent of the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company for Indiana.

The Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company has reinsured the Tennessee business of the Delaware Insurance Company of Philadelphia.

A business meeting and dinner of the field force of the Prudential Insurance Company, which was attended by 500 agents of that company, was held last evening in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria.

Advices from Louisville, Ky., state that the Manchester, North German, Westchester, and Transatlantic Insurance Companies have approved the sole agency plan, which the fire insurance agents of that city are endeavoring to put in force.

At the annual meeting of the Board of Directors of the Eagle Fire Insurance Company yesterday President A. J. Clinton, Secretary T. J. Gaines, and Assistant Secretary William Burns were re-elected. At a previous meeting of the stockholders the following Directors were chosen to serve during the ensuing year: Henry Meyer, Frederic Stevens, A. J. Clinton, Augustus F. Holly, Joseph H. Choate, John D. Skidmore, G. G. Williams, Charles De Rham, Jr., George G. De Witt, John L. Riker, John W. Condit, William B. Isham, and George H. Prentiss.

The insurance on the property of Thomas Kelly, at 464 to 470 Fulton Street, Brooklyn, which was considerably damaged by fire Monday night, was distributed as follows: On buildings, English-American Underwriters', $7,500; Traders', $5,000; Allemannia, $4,500; Agricultural, $2,500; Hanover, $2,500; United Firemen's, $2,500; State of Pennsylvania, $2,500; Union of Philadelphia, $2,500; Fireman's Fund, $2,500; Imperial, $2,500; Lancashire, $2,500; Royal, $2,500; Caledonian, $1,750; Western of Toronto, $1,750; Home of Baltimore, $1,500. On stock, Providence-Washington, $2,500; Fireman's Fund, $2,000; Capital, $1,500; British America, $1,000; Erie, $1,000. Miller & Maltbie will adjust the loss.

MISS HOWE ACCEPTS $5,000.

Will Not Again Face Ordeal of Trial in Her Suit Against Mrs. Skinner.

Miss Mary E. Howe, who sued Mrs. Frances Augusta Skinner for $24,750 as compensation for services rendered as companion, and was awarded $5,000 by the jury on Monday, has decided to abide by the verdict, and her counsel yesterday, before Justice Truax, withdrew his motion for a new trial.

The motion was made on Monday, when counsel expressed dissatisfaction with the amount allotted, and asked for a new trial.

Counsel for the defendant also moved for a new trial upon exceptions and the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. Justice Truax fixed yesterday morning for hearing arguments.

When the case was called, counsel for the plaintiff, addressing Justice Truax, said that, in view of the publicity given to the proceedings, his client, although she was anything but satisfied with it, had decided to accept the jury's verdict for $5,000 rather than go through the ordeal of another public appearance in court. He (her counsel) therefore begged to withdraw his motion for a new trial, and only asked that 5 per cent. extra for counsel's fee be allowed.

Counsel for the defendant then again moved for a new trial.

Justice Truax denied this motion, allowed $250 to the plaintiff for counsel fees, and granted a stay of execution for thirty days.

The defendant's counsel said that his client would appeal the case.

This is the suit brought by Miss Howe against Samuel Perry Skinner, Mrs. Skinner's husband, for alleged slander and the alienation of his wife's affections from her, will not be reached for several months.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

J. J. Little Re-elected President—Completed School Unavailable Because of Unrepaired Thoroughfares.

Joseph J. Little was re-elected President of the Board of Education yesterday to fill the unexpired term from Dec. 31 until Feb. 19, when the annual meeting of the board will be held. The board met for its regular monthly meeting at 146 Grand Street. Vice President Dresser of Brooklyn opened the session. Commissioner Burke nominated Mr. Little, and he was unanimously chosen by the eleven members present. Mr. Little thanked the Commissioners for their renewed expression of confidence.

A statement was read to show the percentage of the entire amount of money expended by the board in all the boroughs that is used for clerical help. The average in the Borough of Manhattan is the lowest, being about one-half of 1 per cent. In Brooklyn the average was seven-tenths of 1 per cent., in Queens about 2½ per cent., and in Richmond 5 2-5 per cent.

"The average of clerical expense for all the boroughs," remarked President Little, "is barely 9 mills on the dollar."

A contract for $129,475 was awarded to John Langley for building School No. 5, in Long Island City, and sites for three new schools in Queens that have been under advisement were approved. One is in Jamaica, another at Graham and Hamilton Avenues, and the third in Vernon Avenue, between Fourth and Fifth Streets. An allowance of 5 per cent. of the total amount needed to complete the new hall in Fifty-ninth Street was given to the architect of the building. This amount was $7,665.13.

The Commissioners found themselves in the unusual position of soon having a completed school on their hands which is practically unavailable for use, owing to the miserable condition of the streets in its vicinity. This is the new School No. 173, at One Hundred and Eighty-third Street, in the Bronx Borough. It will be ready for occupation on Feb. 1. A resolution was adopted calling on the Department of Highways to repair the streets as speedily as possible.

The old question regarding the apportionment of the excise moneys was referred to the Committee on By-Laws to obtain an opinion on the disputed methods of payment from the Corporation Counsel.

Just as the meeting was about to adjourn, City Superintendent Maxwell arose and said that since the meeting opened he had been served with papers in a suit to show cause why certain teachers should not be appointed to the eligible list. The board voted to turn the papers over to the Corporation Counsel.

DEWEY ARCH BENEFITS.

President Ward Congratulates the Sculpture Society on Its Work.

At a meeting of the National Sculpture Society, held on Tuesday evening, the annual report of the President of the society, J. Q. A. Ward, was read. After referring to the experience of the members that exhibitions of sculpture could only be held at intervals of two or three years, and that after the close of the exhibition of 1898 it was a problem as to what special activity should occupy the attention of members last year, the report stated that "the inventive genius of one of our members soon threw us into a field of activity that was monumental in its labors and its results. It was seen that the proposed reception to Admiral Dewey would afford an opportunity for the materialization of some of our theoretical ideas concerning the employment of art in this city on such public occasions.

"The Dewey arch has become perfectly familiar to millions of people who had never before heard the name of our society, and this temporary monument in Madison Square has already made its way into the permanent records of our time. The press of Europe and America have reproduced it in a thousand forms. It has awakened in the public mind a desire for beautifying the city that makes fertile ground for the seeds of art which you may scatter around."

Mr. Ward speaks of the agreeable relations that existed between the sculptors and the city authorities during the arrangements for the erection of the arch and while it was being constructed.

With regard to financial matters, the report states that the society made a notable increase in membership during 1899, and that it is now out of debt and has a comfortable balance.

The Dewey Arch Committee made its final report at the meeting, and the following members were elected to the council: I. W. Drummond, Charles H. Niehaus, Karl Bitter, S. P. Avery, J. J. Boyle, and Charles C. Haight.

SALE OF RARE STAMPS.

Low Prices at First Offering of the Hunter Collection.

The auction sale of postage stamps collected by F. W. Hunter of this city opened in the assembly hall of the United Charities Building, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second Street, last evening with a good attendance of buyers. The prices, however, did not quite average the figures expected, some of the more rare of the lots going for considerably less than the values placed upon them. The sale is the most important of its kind ever held in this country. It is to be continued this and to-morrow evenings, and on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings of next week.

At last evening's sale, which consisted entirely of United States stamps, Lot No. 106, a Brattleborough five-cent stamp of 1846, brought $350. It was expected that it would fetch about $500. A New Haven unused red five-cent stamp of the issue of 1845 brought $315, nearly $100 below the valuation, and a Baltimore five-cent stamp of 1846, on the original letter, brought $255. All three stamps were bought by Dr. Bowers of Bridgeport, Conn., who is said to own the finest collection in America.

The St. Louis Postmasters' stamps went at comparatively low prices, considering their rarity. A five-cent stamp of 1845 brought $77; another of different type, $40, and a ten-cent stamp of Type I, $81. Of the 1846 St. Louis issue, a five-cent stamp of Type III. brought $65; a ten-cent stamp of Type II., $66, (regarded as a very low price,) and a ten-cent stamp of Type III., $60.

What is regarded as the most valuable stamp of the Hunter collection is to be sold to-morrow evening. It is a British Guiana two-cent stamp of 1850, a specimen of the first issue of the colony. It was purchased at the De Coppet sale by Mr. Hunter for $1,010, but has greatly increased in value since then.

City Bonds Advertised.

Controller Coler yesterday advertised for proposals for $5,568,483.90 of city bonds, which will be sold by the Sinking Fund Commissioners on Jan. 23. All of these bonds are payable in gold and bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum. Of the bonds to be sold $1,850,000 run until Oct. 1, 1919, and the balance mature on Nov. 1, 1940.

CHILD KILLED BY TROLLEY.

Run Down While on Her Way to Spend Her Mother's Gift for Candy.

The life of five-year-old Minnie Ruppert, the daughter of a tailor living at 144 George Street, Brooklyn, was crushed out yesterday afternoon by Trolley Car 774 of the Flushing and Knickerbocker Avenue line. The accident occurred at Knickerbocker Avenue and Jefferson Street, Williamsburg. The child was on her way to a confectioner's shop to spend a penny her mother had given her a few minutes before. The little one, who was mangled in a terrible manner, lived for more than an hour after the accident, dying in St. Catharine's Hospital, where she had been removed.

The car was in charge of Motorman Michael Duffy, and was on its way to the Brooklyn Bridge. As the car reached Jefferson Street, in Knickerbocker Avenue, Duffy saw the child on the curbstone. She suddenly started to cross the tracks. Duffy turned off the power and applied the brakes, but the car could not be stopped in time. The fender struck the child and scooped her up, but she bounded out again and one of the wheels passed over her abdomen.

The accident was witnessed by many persons, and in a few minutes an excited and angry crowd gathered about Duffy. He was overcome with grief. A call was sent to St. Catharine's Hospital, and Dr. Keller who responded immediately, had the child placed in the ambulance and taken to the hospital. Duffy was arrested and locked up in the Hamburg Avenue Police Station. He said that he had done everything that was possible to avoid the accident.

When the mother of the child learned of the horrible death of her little one she became crazed with grief.

SLATER SHOOTING REVIVED.

Grand Jury to Investigate the Case—Capt. Price Subpoenaed.

The January Grand Jury yesterday decided to investigate the shooting of Frederick Slater by Willis Rosser in Madison Square Garden during the bicycle races a few weeks ago.

Rosser was discharged on Tuesday in the Jefferson Market Court by Magistrate Pool, because no complainant appeared against him. The action taken by the Grand Jury is unusual, in that it was taken without any suggestion from the District Attorney's office.

The case will be taken up to-morrow. Subpoenas have been sent out for Capt. Price, the Clerk of Magistrate Pool's court, and half a dozen other witnesses.

Acting District Attorney McIntyre says it is an outrage that Rosser should go free without even a trial.

"The discharge," said he, "was clearly against the spirit of the law. If the shooting had caused a panic among the thousands of people in Madison Square Garden at the time it occurred, several deaths might have been the result, and Rosser would certainly have been held for murder."

COTTON.—The price of cotton took a higher level to-day, although speculation continued to show more or less hesitation in the face of decidedly bullish factors. Prices on the first call were 1 point lower to 1 point higher, and business was very slack until the later Liverpool cables showed a net improvement on futures and increased transactions in the cotton. A covering movement set in, which continued more or less active throughout the session. The market was stimulated also by strong accounts from Southern spot markets, a small movement of cotton at the ports, bullish advices from the interior, and private cables indicating more disposition on the part of foreign spinners to buy cotton. At the best point the market showed a net gain of 9@10 points, after which there was a partial reaction. At the session drew to a close Wall Street buying became a feature, and local shorts displayed no little alarm. The market was finally very steady at a net advance of 4@10 points. A Wall Street commission house sent out the following late to-day: "For the most part holders of spot cotton continue firm, and there are as yet no evidences of any extensive liquidation of the speculative holdings at interior points. European consumers are for the present awaiting developments in America. Their stocks are steadily decreasing, however, and it is only a question of time when they must be replenished." A leading railroad man of the Southwest writes: "I am absolutely certain that this season's crop will not exceed 8,500,000 bales, and I do not believe it will reach this figure. The crop along our line, which runs through Indian Territory, Arkansas, Louisiana, and a part of Texas, is 56 per cent. short. While the Louisiana crop is much better than either Texas or Arakansas, it is still fully 30 per cent. short of last season's crop." Southern spot markets, middling quoted, were officially reported as follows: Mobile, 7 3-16c; Savannah, 7 5-16c; Charleston, 7¼c; Wilmington, 7¼c; Baltimore, 7¾c; Augusta, 7⅞c; Memphis, 7½c; St. Louis, 7 7-16c.

Manchester—Yarns and cloths, quiet but steady.

WOOL.—BOSTON, Jan. 10.—The American Wool and Cotton Reporter will say to-morrow of the wool trade: The wool market continues quiet but is very firm, pending the general opening of the Spring market. Such goods as have been shown have opened at advances ranging all the way from 15 to 40 per cent. over last year, and a satisfactory business is reported to have been done thus far. Just at present the manufacturers are not purchasing wool very liberally, although they have been a little more in evidence the past week, and have taken some small lots of medium wools and fine Australian. The entire business of the week has been of a retail character, and the total sales aggregate but 2,865,000 pounds. Prices continue to maintain much strength, and the traders are so confident as to the future of wool that they have already contracted for a considerable portion of next season's clip at prices ranging all the way from 60 to 73 cents clean, landed in Boston. The sales of the week in Boston amounted to 2,387,000 pounds domestic and 178,000 pounds foreign, making a total of 2,565,000 against a total of 2,505,600 for the previous week, and against a total of 3,210,500 for the corresponding week last year. The sales since Jan. 1 have amounted to 5,070,600 pounds, against 7,006,500 pounds for the corresponding time last year.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—Both factions in the wheat trade had a share in the fluctuations yesterday, and at the close, although prices were ⅛@¼c under the previous night, it was rather difficult to tell just which side had the advantage, as the market showed steadiness of undertone and was somewhat above the lowest point of the day. The bears were successful in controlling the market all of the forenoon, and yielded to bull operations only in the last hour, when another war scare brought about a sudden covering movement that rallied prices ⅛@⅜c from the lowest point. From a speculative standpoint the market was without much feature all day. Early weakness resulted from disappointing Liverpool cables and selling by room operators who had carried wheat over night. The Liverpool market closed ¼d lower, but was not followed by the French markets, which left off 10@20 points higher, although without much influence upon our market. The Michigan State report claimed that the chances were against even a fair crop of wheat. A feature of some interest in the afternoon and perhaps a moderate factor in the late advance was an export business of 32 loads at New York and outports, including a cargo of about 140,000 bushels of No. 2 red for Lisbon. If continued on a somewhat broader scale the bulls believe that this renewed interest on the part of exporters will sooner or later supply the much-needed attraction for outside speculative interest and support. It was reported that the Iowa Elevator at Chicago had been taken out of the list of public houses, so that its stock of 1,158,000 bushels of wheat would disappear from the visible supply on Monday. Another dispatch claimed that The Chicago Trade Bulletin had estimated the amount in farm hands at 258,000,000 bushels.

COFFEE.—The market for coffee was decidedly strong throughout the session, except for occasional intervals of business under profit taking. Business was very active. On the first call the feeling was firm with prices unchanged to 10 points higher. Later business carried the advance to 10@20 points over the closing figures of yesterday. The strength was transcended on the opening call, when sales reached 14,750 bags. Transactions up to noon had been increased to 27,250 bags. For the entire session the transactions were 54,750 bags, with the market finally barely steady in tone at a net advance of 5@10 points on some options. Others were unchanged to 5 points lower. The further improvement in Brazil coffee futures was based largely upon the leading firmness of spot coffee, quotations for which closed on the basis of 7¾c for No. 7 Rio, while some brokers were quoting 7¾c. The extreme views of spot holders checked business somewhat. Warehouse deliveries were again very heavy, and the cable news showed continued strength in the markets of Europe and Brazil.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

F. F. RITCHIE.—F. F. Ritchie, merchant tailor at 187 Broadway, made an assignment yesterday to Andrew M. Houstoun. The business was managed by Henry A. Ritchie. Furlong & O'Connell, the attorneys in the matter, said that the liabilities were $2,000, and the nominal assets $4,000, and that the assignment was caused by poor collections.

TIME DELIVERY COMPANY.—Deputy Sheriff O'Donnell has received an attachment against McGrath & Stierle, who did business as the Time Delivery Company at 52 and 54 Lafayette Place, for $710 in favor of Michael McGrath, which was obtained on the ground that they had disposed of their property. The Sheriff levied on nine horses, a wagon, and harness, but a claim was afterward put in by Amelia S. McGrath that she owned the property under a chattel mortgage given Dec. 30 for $3,000. The firm had been in business since March 22 last.

ISIDOR HOLTSBERG.—Deputy Sheriff Levitt has received four writs of replevin against the stock of Isidor Holtsberg, dealer in dry goods at 66 Hester Street, who made an assignment on Monday, caused, it was said, by losses in the Klondike, where he went two years ago prospecting. The replevins aggregate $5,328, in favor of the following creditors: John McCann, $1,078; Abegg & Rusch, $1,318; Samuel Bernhard, $1,597, and the H. B. Claflin Company, $1,835.

Out of Town.

LEROY PAYNE.—Leroy Payne, a livery stable keeper in Chicago, filed a petition in bankruptcy yesterday. He asks to be relieved of an indebtedness of $188,657. He says he has no assets.

MICHAEL CUNNINGHAM.—Michael Cunningham, a traveling salesman, who lives in Salt Lake, Utah, filed a petition in bankruptcy yesterday in the Federal court. His liabilities are placed at $132,678, and his assets at $50,461. His principal creditors are New York firms.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

MORRIS B. HALL.—Morris B. Hall of Everett, a real estate dealer, filed a petition in bankruptcy at Boston yesterday. Liabilities are $338,537; assets, $75,093.

HERBERT A. ROBERTS.—Le Roy S. Gove has been appointed receiver of the assets of Herbert A. Roberts, shoe dealer at Third Avenue and Astor Place, who filed a petition in bankruptcy on Monday.

JACOB HARRIS.—Jacob Harris, manager at 928 Sixth Avenue, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $5,975 and nominal assets of $568 in worthless accounts. He was formerly a tailor at 22 Ann Street.

CHARLES A. BLOHM.—Charles A. Blohm, clerk at 346 Greenwich Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $14,614 and no assets. The debts were contracted principally from 1890 to 1897. He was formerly a produce commission merchant.

ELIAS ROSENBERG.—Elias Rosenberg, manufacturer of suspenders at 60 White Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $8,482 and assets of $4,300, consisting of merchandise, $2,800, and book accounts, $1,500. The Sheriff received an attachment against him on the 4th inst. for $564.

D. B. & T. R. B. DOLE.—A petition in bankruptcy was filed yesterday at Boston by David B. Dole and Thomas R. B. Dole, now of Fitchburg, but formerly co-partners engaged in business at Laramie, Wyo. The partnership was dissolved in 1898, and the petition is filed to settle some of the old claims. The liabilities are scheduled at $135,304. There are no assets.

DISCHARGES IN BANKRUPTCY.

James and Allan Macnaughtan Among Those Released by Judge Brown.

Judge Brown of the United States District Court yesterday granted discharges to twenty-seven bankrupts, among whom were James Macnaughtan, ex-President of the Tradesmen's National Bank, whose liabilities were $1,129,530, and Allan Macnaughtan, ex-President of the Wool Exchange, whose liabilities amounted to $1,149,530.

Among the other discharges granted were John B. McGeorge, stock broker of 30 Broad Street, liabilities $40,036; Julia Mayes, facial artist at 240 Fifth Avenue, liabilities $24,073; Samuel W. Richards, formerly dealer in dry goods at 58 West Twenty-third Street, liabilities $25,462, and Simon Hays & Sons, formerly clothing dealers at Rochester, liabilities $93,138.

Arrests in Bankruptcy Proceedings.

Judge Brown of the United States District Court yesterday ordered the arrest of Abraham and Nathan Lipke, alleged bankrupts, their creditors alleging that they were about to leave the country. The order was executed by United States Marshal Henkel, and the men were committed to Ludlow Street Jail in default of $1,500 bail each.

Attention is directed to the following letter of Mr. Thomas W. Hall, President of the Company:

OFFICE OF
AMERICAN HIDE AND LEATHER COMPANY.
NEW YORK, January 4, 1900.

Messrs. J. & W. Seligman & Company, New York.

"DEAR SIRS: In answer to your request for information in regard to American Hide and Leather Company First Mortgage Six Per Cent. Sinking-Fund Twenty-Year Gold Bonds, I beg to say that the total authorized issue is $10,000,000 bonds, of which $8,445,000 bonds have been issued, leaving $1,555,000 bonds in the treasury of the Company. Of these treasury bonds, $1,000,000 may only be issued upon the acquisition of new properties which shall become subject to the existing mortgage. The bonds are payable in twenty years from date, namely, on September 1, 1919; coupons are payable March and September; and the principal and interest are payable in gold coin. The Trustee of the mortgage is the Colonial Trust Company of New York. The mortgage provides a sinking fund for the purchase at not over 115 per cent. and interest of $150,000 bonds per annum. If bonds cannot be bought at 115 or less, the sinking-fund is to be invested in a manner satisfactory to the Trustee of the mortgage. Bonds in sinking-fund are to draw interest, which is likewise to be invested or used in purchase of outstanding bonds. The bonds cannot be partially redeemed for sinking-fund purposes, but the entire issue can be redeemed at any time at 115 and interest, upon notice as provided in the mortgage.

The total authorized capital stock of the company is $35,000,000, of which one-half, or $17,500,000, is 7 per cent. cumulative preferred stock, with preference as to dividends and assets, and $17,500,000 is common stock. Of this capitalization, only $13,000,000 of preferred and $11,500,000 of common stock have been issued, and of this upwards of $700,000 preferred and $350,000 common stock will be held in trust for the company for the purpose of acquiring additional properties or supplying additional working capital. The properties now owned by the American Hide and Leather Company and covered by its mortgage were formerly those of

WM. BECKER LEATHER CO., MILWAUKEE.	STEPHEN DOW & CO., BOSTON.	JAMES SKINNER LEATHER CO., BOSTON.
WHITE BROS. & CO., BOSTON.	BERNARD & FRIEDMAN, BOSTON.	WALKER-OAKLEY CO., CHICAGO.
BUSWELL, HUBBARD & CO., BOSTON.	J. P. CRANE & CO., BOSTON.	E. C. COTTLE & SON, BOSTON.
MIDDLESEX LEATHER CO., BOSTON.	WATAUGA TANNING CO., BOSTON.	J. B. WEED & CO., BINGHAMTON, N. Y.
ALLEY BROS. & CO., BOSTON.	M. ROBSON LEATHER CO., BOSTON.	B. F. THOMPSON & CO., BOSTON.
LAMBEAU LEATHER CO., CHICAGO.	JOHN BLAKE, ELLENVILLE, N. Y.	JOSEPH HECHT & SONS, NEW YORK.
WM. TIDD & CO., BOSTON.

These properties now represent about seventy-five per cent. of the upper-leather business of the United States. The business of the American Hide and Leather Company is that of manufacturing UPPER LEATHER and not sole leather, AND ACCORDINGLY THE COMPANY IS NOT A COMPETITOR OF THE UNITED STATES LEATHER COMPANY.

The report of the Audit Company of New York, which has examined the books of these concerns, shows the average annual net earnings of all the properties as operated separately before they were acquired by the American Hide and Leather Company to be the sum of $1,585,748.42, being more than three times the amount necessary to pay interest on the $8,445,000 bonds outstanding.

These properties were acquired free of debt and encumbrance, and the Company assumed no outstanding liabilities.

I am familiar with the value of the various plants acquired and now owned by the Company, and in my opinion the conservative value of such plants as going concerns, together with the quick assets and cash now on hand, represents much more than the total amount of the bonds and preferred stock issued.

All of the plants acquired by the Company are now working at their full capacity, and the entire output is sold for at least sixty days in advance at satisfactory prices. The estimated output of the Company will be from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 annually.

The upper-leather industry is well known to be one of the most conservative and stable industries in the country. It has been largely carried on by old-established houses in the Eastern States and in the large cities of the Middle West, where most of the plants acquired are situated. Experience has shown that the industry can be established upon a reliable and paying basis only after long experience and the investment of capital for a considerable period. The value of the good-will of the various concerns which this company has acquired is consequently very great.

The demand for all the articles produced is constant and unfailing, while the records of the business for a period of twenty-five years show fewer failures than in any other mercantile or manufacturing business.

It has been customary hitherto for each factory to produce all or many of the various classes of goods embraced in the trade. Now, each factory acquired by the company manufactures that class of goods for which it is peculiarly adapted by situation and construction. By this division of labor, as well as by the common use of the best patterns and methods of manufacture known to the trade, a better article is being produced at less cost of manufacture. The saving effected in these various respects, and in economies of administration, transportation, etc., will, in the opinion of leading tanners, in which I concur, increase the net earnings to more than $2,750,000 annually.

Yours truly,
THOMAS W. HALL, President."

The new Company, according to the above estimate, should therefore make the following showing:

Net earnings, say	$2,750,000
Annual interest charge on $8,445,000 bonds	506,700
	$2,243,300
Sinking fund, say	172,500
Balance available for dividends	$2,070,800
7 per cent. dividends on $13,000,000 Preferred Stock	910,000
Surplus	$1,160,800

Equal to over 10 per cent. on $11,500,000 Common Stock.

The Audit Company of New York have made the following report:

MESSRS. J. & W. SELIGMAN & COMPANY,
Mills Building, New York.

DEAR SIRS:

"We have made an audit of the accounts of the following firms and companies for periods varying in each case from four to ten years, to wit:

W. N. Eisendrath & Co.	Hall, Haight & Co.	C. T. Roenitz Leather Co.
Wm. Becker Leather Co.	Stephen Dow & Co.	James Skinner Leather Co.
White Bros. & Co.	Bernard & Friedman.	Walker-Oakley Co.
Buswell, Hubbard & Co.	J. P. Crane & Co.	E. C. Cottle & Son.
Middlesex Leather Co.	Watauga Tanning Co.	J. B. Weed & Co.
Alley Bros. & Co.	M. Robson Leather Co.	B. F. Thompson & Co.
Lambeau Leather Co.	John Blake.	Joseph Hecht & Sons.
Wm. Tidd & Co.

In these examinations we have deducted from the profits of the various concerns proper allowances for depreciation on buildings and machinery, and the maximum amount for management. We have added to the profits the amounts paid in each case for interest on borrowed money.

We certify that under these conditions the total average annual net earnings of all the companies and firms named above for the periods stated in each case amounted to the sum of ($1,585,748.42) one million five hundred and eighty-five thousand seven hundred and forty-eight dollars and forty-two cents.

THE AUDIT COMPANY OF NEW YORK,
THOMAS L. GREENE, Manager."

Attest: E. T. PERINE, Secretary.
New York, September 19, 1899.

Reference is also made to the following letter from Messrs. SEWARD, GUTHRIE & STEELE and Messrs. SELIGMAN & SELIGMAN:

NEW YORK, October 2, 1899.

AMERICAN HIDE AND LEATHER CO.:

DEAR SIRS: We are familiar with the proceedings connected with the incorporation of the American Hide and Leather Company, the issue of its capital stock, the execution of its First Mortgage and Supplemental Mortgage, and the issue of its First Mortgage Six Per Cent. Sinking-Fund Twenty-Year Gold Bonds to the amount of $8,445,000.

We are of opinion that the American Hide and Leather Company has been legally organized; that it has legal power to issue capital stock to the amount of seventeen million five hundred thousand dollars ($17,500,000) par value of preferred stock and seventeen million five hundred thousand dollars ($17,500,000) par value of common stock; that of this capital stock $13,000,000 par value of Preferred and $11,500,000 par value of Common Stock has been issued in due form for property or cash, and that the action of the directors and stockholders in respect of the issuance of such stock is in due conformity with the laws of the State of New Jersey.

We are also of opinion that the Company had legal power to execute its First Mortgage, dated September 20, 1899, and its supplemental mortgage, dated October 2, 1899, to the Colonial Trust Company, as Trustee, to secure its First Mortgage Six Per Cent. Sinking-Fund Twenty-Year Gold Bonds, and to issue bonds thereunder and secured thereby, and that the action of the Company in respect of the execution of said mortgages and the issuance of said bonds is in due conformity with the laws of the State of New Jersey.

We are, dear sirs,
Yours respectfully,
SEWARD, GUTHRIE & STEELE.
SELIGMAN & SELIGMAN.

To Messrs. J. & W. SELIGMAN & CO., New York.

Copies of the Mortgages may be had at the offices of the undersigned.

Application will be made to have the bonds listed on the New York and Boston Stock Exchanges.

OF THE ABOVE-NAMED BONDS $2,445,000 HAVE BEEN TAKEN BY THE VENDORS, AND $3,200,000 HAVE BEEN SOLD OR WITHDRAWN FOR INVESTMENT. MARKET CONDITIONS.

Blind pool policies had sensational exposition in Wall Street yesterday. The Sugar Trust gave it. The annual meeting of that corporation was held over in Jersey City, and by way of preliminary to the voting of proxies for Directors the President of the company submitted an address the tenor of which was to the effect that it was well to earn dividends before paying them, and that (with mystery ruling in Sugar Trust affairs) all was uncertain—as to earnings, as to dividends, and as to everything.

Sugar Trust stock just before the announcement of these observations by Mr. Havemeyer was quoted on the Stock Exchange above 130. With a rush it fell to 117. Later in the day—and wholly upon short covering apparently—the quotation was lifted two or three points, but in so far as either records or indications went all testimony seemed to be promising further disturbance, upsets, and losses.

Naturally all the other blind pools on the Stock Exchange became shaky in sympathy with Sugar Trust demoralization. Brooklyn Rapid Transit tumbled, Tobacco Trust fell off, the whole list of mysteries lost credit, shrinking in market value.

Yet it would be difficult for any fair-minded observer to find warrant for surprise in the Sugar Trust disclosure. Only reckless gamblers have been willing to toy with such stocks. When a purchaser commits himself to a "security" of whose value, of whose assets and liabilities, earnings and expenses, nothing whatsoever can be learned, there is small occasion for sympathy—for such purchasers are reckless wholly and entitled to no higher rank than the yokel at the country fair who introduces himself to three-card monte.

Generally now Wall Street apprehends a reduction in the Sugar Trust dividend. In so far as knowledge of the company's actual resources is concerned nothing warrants this—for suspicion to-day is upon the same level with confidence and enthusiasm of previous days, not a fact anywhere being disclosed now any more than in the past.

One interesting incident at yesterday's annual meeting of the Sugar Trust centred in the appointment of a committee to audit and report to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts facts touching the property's condition. In Massachusetts legal requirements operate, and this trust—most arrogant of all—finds it needful to bow to the extent that Massachusetts law demands. Why less obligation is felt toward the company's security holders, why trust contempt should be shown for the New York Stock Exchange, is not readily understandable. Some time it may be that the State of New York and the New York Stock Exchange and the actual owners of securities may wake up and be as self-respecting as is the Commonwealth of Massachusetts—and Massachusetts requirements are certainly insignificant enough.

Meanwhile, with mystery proceeding, the man who buys Sugar Trust stock for investment or sells it for speculation does nothing but gamble.

***

A fact clearly in evidence throughout yesterday's market was that owners of standard stocks were not embroiled, were not making hurried sacrifices—were resting upon proofs of business prosperity. Corporations whose affairs are not manipulated by blind pools are not suffering in credit.

THE BANK AND TRUST COMPANY DIFFICULTY.

(FROM A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.)

The two bills prepared by a young New York lawyer for introduction in the Assembly at Albany, having for their ostensible object the placing of banks and trust companies on the same footing, deal with the subject in such a crude and off-hand manner that the statement is not credible that they represent the demands of the banks for legislation, though there are bank officers who approve of their purpose. That purpose is simply to require all trust companies to hold 15 per cent. of their deposits as a reserve in lawful money, one-half of which may be on deposit in banks or other trust companies; and to tax the capital of trust companies in precisely the same manner in which that of the banks is taxed at present, that is, by assessing the value of the shares to the holders and collecting the tax from them through the corporations.

This is apt to strike one as fair on the face of it, and it would be fair if the two classes of institutions were engaged in the same business and held the same relation to the community; but the trust company men claim that the character and functions of the two are so different that there is no justice or sound policy in trying to put them on the same footing in the matter of reserves and taxation. The bulk of the deposits of a legitimately managed trust company consist of trust funds upon which interest is paid and which can be withdrawn only upon notice, and the company is required to invest its entire capital in certain forms of security which bear a low rate of interest for the protection of these funds. Their deposits may greatly exceed the amount of their capital and surplus, which are nominally subject to taxation, and may be invested or loaned in almost any manner in the discretion of the officers. The holding of bonds exempt from taxation, which are deducted from the assessed value of their capital and surplus, is what relieves them from the burden borne by the banks; but they claim that having their capital tied up in these low-rate securities affords a sufficient safeguard for their deposits without a cash reserve, which would only withhold from the banks so much more of their loanable funds, and also entitles them to all the relief in taxation that they enjoy.

There would be much force in this plea if all the trust companies were confined to what the banks regard as their legitimate business; but many of them have been extending more and more into the field of banking. They not only loan money on real estate and collateral securities, but, if they do not discount notes and bills of exchange, they buy all kinds of commercial paper, and they keep mercantile deposits subject to check as freely as the banks. The extent to which this kind of banking business is done by the trust companies varies greatly, but some of the new concerns have been organized chiefly to do just that, and it is their main reliance for business. They solicit mercantile deposits and pay interest on them, and then make use of them freely, without being subject to the restrictions and burdens imposed upon the banks. They have come to be regarded as a danger to the financial community against which the banks have to guard.

It is this departure of the newer trust companies from the legitimate field of trust operations and the increasing encroachment upon the general banking field that has caused all the complaint and that makes all the difficulty. There are still differences that render identity of treatment a matter of doubtful expediency, and make the question one that needs to be dealt with carefully and not in the slap-dash method of the Trainor bills. There should be no "war" of banks against trust companies, and probably there will be none; but there should be judicious efforts to reconcile the differences and place both classes of institutions upon a footing of equity before the law.

New York, Jan. 11, 1900.

SUGAR'S PRECIPITOUS FALL.

Sugar Trust stock was easily the feature of yesterday's market, breaking sharply a full 13 points, following upon the announcement that at the annual meeting of the American Sugar Refining Company at Jersey City, held at noon yesterday, President H. O. Havemeyer had made a statement which was taken to foreshadow either a reduction or a passing of the dividends on the company's stock at the March meeting, because of losses due to the sugar war. Inasmuch as at the coming March meeting it is customary to act on the full year's dividend, action such as the Street considered Mr. Havemeyer's statement to forecast was regarded as particularly serious.

Upon the realization of the apparent significance of the intimation—though there was no express declaration—there was a wild rush to sell, either on the part of long holders who wished to get out with as little loss as possible, or on the part of shorts who desired further to extend their commitments. From 129, the figure recorded on the tape when President Havemeyer's utterances were made public—earlier in the day the figure had been 130½—the quotation steadily receded, sometimes by one and two points at a time, until in less than an hour the figure was 117½. The uncovering of a large number of stop orders hastened the decline. When 117½ was reached the price held, largely due to short covering, and later rallied several points, closing for the day at 126⅝, a net loss for the day of 8¾ points.

The break was one of the most decided and serious one-day breaks—outside of those in actual panicky times—that the Exchange has seen for some time. In the recent slump of the stock last month the low quotation reached was 114½, on Dec. 22. In March last the figure was 182.

As for President Havemeyer's statement, which apparently occasioned the break, it was made in his annual report, as follows:

In September, 1898, as you know, the Board of Directors determined, upon a change of policy in view of circumstances then existing which led to a reduction of prices of our product and necessarily to a diminution of our profit.

Very wisely, as I think, at our annual meeting in January, 1899, unanimously you approved of this change in policy. The circumstances which then existed have continued and still exist, and your Board of Directors have ever since maintained and unless instructed by you to the contrary will probably continue to pursue this policy by them initiated and by you unanimously indorsed.

I cannot, of course, say what your Directors will do in the matter of declaration of dividends in the future. Such declaration can be made by them alone, and will be made under the situation which will then exist.

I am very sure, however, that when the duty of determining the amount of dividend is imposed upon them they will take into careful consideration the fact of a reduction of profits which has resulted from the policy which has been pursued. I do not believe you would desire them to declare any dividend which would weaken the financial strength of the company, or would render it less able in the future than it has always been in the past to look ahead without fearing the result of any policy which may be deemed advantageous. Speaking for myself, I say, with as much force of statement as is possible, that I would oppose any such declaration of dividend.

A resolution was adopted at the meeting authorizing the Directors to cancel any portion of $10,000,000 bonds issued against a mortgage on the property of the company when organized. All of the bonds are now in the treasury of the company. The company has sold property amounting to $365,000 covered by this mortgage, which money has been in the hands of the Central Trust Company for two years drawing 2 per cent.

In reference to this matter the following statement was given out as coming from President Havemeyer:

"The company will not sell any of these bonds. We have abundant capital for our business, and will have as long as I have anything to do with the company. If the same conditions exist in March it will be necessary to reduce the dividend on Sugar common as the result of the sugar war. The total number of shares voted to-day was 516,518, which indicates that over two-thirds of the stockholders will be responsible for the policy of the Directors, should a reduction of the dividend be necessary."

The stockholders approved and ratified the action of the Directors in the management of the company's affairs, and approved also the action taken by the Directors on Tuesday, when the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That the accumulated profits, less the dividend which has been declared up to this time, including the dividend of Jan. 2, 1900, be reserved as working capital, less such amount as the Directors see fit from time to time to declare as dividends."

It is pointed out that a like resolution was passed a year ago.

A resolution was also passed providing for the appointment of a committee of three stockholders not Directors of the company to prepare and make the annual statement required under the laws of New Jersey.

Mr. Havemeyer, in relation to the sugar war, says that it exists with the same force that it has since it commenced, and that there is no sign of any settlement.

PHENOMENAL EARNINGS.

Baltimore and Ohio stocks were easily the strongest on the list yesterday, the common advancing 2½ points on sales of about 10,000 shares, while the preferred appreciated 1½ points on trading involving some 8,000 shares. This strength was due to the exceptionally good showing made by the company in December, when its net earnings amounted to over $1,000,000, an increase for the month over the same month last year of more than $290,000—or at the rate of nearly $10,000 a day. From July 1 the net earnings have been $6,162,600 and the increase $2,204,800.

BUYING FEDERAL STEEL.

Speculators took advantage of the decline in Federal Steel common yesterday to buy in at the low price. The officers of the company, it is pointed out, have given public assurance that another dividend of 2½ per cent. on the common is to be declared next month, after which the stock will be put on a regular basis of over 5 or 6 per cent. It is said that had it not been that the Directors desired to keep well within their legal limits the 2½ per cent. forthcoming in the early part of February would have been declared on Tuesday.

NORFOLK AND WESTERN.

Recent buying of Norfolk and Western stock leads to the belief on the Street that, while as yet there may be nothing in the report that the Pennsylvania Railroad controls the Norfolk company, nevertheless there has been some quiet absorption of Norfolk stock by Pennsylvania interests, much after the same way as Baltimore and Ohio stock was purchased, with a view, if not to ultimate control, at least to a consolidation of interests so that the probability of clashing and rate cutting may be minimized.

HOW ONE ROAD PROSPERS.

Illinois Central was traded in only to the extent of 200 shares, the Street apparently taking little heed of the published statement of earnings of the road, which showed an increase for the month of December of $113,800, the figures being $2,674,440, as compared with $2,560,580 a year ago. Since July 1 the earnings have been $16,244,840 and the increase $1,845,080.

J. J. HILL'S REPORTED PLAN.

One of the reports heard on the Street yesterday came by way of St. Paul, and was to the effect that President James J. Hill of the Great Northern is about to build and operate a steel plant at Great Falls, Montana, to manufacture steel rails, bridge steels, and other articles required in railway construction and operation.

No verification of the report could be obtained here.

THE MARKET'S LIFELESSNESS.

Had it not been for the trading in American Sugar yesterday, which amounted to more than one-third of the entire transactions for the day, the market would have been almost lifeless. In the early hours no sales were recorded by the tape for several minutes at a time.

SOFT COAL ROADS ACTIVE.

That the soft coal roads continue to prosper is borne out by the statement of the Wheeling and Lake Erie, which in the first week of the present year increased its earnings some $5,000. Since July 1 the earnings have been $1,321,990 and the increase $209,870.

STOCK EXCHANGE RUMOR.

One of the rumors that gained currency on the New York Stock Exchange yesterday about noon was that Gen. Buller had succeeded in crossing the Tugela River on the way to Ladysmith. The traders were beginning to give the report some serious attention when the break in Sugar Trust stocks began, with the result that in the hurry either to sell or to cover the war news story was entirely lost sight of.

SUB-TREASURY OPERATIONS.

The Sub-Treasury was yesterday a large debtor to the Clearing House, the total debit aggregating about $2,500,000. Assistant Deputy Treasurer M. L. Muhleman explains that this is due to payment of Assay Office checks and to settlements of Post Office accounts for the carrying of the mail.

AMERICAN HIDE AND LEATHER.

J. & W. Seligman & Co. offer at 101 and interest American Hide and Leather Company 6 per cent. first mortgage twenty-year sinking fund gold bonds due Sept. 1, 1919. The total authorized issue is $10,000,000, of which $1,555,000 are reserved by the company, $2,445,000 have been taken by the vendors, and $3,200,000 have been sold or withdrawn for investment, the balance of $2,800,000 now being offered to the public. The mortgage provides for a sinking fund sufficient to purchase $150,000 bonds at 115 per cent. each year. If not so obtainable, the amount to be invested in securities approved by the trustees of the mortgage, which fund, with its accumulations, is estimated to amount in twenty years to at least $4,500,000. The entire issue of bonds is redeemable at 115 and interest. The total authorized capital stock is $35,000,000, of which one-half, $17,500,000, is 7 per cent. cumulative preferred stock, with preference as to dividends and assets, and $17,500,000 is common stock. Of this capitalization only $13,000,000 of preferred and $11,500,000 of common stock have been issued. Upward of $700,000 preferred and $350,000 common stock of the issues are to be held in trust by the company for acquiring additional properties or supplying additional working capital. The company owns over 75 per cent. of the upper leather business of the United States, their business being that of manufacturing upper leather, and not sole leather, and accordingly the company is not a competitor of the United States Leather Company.

RICHMOND RAILWAY COMPANY.

A meeting of the bondholders of the Richmond Railway and Electric Company will be held to-day at the office of J. H. Davis & Co. for the purpose of meeting a committee appointed by the Richmond Passenger and Power Company of Richmond, Va. The latter company has just obtained a franchise for three years from the City of Richmond, which covers an important section of territory now operated by the Richmond Railway and Electric Company.

IRON AND METAL TRADES.

Discussing the condition of the iron and metal trades The Iron Age will to-day say:

"Owing to the fact that a considerable number of Southern blast furnaces were banked during the holidays, our blast furnace returns for the first of this month show that productive capacity entered the new year at a smaller rate than it was early in December. This, however, is only a temporary matter, but it illustrates how a minor cause promptly knocks down record figures. It is noted that the majority of the districts show a slight increase in the stocks, but this is really so insignificant that it is not worthy of serious consideration. Slowly a number of additional stacks are getting ready for work, and the output is likely to go on increasing—provided, however, that there be no accidents. Just now the fuel supply is getting to be serious. We hear of banking now, and there is much significance, too, in the report that the famous Edgar-Thomson coke pile must be drawn upon. In other words the least derangement in the clockwork movement in the pig iron industry promptly checks the current enormous production.

"In foundry irons the market is practically at a deadlock. Important consuming interests are holding off to test the resistance of makers, while the majority of the latter are indifferent. There are soft spots in the market, however, and lower figures have been made to good buyers for moderate-sized lots. It is a fact, however, on the other hand, that large melters of iron have been feeling the market, and seem inclined to take advantage of any bargains offered. As yet few opportunities have been offered.

"The steel market is exceedingly dull. There are reports of sales of Southern open hearth billets in the Eastern market, but this has not touched the great consumers, who are still uncovered for a very large share of their requirements for the first half of this year. The leading makers of the country present an unbroken front.

"In finished material there is some stiffening, notably in the West, where an understanding among leading interests seems to have been reached on the prices of bars and of skelp.

"A better feeling prevails in the sheet trade. Isaac W. Frank of Pittsburg has again been appointed to receive options on the sheet mills, and has a number of them, which expire on April 1. It seems that even if some large interests in the Pittsburg district do not join, the work of consolidation is to go forward.

"In structural material and in plates business has been rather quiet lately. An interesting contract is coming up, and that is for 13,000 tons of bridge work for a leading trunk line—a fact which is cited as a proof that present prices do not frighten large-consuming interests.

"Since the opening of the year a considerable number of announcements of increases in wages have been made. In nearly every case they deal with very large bodies of men, who are thus sharing in the prosperity of the iron trade."

NEW SECURITIES LISTED.

The Listing Committee of the New York Stock Exchange yesterday listed the following new securities:

Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway Company—$280,000 additional first mortgage extension 5 per cent. fifty-year gold coupon bonds of 1944, for $1,000 each, Nos. 1,219 to 1,498 inclusive, making the total amount listed to date $1,498,000, Nos. 1 to 1,498, inclusive; also $2,500,000 additional common stock, making the total amount listed to date $54,950,000.

The Colorado Fuel and Iron Company—$2,000,000 additional common stock, making the total amount listed to date $15,000,000.

Savannah, Florida and Western Railway Company—$1,350,000 St. John's River Division 4 per cent. first mortgage gold coupon bonds of 1934, for $1,000 each, Nos. 1 to 1,350 inclusive.

Four million dollars 6 per cent. noncumulative preferred stock and $15,000,000 common stock of the American Beet Sugar Company have been admitted to quotation in the unlisted department.

WALL STREET TOPICS.

Report that the American Ice Company is seeking to obtain control of the artificial ice plants in Southern cities.

According to St. Paul dispatches, James J. Hill, President of the Great Northern Railway Company, is about to add a large steel plant to his properties for the manufacture of steel rails, bridge steel, and other articles required in railroad construction, maintenance, and operation.

Resumption of business by the Produce Exchange Trust Company.

Capital stock and first mortgage bonds of the Kansas City, Pittsburg and Gulf Railroad stricken from the Stock Exchange lists have been replaced by trust certificates of deposit.

Expectation of a reduction in the Bank of England rate of discount at the Governors' meeting to-day.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Relatively few changes of any importance occurred in the market for outside securities yesterday. No reflection of the greater activity in the Stock Exchange market was had on the curb, where transactions were probably lighter than they had been on any day for months past. In most of the issues usually prominent in curb trading there were no transactions at all, and not a single stock furnished as much as a thousand shares. The market was sluggish at the opening and remained so all day, very little interest being shown in any quarter. There appeared to be very few orders in the market, and traders showed no disposition to add to the amount of business. In some cases closing bids were considerably below the previous day's prices, but as a whole the bids made showed the market to be fairly steady. Little disposition to buy appeared, but there was also little or no disposition to sell.

AMALGAMATED COPPER, in point of view of activity, led the list, with transactions amounting to about 800 shares. This stock was somewhat heavy, and from the opening sale at 84 sold down to 83¾. It rallied slightly late in the afternoon, and the final sale was made at 83⅝, the closing bid being 83¾, a net loss of seven-eighths of a point.

GENERAL CARRIAGE, on light transactions, went off fractionally at the opening to 6¾, but rallied later to 7¼, closing at 7¼ bid, a net gain of half a point. Traders appeared to take little or no part in the business in this stock, but this was also true of most other issues. In the absence of definite news in regard to the company's plans little effort was made to advance the stock, and the amount of stock offered was not sufficient to depress it to any extent.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA was traded in to the extent of only 100 shares in each issue. A sale of the common stock was made at 7¼, and late in the day a single lot of the preferred stock changed hands at 27½, in the common stock the closing bid showed a recession of an eighth of a point, while the preferred stock closed with a net gain of 2½ points. During the morning, when there was practically no demand for the stock, the bids remained in the neighborhood of 25, but no stock was to be had at this figure, and the price had to be considerably advanced before a buying order could be filled. The market showed very little disposition to advance yesterday, but it was not a day that brought about any particular desire to liquidate.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS common was traded in in small lots around 23, and a few of the bonds sold at 95. In the New Amsterdam issues no indication has been had in the last few days of the probable developments in local gas matters, as these issues have shown no disposition to move in either direction. They have been steady and dull. Such developments as have occurred seem to point to the correctness of the recent intimations to the effect that the gas war has practically come to an end. Apparently there are yet no indications as to the position the New Amsterdam stocks may have in any plan of consolidation, nor does it yet appear what method will be adopted in the final adjustment of the struggle that has lasted so many months. Again recently figures have been named purporting to be the prices that would be paid to present holders of the New Amsterdam Gas stocks, but these have appeared to be nothing more than vague surmises. How the New Amsterdam stocks are to fare in the settlement seems to be as much in doubt now, as far as the public is concerned, as it was when rumors of a settlement were first had.

ELECTRIC AXLE sold from 5½ down to 4¾, and at the close was offered at the latter figure.

CAST-IRON PIPE advanced further, the preferred stock to 43⅜ and the common to 7. The latter showed a net gain of 2 points and the preferred stock of 1 point.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call was 4½@6 per cent., closing at 4¼ per cent.

Time money, 5½@6 per cent. for sixty days to four months, and 6 per cent. for longer dates. Mercantile paper, 5½@6 per cent. for sixty to ninety days' indorsements, 6 per cent. for choice four to six months' single names, and 7@8 per cent. for others.

Clearing House statements: Exchanges, $203,445,357; balances, $11,170,225; Sub-Treasury debit balance, $2,189,298.

Money on call in London at 4½ per cent. Rate of discount in open market, 3¾ per cent. for short and 3¾@4 per cent. for three months' bills.

Foreign exchange was weaker. Nominal rates were $4.84¼ for sixty days and $4.88¼ for demand. Rates for actual business closed as follows: Sixty days, $4.83¼@$4.83½; demand, $4.87¼@$4.87½; cables, $4.88@$4.88¼; commercial bills, $4.82¼@$4.82¾.

Continental exchange was quoted as follows: Francs, 5.21¼@5.21½ less 1-16 and 5.16⅞ less 1-16@5.17⅛; reichsmarks, 94⅛@94 5-16 and 95 1-16; guilders, 39 15-16@40 and 40 5-16@40⅜.

Charleston—Buying, par; selling, ⅛c premium. Savannah—Buying, ⅛c off; selling, par. St. Louis—50c discount. Cincinnati—Between banks, par; over counter, 50c premium.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Jan. 10.—American railway shares opened steady and above parity level and continued so throughout the session, with the settlement absorbing the attention of members. The closing tone was dull.

Consols for money and the account, 98⅜; Canadian, 92½; Erie, 11⅜; Erie first preferred, 32⅝; Illinois Central, 114½; Union Pacific preferred, 75¼; St. Paul, 119; New York Central, 138½; Pennsylvania, 60¼; Reading, 9; Northern Pacific preferred, 74¾; Atchison, 19⅝; Louisville, 80¼; Grand Trunk, 6½; Anaconda, 8.

Bar silver steady, 27 1-16d per ounce.

Money, 1½ per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short bills, 3⅜ per cent., and for three months' bills 3⅜@4 per cent.

Gold to the amount of £45,000 was withdrawn from the Bank of England on balance to-day and £250,000 was transferred to the Indian currency account. Gold premiums: Buenos Ayres, 128.80; Madrid, 28.30; Lisbon, 44; Rome, 7.17½.

India Council bills were allotted to-day at 1s. 4 3 32d.

Spanish fours closed at 65⅝.

The failure of Luke Alexander Lonides, stock broker, was announced on the Stock Exchange to-day.

Discount Rate May Be Lowered.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Daily Mail expresses the opinion that the Bank of England money rate will be reduced to 5 per cent. to-day (Thursday.)

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 10.—Influenced by the ease of money, foreign securities were particularly firm on the Bourse to-day, in anticipation of the lowering of the bank rate in London and Berlin. Brazilians were favored owing to the improvement in the rate of exchange and the rise in the price of coffee. Rio Tintos relapsed in consequence of forced sales and finished weak. Kaffirs were easier. Three per cent. rentes, 99f 87½c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 21½c for checks. Spanish fours closed at 66.80.

BERLIN, Jan. 10.—Business on the Boerse to-day opened hesitating, but subsequently the ease in money produced a hardening tendency. Exchange on London, 20 marks 50½ pfennigs for checks. Private rate of discount, 4⅛ per cent.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 10.—Owing to the absence of stimulant, business on the Boerse to-day was dull, but prices closed firmer.

and considered plans to resist the absorption of the company by the Atlantic Iron and Steel Company.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 10.—The local market continued in a lifeless and uninteresting condition. The copper shares were more neglected than ever. A considerable selling of Parrot early in the day forced prices down to 39¾, from which, however, it made a fractional recovery. Amalgamated dropped to 83⅝. Centennial-Eureka sold at 22. Tamarack fell off from 190 to 187, Arcadian was down to 19½, and Montana was quoted on a single transaction at 280. United States Oil was really the only feature. It broke to 19¾. New England Gas and Coke sold at 22, and Dominion Coal was down to 44. The transactions in Sugar, both for local and New York account, were extremely heavy.

At the clearing House all the loans were made at 6 per cent., and New York funds sold at 12½, 10, and 5 cents discount. The local banks are generally quoting 6 per cent. as the minimum rate for call money, but in special cases loans at 5½ per cent. are being made. On time 5 and 5½ per cent. are rates that are being freely quoted on first-class collateral and the best of names, with 6 per cent. charged more generally. Choice collateral loans are becoming scarce. In commercial paper the best names are selling readily at 5½ per cent. Choice Western paper on four months sold at 5¼ per cent.

NEWS OF THE EXCHANGES.

The Consolidated Exchange trading was active yesterday and the market was weak. A great deal of dealing in Sugar took place, and the tremendous break in this security was of course the feature of the market. Short selling of wheat was noticeable on the Produce Exchange, and the market declined, but later rallied and recovered most of its lost ground. Some 160,000 bushels of wheat were taken for export, principally to Portugal, it is believed. Corn was firm at the close, and oats were dull and steady.

Cotton was strong yesterday, and trading on the Cotton Exchange amounted to fully 400,000 bales. All deliveries advanced about 8 points from the opening, which showed practically no change from Tuesday's closing. The advance was due largely to covering by the shorts. Liverpool buying was evident in the morning, while in the afternoon there was evidence of selling by Liverpool interests. The Coffee Exchange market was exceptionally active, some 55,000 bags figuring in the day's trading. The market declined about 5 points on the average.

MORE ANONYMOUS POINTS.

The following anonymous circular respecting Brooklyn Rapid Transit was sent out yesterday to numerous Wall Street houses:

The short interest in Brooklyn Rapid Transit is estimated at between 150,000 and 200,000 shares. The entire country is short of this stock in response to the newspaper articles, which have been circulated throughout the United States by certain bucket shop operators claiming that the stock would sell at 20. On the other hand, the company is doing an excellent business. Stock sold in the past four months has gone into very strong hands, who will in all probability be represented in the board.

Whether or not, as a result of the circular, which was believed in some quarters to come from people long of the stock and therefore anxious for its advancement, the stock yesterday fell as low as 69, and closed for the day at 71¼, a net loss of 1⅛ points.

MARITIME EXCHANGE MEETING.

The Board of Directors of the Maritime Exchange met yesterday. Ernest S. Green, (with the firm of Castner, Curran & Bullitt;) H. W. Hazelton, (with Fiske Brothers' Refining Company,) and C. Pillengrino were elected to membership. Correspondence with the authorities at Washington was authorized urging that the proposed new East River bridge be not permitted unless 135 feet in the clear above high water at any part of the superstructure; recommending a Department of Commerce in the Government at Washington; objecting to the placing of sailing vessels under the control of the United States Steam Inspection Service, and favoring Senator Frye's bill before Congress regulating the boarding of vessels on arrival.

FINANCIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

J. Pierpont Morgan Buys Property Adjoining His Residence.

Buyer of Arnold House on Upper Fifth Avenue Understood to be William Salomon — Other Dealings.

The sequel to the sale of the residence of the late Richard Arnold, at Fifth Avenue and Eighty-third Street, developed yesterday in the announcement that William Salomon had sold the house 31 East Thirty-sixth Street. Both deals were arranged through Douglas Robinson & Co., and while at their offices the buyer's name in either transaction could not be learned, it may be stated on the very best authority that J. Pierpont Morgan is the buyer of the Thirty-sixth Street property and William Salomon of the Fifth Avenue and Eighty-third Street corner.

In reply to an inquiry, Mr. Morgan said that he had nothing to say in regard to his reported purchase. No. 31 East Thirty-sixth Street, which was the residence of the late James M. Brown, is a three-story brownstone dwelling, standing on a plot 75 by 98.9. An eighteen-foot alley, extending through to Thirty-seventh Street, separates it from the plot on which Mr. Morgan's house stands, at the northeast corner of Madison Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street. The Brown property, together with a one-fifth interest in the alley, was transferred on June 3 last to William Salomon.

Mr. Morgan's residence, on the Madison Avenue corner, stands on a plot fronting 65.10 feet on the avenue and 157 feet on the street. The street frontage of his holdings will thus be increased to 250 feet by his recent purchase.

Mr. Salomon, who is Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, when seen at his office, 2 Wall Street, yesterday, listened to questions as to his reported sale of one residence and the purchase of another, and remarked that he had no announcements to make in regard to either.

Both of these transactions are of importance because they will tend to affect favorably the neighborhoods in which the properties are located. The fact that Mr. Morgan has seen fit to buy a large parcel adjoining his residence cannot fail to strengthen values in the Murray Hill section, while the extensive alterations and improvements to the old Arnold property, at Fifth

BANKRUPT'S ARREST DISPUTED.

Relative Authority of Federal and State Laws Involved in the Case of Louis Lewensohn.

A question as to the relative authority of the Federal and State courts is involved in the arrest yesterday of Louis Lewensohn, who, prior to last October, when he filed a petition in bankruptcy, was in the clothing business at 8 Washington Place. The bankruptcy law declares, in one section, that proceedings under its provisions shall not be a bar to actions against the bankrupt under State laws where fraud is alleged by the creditors, and in another section it provides that a bankrupt shall not be arrested under civil process from a State court while he is undergoing examination in bankruptcy. Myers, Goldsmith & Bronner, counsel for Lewensohn, hold that the latter provision exempts their client from arrest at the present time, while Blumenstiel & Hirsch, who represent his creditors, maintain that the section means that the bankrupt shall not be arrested while he is actually in attendance upon some proceeding in connection with his bankruptcy, but does not give him immunity from arrest throughout the progress of the case in the Federal court.

When Lewensohn filed his petition in bankruptcy it appeared that his assets were between $75,000 and $100,000 and his liabilities about $170,000. It is alleged by his creditors that about six months prior to that time he had represented that his assets were about $90,000 in excess of his liabilities, and that on the strength of this statement he obtained large quantities of goods on credit. Upon the strength of this discrepancy in the condition of his affairs, upon which charges of fraud were based, Blumenstiel & Hirsch obtained four orders of arrest from the Supreme Court, acting for Greeley, Cushman & Reed, Wimerding & Talbert, William Iselin & Co., and Boissot Père & Fils, creditors, with claims aggregating about $40,000. Myers, Goldsmith & Bronner then obtained a writ from Judge Brown of the United States District Court temporarily prohibiting the service of these orders of arrest, on the ground that Lewensohn could not be restrained of his liberty by a State court while he was undergoing examination in bankruptcy.

The question was argued before Judge Brown on Tuesday. Pending his decision, by stipulation of counsel, Deputy Sheriff Terry was permitted yesterday to arrest Lewensohn under the order granted upon the application of Greeley, Cushman & Reed, whose claim against the bankrupt is about $10,000. The order of arrest was issued by Justice Andrews of the Supreme Court. Lewensohn was released on $10,000 bail. The service of the three other orders of arrest will await Judge Brown's decision, and, should that be in favor of the bankrupt, it is agreed between counsel that he shall be released from the bond which he gave under the order served yesterday.

Mr. Goldsmith, of counsel for the bankrupt, said yesterday that it was unquestioned that Lewensohn could be arrested under process from the State courts upon the termination of the bankruptcy proceedings, whether or not he should receive a discharge in bankruptcy from the Federal court.

SPECIAL GRAND JURY CALLED.

Different Reasons Given for the Action of the District Attorney.

An application made in behalf of the District Attorney by Assistant District Attorney John F. McIntyre for the impaneling of a Special Grand Jury was granted yesterday by Justice Andrews of the Supreme Court. The Special Grand Jury will begin its session on the first Monday in February under the direction of Justice Foster in the Criminal Term of the Supreme Court.

Mr. McIntyre said yesterday that he considered the Special Grand Jury a necessity on account of the accumulation of excise and other cases. It was said in other quarters, however, that the real cause for the impaneling of the jury was the pressure brought to bear upon the District Attorney's office by William F. Sheehan and De Lancey Nicoll for an investigation of the charges made by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company in regard to rumors circulated in Wall Street respecting its financial condition. Mr. McIntyre refused either to confirm or deny this report. Another member of the District Attorney's staff said that Col. Gardiner was anxious to close up all pending business before the investigation of the charges against him, and had caused application to be made for the Special Grand Jury on that account.

Tragedy Ends a Hopeless Infatuation.

WILMINGTON, Del., Jan. 10.—Charles W. Pickel to-day shot Mrs. Lizzie A. Graham, at whose house he boarded, three times, inflicting wounds that the doctor says will prove fatal. Then he killed himself. The cause of the tragedy was Pickel's infatuation for the woman.

RUPPANER, ANTOINE.—The People of the State of New York, by the grace of God free and independent, to Barbara Ellensohn, Kathi Kristof, Anna Kristof, send greeting:

You and each of you are hereby cited and required personally to be and appear before our Surrogate of the County of New York, at the Surrogate's Court of said county, held at the County Court House in the City of New York, on the 23d day of February, 1900, at half-past ten o'clock in the forenoon of that day, then and there to show cause why the account of John S. Keyes and Terence E. Smith, as trustees of the trust created in and by the will of ANTOINE RUPPANER, deceased, for the benefit of Barbara Ellensohn and others should not be judicially settled and a decree be made thereupon allowing the said trustees to resign their trust and discharging them accordingly, and such of you as are hereby cited as are under the age of twenty-one years are required to appear by your guardian, if you have one, or if you have none, to appear and apply for one to be appointed, or in the event of your neglect or failure to do so, a guardian will be appointed by the Surrogate to represent and act for you in the proceeding.

In testimony whereof we have caused the seal of the Surrogate's Court of the said County of New York to be hereunto affixed. Witness, Hon. Frank T. Fitzgerald, a Surrogate of our said county, at the New York City of New York, the 28th day of Surrogate's December, in the year of our Lord [L. S.] one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine.

J. FAIRFAX McLAUGHLIN, Clerk of the Surrogate's Court.

MANY FIREMEN OVERCOME

Made Unconscious by Smoke at a West 59th Street Fire.

WOMEN AMONG THE RESCUERS

Daughter of a Member of the Department Killed While on Duty Saves One Man's Life.

Between forty and fifty firemen were overcome yesterday morning by smoke and gas at a fire which caused a pecuniary loss of not over $10,000, but which baffled the fighting force for more than four hours. It was a cellar fire, between double floors, padded with felt paper. This is the kind of fire that the firemen most dread, because the huge and stifling volumes of smoke conceal the blaze, and for a time defy every effort to reach it.

The fire started about 6 o'clock in the bowling alleys of Frank and Charles Starr's café at 308 and 310 West Fifty-ninth Street in a four-story brick building owned by the Appleby estate. The upper floors are occupied by Dr. Savage's gymnasium and the National Bowling League, but the fire did not extend above the ground floor, which was about half burned through. Within two hours, and mostly within an hour, nearly fifty firemen were overcome, of whom twenty-five were taken to hospitals, some unconscious and others gasping for breath. They were hurried through the streets in ambulances, their clothing soaked with icy water.

Relays of firemen one after the other went into the smoke-filled pit, some to rush back after two or three minutes of fruitless effort, and the less fortunate ones to drop as if dead into the fast rising water and to be dragged out by still fresh relays of fire fighters, many of these in turn being overcome by their efforts. Time and again men staggered blindly to the sidewalk, where they dropped apparently lifeless, while the others, carried out by comrades and laid in the street or on the sidewalk, made that portion of Fifty-ninth Street look not unlike a battlefield. All the firemen join in saying that it was a unique fire, and both Chief Croker and Battalion Chief Binns declared it was the most difficult cellar fire to subdue in the history of the department. The place was confined, and the alleys were constructed of yellow pine, soaked with oil and beeswax. With this excellent burning material, the fire got into the dobble flooring, where it had its own way, burning slowly for hours.

MEN STAGGERED AND FELL.

The fire was discovered by one of the bartenders in Starr's place. He saw smoke coming from the basement at 6:15, growing thicker and thicker with each second. At the first alarm Chief Binns responded with Truck No. 4 and Engines Nos. 23, 40, and 54. The men of Engines Nos. 23 and 40 forced their way down the steps leading to the alleys, but there their troubles began at once. Charles Netzel of No. 23 was the first to succumb. He inhaled a breath of hot air and staggered up the steps to the sidewalk, where he fell. He was taken to Roosevelt Hospital. Almost at the same time Capt. Edward Tobin and Pipemen Rogan and Mangin of the same company were overpowered by the thick smoke and staggered back nearly suffocated. They recovered later and pluckily went back to work, only to be overcome again. Man after man of Engines Nos. 23 and 40 fell in the smoke-clouded cellar, and had to be dragged out by the men of Truck No. 4, most of whom were themselves overcome, and in turn were saved by others. Within a few minutes ambulances from Bellevue, Roosevelt, and Flower Hospitals had been sent for, and their surgeons found more than they could do for an hour or more in helping the half-suffocated firemen.

One of the worst sufferers was Lieut. Henry Hauck of Engine No. 40. Three separate times he was overcome and dragged out unconscious to the walk, and from there twice taken into the rooms of Mrs. Kate Mangin, the janitress of the flat building next door. Each time he went back. Capt. Tobin was overcome for the second time before he went to the hospital.

After Capt. Tobin was taken to Roosevelt he became worse, and late last night it was said that he was quite ill, although his condition was not considered to be dangerous. In addition to the smoke he inhaled his back is badly wrenched and he is otherwise bruised. Three men who were left in the hospital last night are expected to leave this morning. The firemen taken to the hospitals were: Roosevelt—Lieut. Patrick Brennan, Truck No. 4; P. J. Clark, John Cahill, Thomas Mulavey, Howard Ruch, and Edward Smith, Engine No. 40; John Callaghy, Engine No. 65; C. Duggan, Engine No. 2; F. W. Desouth, Truck No. 4; A. De Groot, Engine No. 2; Otto Fink, Truck No. 4; John Higgins, Assistant Foreman, Engine No. 65; Charles Netzel, Engine No. 23; John H. McCune, Engine No. 2; John McLaughlin, Truck No. 4; Deputy Battalion Chief Norris of Battalion No. 9; Patrick Rogan, Engine No. 23; Daniel Simonson, Engine No. 23; Edward Sweeney, Truck No. 4; Capt. Edward Tobin, Engine No. 23; John Cassels, Chief of Eleventh Battalion; Bellevue—John Derr; Flower—Timothy Gaynor, George Rivers, Engine No. 2; Herman Kuch, Engine No. 8.

At the end of an hour the force was so reduced that Chief Binns sent for fresh men and Truck No. 23 responded. At that time Lieut. Hauck was the only man of Engine No. 40 left, and its hose was manned by hook and ladder men. Hauck insisted upon being the last man in his company to give up. After he had had a full turn with the stairs Chief Croker ordered that he and several other firemen, who, though scarcely able to stand, had insisted upon remaining, be sent to the hospital. Hauck left Roosevelt Hospital last evening, but most of his companions had then recovered sufficiently to go home.

Street-car traffic in Fifty-ninth Street was blocked until after noon. Great crowds gathered and were held in check by the police reserves from several stations, but they kept at a safe distance, for the smoke until after 10 o'clock filled the block for several hundred feet and hung like a pall over the street.

Try as they might, the firemen did not succeed in reaching the blaze for over two hours. At one time Chief Binns was nearly overcome, as well as soaked with water. He was forced to go to his headquarters for dry clothing after having had a quart of whisky poured over his back and shoulders to prevent him from taking cold. Mr. Binns said later that he thought the exterior treatment the best.

WOMEN AS GOOD SAMARITANS.

Not the least dramatic feature of the fire was the assistance rendered by Mrs. Kate Madden, the janitress, and Miss Minnie Schwartz of 641 East Ninth Street. Miss Schwartz was passing on a car when she saw the smoke and jumped off. Breaking through the line of policemen she began to busy herself with Mrs. Madden in caring for the firemen who had been overcome. "I am a fireman's daughter," she hastily explained to a policeman who tried to stop her. "He was killed in a fire some years ago, and I never fail to do all I can for the men whenever I have the opportunity." Though the street was full of water, she worked without rubbers and utterly disregarded the consequences to her clothing, which became sadly bedraggled.

Mrs. Madden turned her rooms into a sort of field hospital. Here the men were carried or led and laid on the floor wherever a vacant spot could be found. Mrs. Madden made coffee and heated milk, which the surgeons had prescribed for the men's relief. Not less than fifty quarts of coffee and half that amount of hot milk did Mrs. Madden voluntarily furnish the vanquished firemen, and not only this, but she gave dry socks and various articles of clothing to the men until the supply gave out. Mrs. Madden, between helping to resuscitate the men and making coffee on a not very large stove, passed what she called the two busiest hours of her life.

The fireman's daughter assisted in this work, and, besides buying milk for the men, possibly saved one pipeman's life. He was staggering along the street in front of the building unable to see, and was heading directly for a gaping hole in the sidewalk. The young woman saw his danger. Darting forward she grasped his arm just as he was about to step into it, and led him away to hot coffee and safety. The women were assisted by the two department Chaplains, Father Daly and the Rev. Mr. Johnson.

THE FIREMEN SUCCESSFUL.

Gradually the fighting force made its way to the fire. The men were led by Chief Croker, who took an axe himself and chopped away at the floor in trying to reach the blaze. The men would chop and then run out for air. At length, about 11 o'clock, the rear portion of the floor fell in, carrying down with it three billiard tables, chairs, and other paraphernalia of the place. Once released, the flames sprang up and began to spread. This was just what the firemen wanted, and from that moment the fire was under control. It was nearly 2 o'clock, however, before the last engine was withdrawn.

The tons of water thrown into the cellar in fifteen streams filled it to a depth of 8 feet by actual measurement. The water was the same depth in the cellar of the Tinkham Cycle Company next door, and considerable damage will result in consequence to the latter concern.

The insurance on the building, in which the fire occurred, amounts to $30,000, and is distributed as follows: Royal, $10,000; Continental, $10,000; German-American, $10,000. The property of Frank E. Starr, including café, billiard room, and bowling alleys, the loss on which will be adjusted by Lyons, Stadholz & Co., was insured in the Western Assurance Company of Toronto for $14,100, half of which had been reinsured by that company.

The fire is supposed to have been caused by an overheated flue, but this could not be definitely ascertained.

LEGAL NOTES.

DUTY TO LOOK AND LISTEN IN CROSSING RAILROADS.—On the afternoon of July 9, 1898, Nellie S. Stowell was driving a horse attached to a small phaeton along Englewood Avenue, Englewood, N. J., proceeding southeasterly, so as to cross the tracks of the Northern Railroad of New Jersey, which was then operated by the Erie Railroad. The crossing was between the Englewood and the Nordhoff Stations. She was driving at a slow trot, when she heard the noise of a train. She waited about twenty-five feet away, to see where it was coming from, and looked both up and down the track, soon perceiving that the noise was from a south-bound train which came in sight. She did not notice a north-bound train which had left the Nordhoff station, although it must have been in plain view. She heard no signal whistle or bell, or any noise of another approaching train, the noise of the down train being sufficient to drown any such sound from the up train. She started to cross as soon as the south-bound train had passed, at the same time again looking up and down, seeing nothing except the disappearing south-bound train. When her horse was on the track she became aware of the proximity of the other train. By the exertion of all her strength she pulled the horse around away from the train, and he was struck, not by the engine, but by the second car. Her suit brought against the Erie Railroad, in the United States Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York, for damages for the injuries she received resulted in a judgment upon a verdict directed for the defendant, and that decision was recently sustained by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Judge Lacombe. The Court holds that the duty of a person about to cross a railroad track, to look and listen for approaching trains, is not discharged by looking at and listening to what is known to be but a temporary obstruction, when a short delay would give an unobstructed view of the roadbed both ways.

PRIORITY OF LIENS.—David F. Gibb, in June, 1897, contracted with the City of New York, through the Board of Education, for the building of Grammar School No. 2, for $124,000. Of this sum $93,000 was paid, leaving $30,364 in the hands of the Controller, when Thomas McKay brought an action against the city and others to determine the rights to this money of various parties who had filed liens. Mr. Gibb in October, 1898, assigned $7,500 of "the moneys due and to become due" on the contract to the Eleventh Ward Bank, and the main controversy was as to the priority of the bank's claim over subsequent lienors. On the trial the court held that this assignment was not to be treated as of the date of the filing, but the assignee's right to participate in the fund should be postponed to all the liens, including those that were subsequently filed. The First Appellate Division, on appeal by the bank, has reversed this judgment. The contractor testified at the trial that the money was obtained from the bank at different times to carry on the business, but the full amount of $7,500 had been advanced when the assignment was executed; and that at that date more than that sum was due on the contract in addition to sufficient money to pay the prior liens which had been filed against the fund. Justice O'Brien, giving the opinion for the Appellate Division, holds that the cases in the Court of Appeals relied upon below are no longer controlling, the ordinance relating to contracts with the city then in force having been superseded by the lien law embodied in the Consolidation act of 1882. The Court holds that these sections of the Consolidation act were not repealed or affected by the general lien law of 1897. The rights of the parties having accrued while the Consolidation act was in full force, and before the repeal, in 1899, of the section of that act relating to mechanics' liens on account of public improvements in this city, were to be determined by its provisions and the terms of the contract referred to, with the city. The Court finds, therefore, neither in the Consolidation act nor in the contract anything which limits the right of a contractor to make an assignment which would take precedence over liens subsequently filed; and the assignment to the Eleventh Ward Bank, based as it was upon a good consideration, and notice of it having been filed with the Controller, took precedence in payment over subsequent liens. Justice Ingraham dissented, saying that by the provisions of the Consolidation act and the mechanics' lien law the Legislature sought to accomplish just what the Common Council in passing the ordinance referred to did; and that "to hold that a contractor by simply transferring to another the moneys which are to grow due under the contract, made such assignment superior to the rights of one to whom the statute gives a lien for the labor or materials actually furnished in completing the contract, would be to render the protection which the statute intended to give nugatory."

ENDOWMENT POLICY AS AN ASSET.—William Diack received from the Equitable Life Assurance Society in June, 1892, an endowment policy for $15,000, payable in June, 1907, "or should he die before then, to his wife, Susan M. Diack, if living; if not, then to the said William Diack, his executors, administrators, or assigns." Mrs. Diack is still living. Mr. Diack had omitted in bankruptcy proceedings to include his interest in this policy as an asset in his schedule, and objection was made by Messrs. Black, Olcott, Gruber & Bonynge, on behalf of the trustee to his discharge. Mr. George C. Holt, the referee, reported that at the commencement of the proceeding the policy had no surrender value to the assured. Judge Thomas, in granting the discharge, held that this ruling was erroneous, and that Mr. Diack had a legal interest in the policy equal at least to that of the person entitled in case of his death. A motion then made by the trustee to compel the bankrupt to execute an assignment of his interest in the policy was opposed by Messrs. Oberstein & Kohner for the bankrupt, and has now been denied by Referee Holt, who, while admitting that the bankrupt undoubtedly had an interest in the surrender value of the policy, says the difficulty is that neither he nor his trustee can surrender it without Mrs. Diack's consent. After stating in detail the grounds upon which he had based his certificate, Mr. Holt adds: "In view of these considerations, I think that although Mr. Diack has an important interest in this policy, his interest at the date of the adjudication had no surrender or other value which the trustee can take or enforce. But the execution by Mr. Diack of a formal assignment of his interest in the policy might result, it seems to me, in serious injustice. Suppose an assignment made. No trustee in bankruptcy would be justified in paying premiums until 1907, because, if Mr. Diack died meanwhile, the entire $15,000 would go to Mrs. Diack. If Mr. Diack should pay such premiums from his earnings after the adjudication, there would be no justice in having the trustee take the $15,000 in 1907, if Mr. Diack lived to that time; nor would such a result be just if Mrs. Diack paid such premiums. In any point of view, it seems to me that the bankrupt's interest in this policy is so mixed up with his wife's rights in it that his creditors cannot reach it."

Will Not Change Street Signs.

The resolution adopted by the Municipal Assembly requiring the Commission of Public Buildings, Lighting, and Supplies to "cause street lamps to be so placed that streets signs thereon run parallel with the streets named" has become a law without the approval of the Mayor. Commissioner Kearny, under a ruling made by Corporation Counsel Whalen, is not obliged to obey orders from the Municipal Assembly, and the changing of the street signs as directed depends entirely upon his pleasure. Commissioner Kearny says that there does not appear to be any general demand on the part of the public for the change, and he will not make it until he finds that it is desired.

RAPID TRANSIT CONTRACT

Mr. Orr Says the Entire Road May Be Built at Once.

DEBT LIMIT NOT IN THE WAY

Margin of $70,000,000 Now in Sight for This and Other Desired Public Improvements.

President Alexander E. Orr of the Rapid Transit Commission yesterday gave out a statement in which he discusses the public hearing of the day before, and points particularly to the fact that the city's debt limit will be extended this year from the $50,000,000 which has been given as the present limit by Controller Coler, to about $70,000,000 by the operation of the sinking fund and increase of real estate values. Under these conditions Mr. Orr points out that it would be possible for the city to contract at once for the building of the entire road, instead of one of the four sections. Mr. Orr's statement is as follows:

"At the hearing yesterday before the Rapid Transit Commission two subjects were discussed. The first was an extension of the proposed underground road down Broadway to the Battery and thence under the East River to Brooklyn; the second was the question of beginning work along the line already authorized throughout its entire length. Both propositions were earnestly and very ably advocated.

"As to the first of these topics, the board has felt that the proposed extension to Brooklyn, if practicable, would be the natural and almost inevitable result of the building of a road from the Post Office north. Certainly the project is one deserving the most careful study, after the commission has succeeded in letting a contract for the work now in hand. But until that is disposed of it is hardly possible to take up any new projects. At any rate, the first step in such an inquiry must be to find out just how far the authority of the commission extends, and as some doubts have been suggested on this point, it was unanimously agreed by the board to have a full report from our counsel before proceeding further in the matter.

"In regard to the second subject, there seemed to be some misapprehension in the part of those who addressed the commission, which was very likely due to the fact that they were not quite familiar with the terms of the proposed contract, bids for which are to be opened on Monday next. This contract, by the statute, had to be prepared by the board and approved by the Corporation Counsel before advertisement for bids could be begun, and it cannot now be changed without very great delay. It provides for building the road in four sections. The first section which is to be built at once, extends from the Post Office to Fifty-ninth Street. The three other sections, above Fifty-ninth Street, are to be built at such future times as the board may fix; provided due notice is given as to each section within certain times specified in the contract. Notice might be given as to each section the moment the contract is signed.

"The contract was drawn in this way because the city authorities were not willing, before the election at which the recent amendment to the Constitution was adopted, to run the risk of exhausting or nearly exhausting the debt-incurring capacity of the city. It therefore commits the city to an absolute obligation only as to Section 1, and it leaves the construction of the other sections optional with the city as already stated.

"However, it has always been the intention of the board to exercise the options just as soon as the debt limit should be amply beyond the amount required for the building of the road and for other immediate necessities of the city. It now appears that the adoption of the recent Constitutional amendment, which only went into effect on the 1st day of January, has created this situation. We are informed by the Controller that the present debt-limit of the city is, in round figures, $50,000,000. There will be besides this during the present year an expansion due to the operation of the sinking fund on the one hand and the increase in real estate valuations on the other which would raise these figures to about $70,000,000. This sum is far more than enough to build the entire road.

"It is of course apparent that until it is known what bids we are to receive the board cannot know whether any contract at all will be let; and still less can they decide how soon it will be wise to require the contractor to proceed with the work north of Fifty-ninth Street. It is, however, perfectly safe to say that the board is in favor of exercising its options for the three northern sections as fast as the city's financial condition will permit. If, therefore, we get a bid that is satisfactory in all respects, and financial conditions do not materially change before the contract can be awarded, the board, in my judgment, will be disposed to exercise its option at least for Section 2 immediately after the contract is signed. It may prove to be best for the city's interests to exercise the options at once for both Sections 2 and 3, or even for the whole road.

"The public and intending bidders may feel assured that it is our fixed intention to press this great work to an early completion, and to have real rapid transit from the Post Office to King's Bridge and Bronx Park at the very first possible day."

Congressman Charles W. Fowler has written from Washington to Mr. Orr regarding the validity of the Carpenter patent for the bi-transit railway system. He holds that that system is admittedly necessary to the handling of rapid transit traffic, and it has been adopted in the present rapid transit plans. He cites at length an affidavit submitted to the United States Commissioner of Patents by Melville C. Smith, showing the merits of the system, by which two systems of trains are run side by side, with island stations by means of which passengers may be transferred from the through trains at widely separated points to way trains, by which they may reach the stations nearer their destinations than the stations of through trains. Engineers, it is set forth, had failed to solve the problem prior to Mr. Carpenter's discovery.

THE MAYOR ON TUNNELS.

Manufacturers' Association Urges the South Brooklyn Rapid Transit Adjunct

A committee from the Manufacturers' Association called on Mayor Van Wyck yesterday and asked him to use his influence to have a tunnel constructed between the Battery and South Brooklyn, as an adjunct to the rapid transit system in this borough. The Mayor listened to his visitors attentively, and then said:

"The Controller says that the tunnel would cost only $3,000,000. That would be a small tunnel, wouldn't it?"

The Mayor then added that the engineers consulted by him had said that it would require eight tunnels to carry the traffic of one bridge.

"I should like to see sixteen bridges over the East River," said the Mayor with a laugh. "We can't have too many of them. Do any of you gentlemen believe the bridges should be used for recreation piers?"

Mayor Van Wyck then promised to give the matter his attention. As the delegation started to leave the office he remarked: "I'm glad you came. I always like to talk to business men about public improvements."

The resolution of the Municipal Assembly authorizing the issue of revenue bonds to the amount of $50,000 to pay for preliminary surveys for a tunnel to South Brooklyn from the foot of Whitehall Street, and thence across the Narrows to Staten Island, became a law yesterday without the Mayor's signature.

BIG MAP OF NEW YORK.

Designed to Show City's Growth—For the Paris Exposition.

Louis A. Risse, the chief topographical engineer of the Board of Public Improvements, sent a letter to that body yesterday in which he informed it of the completion of the topographical map of the city and its environs, which is to be exhibited at the Paris Exposition. This map will be on public view at the hall of the Arion Society, Fifty-ninth Street and Park Avenue, on Jan. 16, 17, and 18.

The map is drawn on a scale of 600 feet to one inch; its size is 31 feet long and 27 feet wide, and is the largest map ever made of any city in this country. It shows the buildings, contour lines, and delineates the topographical features, as well as the development of the city, from its beginning to the present time.

While the area covered by Greater New York is 326.11 square miles, the area of the city and vicinity as shown on the map includes nearly 1,000 squire miles. The border of the map is made up of numerous views of the most prominent buildings and the most picturesque parts of the city.

In addition to this general map, two other maps are in preparation and will be completed soon. One map shows the city in 1664, and the other as it was in 1800. It is the intention to exhibit these maps as a contrast to the general map and to show the wonderful development of New York City. A relief map of Manhattan Island in 1776, an exact duplicate of the original in the State Museum at Albany, has been secured and will also form a part of this city's exhibit.

The United States Commission for the Paris Exposition has set aside a space of 1,015 square feet, for the exhibition of these maps in the building allotted to the United States engineering exhibits at the exposition.

PRODUCE EXCHANGE TRUST.

Doors of the Company Reopened with Millions Supplied by Edwin Gould and Gen. Thomas.

The doors of the Produce Exchange Trust Company, in the Standard Oil Building, which were closed because of suspension of business Dec. 18, were reopened yesterday. The company had the financial "sinews of war" to face its obligations. Tuesday evening there was locked up in its safe a check for $1,250,000, the contribution toward rehabilitation of Vice President Samuel Thomas, and when the offices opened yesterday, President Edwin Gould had supplied an equal sum to make up the $2,500,000 that was estimated as necessary to start the company anew.

The officers of the company were astonished yesterday at the comparatively small number of applications for balances. At no time during the day were there more than half a dozen applicants at the paying teller's wicket. Sometimes there was no applicant. Several new accounts of importance were received. One of the officers said: "It was about balanced, with a leaning on the side of withdrawals. But we paid out a sum that, in the circumstances, we consider small."

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the company was held at noon in the board room, and there was a full attendance of shareholders. All appeared to be pleased at the change in the company's affairs, and President Gould was heartily congratulated. The principal business was the election of eight Trustees of the class of 1900. W. W. Merrill and S. D. Scudder, ex-Vice President, having declined nomination, the following ticket was voted on unanimously by 18,288½ shares of stock out of $25,000: New Trustees, William H. Taylor and Andrew Langdon. Trustees re-elected, Edwin R. Ladew, Henry A. McGee, Edward A. Maher, George W. Ballou, John A. Shibley, and John Skelton Williams. Mr. Taylor came in as Secretary with Mr. Gould. Mr. Langdon, nominated by Gen. Thomas, has important banking interests at Buffalo. This election constitutes the full Board of twenty-four Trustees, as follows: Samuel Thomas, Joseph W. Ogden, George W. Ballou, W. H. Taylor, Andrew Langdon, Charles P. Armstrong, Amzi L. Barber, Frank Brainard, Turner A. Beall, George R. Bidwell, Charles A. Deshon, A. Goepel, Edwin Gould, H. Irvine Keyser, Edward R. Ladew, Thomas A. McIntyre, Henry A. McGee, J. W. Middendorf, Edward A. Maher, John A. Shibley, John P. Truesdell, C. M. Warner, John Skelton Williams, and E. F. C. Young.

The board met after the election and perfected the organization of the company by electing Mr. Ballou Second Vice President and Mr. Taylor Third Vice President. William M. Laws was appointed Secretary, to succeed Mr. Taylor. The other officers are: President—Edwin Gould; First Vice President—Samuel Thomas; Treasurer—John A. Hilton. The full and permanent organization of the company will be effected Jan. 17.

An announcement made last evening by Almon Goodwin and William Nelson Cromwell of counsel for the company to its depositors and stockholders, said in part:

Reports were made by the new officials of the company showing the present condition of the company, and that the loans and investments were intact, and that they were satisfied that little, if any, loss would be made thereby.

After general discussion resolutions were unanimously adopted that the stockholders of the company express their deep sense of obligation and their hearty thanks to the special committee, Mr. Gould, Gen. Thomas, and the counsel for the able and successful manner in which they met the crisis.

President Gould said last evening that he was pleased with the conditions in which the company resumed business and sanguine of its success.

GIFTS TO PUBLIC LIBRARY.

Miss Gould's Presentation of Books Relating to Mormonism—Trustees Discuss Plans for New Building.

The Trustees of the New York Public Library held their regular monthly meeting at the Astor Building yesterday. It was announced that 50,000 volumes and 105,000 pamphlets had been received at the library during the year, being the largest accessions ever recorded for any single year.

Some valuable gifts were made to the library during the month of December, the most important being the Berrian collection of works relating to Mormonism, including 450 volumes and 300 pamphlets, with 52 volumes of newspapers, presented by Miss Helen M. Gould, with the following letter:

Dr. John S. Billings, Director New York Public Library, 40 Lafayette Place, New York City:

Dear Sir: It gives me pleasure to add the Berrian collection of books and pamphlets on Mormonism to the New York Public Library, for I believe it will be very useful to students to have access to a collection that gives a clear idea of this peculiar form of error. The Mormon Elders are proselytizing in many sections of our country, and our people generally should become better informed on the subject of Mormonism in order to be on their guard against these "Latter Day Saints," as they style themselves.

Hoping that the books will prove useful, believe me very truly,

HELEN MILLER GOULD.

Dec. 21, 1899.

The collection is being catalogued and arranged and will be placed in the Lenox Building for the use of the public in about ten days.

Mrs. Henry Draper gave twenty-one volumes on Russian and Oriental needlework, embroideries, and lace making.

Paul Leicester Ford gave a copy of Samuel Gale's "Essay on the Nature and Principles of Publick Credit," printed at St. Augustine, Fla., 1784, being the first book printed in Florida.

The work of arranging for a print room at the Lenox is in progress, and it is hoped that a public exhibition of prints will be ready in April.

Plans for the proposed library building at Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, on the site of the old reservoir, were discussed. It is reported that the plans of this library will be sent to Paris for exhibition at the Exposition.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S WORK.

Cut in City Appropriation May Seriously Retard Improvements.

The officers of the New York Zoological Society are somewhat discouraged at the prospect of having to pay out of their own treasury a considerable part of this year's expenses for maintaining the new Zoological Park.

The society agreed to raise $250,000 for buildings and permanent improvements, on the condition that the city would pay the expense of maintenance. Of the sum required $90,000 is yet to be obtained, and with an additional outlay required for maintenance, it is feared that the task in view is an impossible one. It is understood that the cut in the appropriation is a part of a general plan of municipal retrenchment, and no charge of discrimination against the society is made.

This, however, does not relieve the embarrassment of the situation. At least $5,000 a month is required to maintain the park, and the appropriation of $40,000, the officers say, means that they must raise $20,000 more this year than they supposed they would need.

In the event of the refusal of the Board of Estimate to provide sufficient funds, it has not been decided whether the society shall curtail its operations or issue an appeal to the public for money to meet the deficiency.

Lecture Course for Printers' Club.

The Printers' Club has announced a course of lectures free to members and their friends, to be given on Jan. 17 and the first and third Wednesdays of February, March, April, and May. The following will be the lecturers, in the order named: Seth Low, Dr. William S. Rainsford, Leonard D. Abbott, Ernest H. Crosby, Charles F. Wingate, John W. Keller, the Rev. Thomas J. Ducey, John S. Crosby, and Dr. I. K. Funk. William Dean Howells has also consented to give a reading before the club at a date not yet named.

FLINT'S FINE FURNITURE

QUAINT CHAIRS REDUCED.

A beautiful piece of furniture, says somebody, is like a beautiful woman; you do not ask its name and nationality to find out that it is beautiful.

Some of our groups of odd chairs which are now below factory prices would puzzle a connoisseur in the naming of styles, but will delight every lover of unconventional beauty.

One a Mahogany Conversation Chair—$70.00 (reduced from $93.00)—is covered in silk tapestry.

Another, an All Upholstered Conversation Chair at $100.00, (reduced from $151.00,) covered in silk tapestry and fringe.

Their freedom from any fixed fashion makes them perfect accents for almost any style of furnishing.

FOR AN OLD CYCLING DEBT.

Judgment for Rent of the Michaux Club Against Elisha Dyer, Jr., and William A. Haines.

Judgment for $1,010.54 against Elisha Dyer, Jr., son of the Governor of Rhode Island, and William A. Haines in favor of the Sidney B. Bowman Cycle Company was given in the City Court on Tuesday by Justice Lewis J. Conlan. The judgment was for rent of the quarters formerly occupied by the Michaux Cycle Club, of which Messrs. Dyer and Haines were Directors.

The Michaux Club, which went out of existence in 1898, marked the rise and fall of the bicycle craze which seized upon fashionable society in 1894. The club, named after the French inventor, was organized by Elisha Dyer, Jr., with Charles Wyndham-Quin, a nephew of the Earl of Dunraven, and others, and sub-rented from Sidney B. Bowman for its quarters the old armory building at Broadway and Fifty-second Street. The place was fitted up very handsomely and for a time, while the bicycle fad was at its height, was a great success. Music rides and other attractive functions wer given there, and society flocked to the club, which became a favorite rendezvous.

Toward the end of the first season William A. Haines, who was formerly a member of the dry goods firm of Halstead, Haines & Co., which failed in 1883, and afterward manager of the Madison Square Garden, was taken into the directorate. Other Directors soon afterward resigned and were succeeded by John E. Roosevelt, Edward Winslow, Walter Suydam, and Dr. George Fowler. The club ran through another season, but the bicycle craze was then on the wane. The club decided to change its quarters and moved to another cycle academy at the Boulevard and Sixtieth Street, where it fitted up its rooms in handsome style. This attempt to revive the club's failing fortunes was not successful.

Mr. Bowman claimed that the club owed him something like $3,000 for rent. The payment of the rent was assumed by Dr. Fowler, but he wanted his fellow Directors to contribute, and moved suit to make them do so. The trouble was adjusted in some way and Messrs. Winslow, Suydam, and Roosevelt left the board, leaving Messrs. Fowler, Dyer, and Haines as the Directors. It is understood in cycling circles that Dr. Fowler paid a large proportion of the debt, and that the judgment against Messrs. Dyer and Haines is for the balance.

MAMMOTH EUCHRE PARTY.

The Players Number 2,500—Dr. Burtsell Gives a Prize.

The largest progressive euchre party ever given in this city, it is said, was held last night at the Grand Central Palace, Lexington Avenue and Forty-third Street. It was for the benefit of the Church of St. Philip Neri of Bedford Park. The players numbered 2,500. The game was managed by Prof. Heidenis and a staff of assistants.

The chief prize was a silver table service given by the Rev. Dr. Burtsell of Rondout. The pastor of St. Philip Neri's, who was present, said the affair was a grand success, and that his church will receive a large sum of money from it.

FIGHTS MILES BANKS'S WILL.

Daughter of a Son Who Disappeared Accuses Her Relatives.

A romantic story is associated with a will case that will come up this morning before Surrogate Fitzgerald. This is the contest by Miss Maude Ernestine Banks of Waltham, Mass., of the will of Miles Banks, her grandfather, who died in this city some months ago, leaving an estate of over $100,000. Miles Banks was a brother of Gen. Nathaniel Banks, of civil war fame, and one time Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Miles Banks, who was seventy-seven years old, was for forty years connected with the Custom House. Half a century ago he married in Waltham, Mass., but none save a very few members of the family knew of his marriage, and until his death it was generally believed that he was a bachelor. Of this marriage he had a son, Ernest, who disappeared twenty years ago and has not since been heard from. Miss Banks claims to be this son's daughter. Her mother, it appears, died years ago.

In his will Miles Banks left only $1,000 to Ernest Banks, whom he does not refer to as his son, although the relationship of all the other beneficiaries is stated. No mention whatever is made of Miss Maude Ernestine Banks, and she believes that he never had any knowledge of her existence. The fact that his son left a daughter, it is alleged, was kept from him by his other relatives, and Miss Banks, through Lawyer Philip J. Britt, claims a share in the estate and alleges that when making his will he was subjected to undue influence. Miss Banks lives with an aunt at Waltham.

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.—Both the Senate and the Assembly adjourned after the introduction of bills, without transacting any business. The committee appointed to investigate the tax question will recommend to the Legislature a measure providing a State tax of 5 mills upon Indebtedness secured by mortgages upon real property, which is expected to yield $10,000,000, and a 1 per cent. tax on stocks of banks and trust companies, which will yield $3,000,000 more. It is expected that strong opposition to the Educational Unification bill will develop when it is presented.—Page 8.

CONGRESS.—In the Senate yesterday the President's policy in the Philippines was bitterly assailed by Senator Pettigrew. Senator Lodge joined in the discussion. Witnesses testified before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections yesterday as to the alleged payment of money in the Montana Senatorial fight. Senator Stewart of Nevada spoke against the Currency bill. Senators Tillman and Allen clashed over the question of trusts. Admiral Dewey's telegram from Hongkong previous to the battle of Manila Bay was sent to the Senate yesterday by Secretary Long.—Page 3.

FOREIGN.—A special dispatch from London to a Chicago newspaper says it is reported that Gen. Ian Hamilton's mind is unhinged. The London Daily Mail announces that Gen. White's losses in the attack on Ladysmith were 848 killed or wounded. The Boer loss is estimated at 2,000 to 3,000. It is stated in London that the British will use dum-dum bullets owing to a scarcity of Lee-Metford cartridges. Lord Salisbury's reply to the American representations on the flour seizures has been received, and is said to be of a satisfactory nature. An unconfirmed rumor was circulated in London yesterday that Gen. Buller had fought another battle. Queen Victoria has called Parliament to meet on Jan. 30. The Government was accused yesterday in the Prussian Diet of "disciplining" Magistrates who are also members of the Diet, and who voted against the Canal bill. The result of the debate was a moral defeat for the Ministry. The officials of the French Foreign Office deny that there is any truth in the report that the commercial treaty with the United States will not be ratified. They are confident that the treaty will soon become an accomplished fact. The French Chamber of Deputies reassembled yesterday. M. Deschanel, on his re-election to the Presidency of the House, urged that the party truce agreed to during the Exposition year should be continued indefinitely. A detachment of Congo Free State troops routed the rebellious Batatolas in two battles last October.—Pages 1, 3, and 7.

OUTLOOK FOR QUAY POOR.

It Is Not Now Expected that the Senate Will Seat Him.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—A Senator who has been friendly to Mr. Quay, and who until recently expressed the hope that he could be seated, said to-day that he did not believe it possible for Mr. Quay to be seated, and that his case should not be permitted to come to a vote.

When the Committee on Privileges and Elections voted against Quay, a few days ago, it was expected by the Quay men that enough Democratic votes, to assist Republicans of the right turn of mind, would be secured to defeat the majority report and to give Mr. Quay the seat. The claim was made that Senators Daniel, Martin, Morgan, McLaurin, and Sullivan, all Democrats, would vote for him, and so make up the necessary majority. Senator Morgan was also counted as ready to vote for Quay.

Later investigation shows that possibly only one of these Democrats will vote for Quay. The others have looked into the matter with care, and while all are personally friendly to Quay they cannot find any justification in the practice of the Senate for such a course as that proposed by Quay and his friends. Quay's friends still insist that the Senate will never vote to keep him out.

W. K. VANDERBILT TO BOOM NEW YORK CITY

Seeks Restoration to the Port of Natural Trade Rights.

DIFFERENTIAL RATES TO GO

One of the First Sequels to the New Control of the Eastern Trunk Line Railroads.

New York City is to be benefited largely by the practical unification of the Eastern trunk line railroads. W. K. Vanderbilt's plans are much more comprehensive than have been forecast. His ambitions go beyond the centralization of Eastern railway control. One of the first sequels to the establishment of new controlling policies in the trunk line situation is to be the abolition of those differential freight rates which for so long have been doing damage to the business interests of New York.

The theory of the differential rate—the granting of a tariff allowance to other terminal points—has been that railroads entering New York could only thus protect themselves against traffic wars in the interest of lines having other termini. Through the operations of this policy, New Orleans, Newport News and Norfolk, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and Boston have each been granted advantages at the expense of New York City. A Western consignor of goods could obtain delivery at other points at a freight charge substantially less than required for shipments to New York.

Much ingenious logic has been current in railway circles to justify—to excuse—this artificial upbuilding of competitive points. But among practical railroad managers the whole issue is always resolved into the view that without differential allowance to other points harmony would be impossible of maintenance, that rate wars would be provoked, and even heavier traffic losses imposed than those yielded against New York in agreed differential concessions.

Other ports have urged that New York's natural advantages are protected in the face of any differential subsidy. Steamers outgoing from other ports are relatively unable to deliver to the railroads from which they take traffic any important return tonnage, most of the ships at such ports having to return from abroad practically in ballast, bringing the cheapest sort of freights, while at New York there is normal readiness to reship West in volume equal practically to what is brought East, and, as a rule, even a more profitable traffic, for while agricultural commodities and other bulk freight come East, reshipment from New York is largely of manufactured commodities upon which higher tariffs rule.

From the standpoint of equity all this has, of course, operated much against the interests of this city, and no clearer appreciation of this fact has prevailed than among practical railway managers. Not one such authority will be surprised or find occasion for warranted criticism in the establishment of the new policy made possible by what is now the practical unification of control in the Eastern railways.

So hurtful has been the imposition involved in the differential rate policy that New York's commercial exchanges and public-spirited citizens have engaged in a variety of movements looking toward remedies. A commission appointed by Gov. Roosevelt is to file at Albany to-morrow a carefully prepared report upon the subject—and its findings are in line with what is public knowledge of the facts and well-established public sentiment.

Some important details are to be worked out by Mr. Vanderbilt, President Callaway, President Cassatt, and others dominant in establishing trunk line policy; and on this account there may be some time intervening before new tariffs are established, but it can be relied upon as certain that the determination has already been reached to abolish discrimination against the city, and differential rates—as such—will go.

It will be the effort of trunk line administration officials to create as far as possible classification in character of freights. The deliveries of soft coal at the Southern seaboard will probably be even larger than hitherto, Baltimore may gain in its grain export volume, and Boston through the new control of the Boston and Albany may add substantially to certain classes of Western consignments.

But the new trunk line policy will make the natural export and import city of the country the centre of traffic of higher class, and charges will be at rates which do not prosper other cities at New York's expense. In plans recently considered by W. K. Vanderbilt and his associates few other objects have been more in view than the restoration to New York of natural trade rights.

PRESIDENT INGALLS'S FUTURE.

Will Retire from the Chesapeake and Ohio, but Remain at the Head of the "Big Four."

Melville E. Ingalls will not adhere to his stated resolution, made public last Monday, to retire within a few months from the Presidency of both the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago and St. Louis and the Chesapeake and Ohio systems. The statement in regard to his retirement was made in the morning before the meeting of the "Big Four" Directors.

There is official authority for saying that after the meeting Mr. Ingalls had a talk with W. K. Vanderbilt and J. Pierpont Morgan, and that they induced him to change his plan, so far as "Big Four" was concerned, so that while he will free himself from the duties and responsibilities of Chesapeake and Ohio, he will continue at the head of the other system.

"Mr. Ingalls," said an official and friend yesterday, "gets a good deal of enjoyment out of life while devoting wonderful energy to the interests confided to him. He had planned to retire—to golf, his hobby, and his charming home at Hot Springs—before he had passed all of his best years in railroad service. Relieved of Chesapeake and Ohio, he will be able to continue with 'Big Four' and have more leisure than at present. He is now at Cincinnati, and will not act on his retirement until W. K. Vanderbilt returns. This will be in about six weeks. President Cassatt of Pennsylvania will nominate President Ingalls's successor in Chesapeake and Ohio."

SCRUBBING MACHINES USED.

Have Been Introduced in the Navy Department at Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—A scrubbing machine, that will do more scrubbing than many a charwoman, but which will not diminish or depress the wages of charwomen, has been put in operation in the Navy Department with appreciable success. The scrubbing women work daily, to the number of eighty, between 4 and 6 o'clock, and besides receiving $20 monthly for this service have employment elsewhere. The scrubber is a sort of wheeled vehicle with rubber tires, carrying a mechanism which spreads brushes over the floor. Each machine requires two or three women to drive it, but they do not have to get upon their knees to move it.

The charwomen at first refused to run the machines, saying that they preferred to get down upon their knees and do the scrubbing. They were informed that there would be no reduction in the force; that the machines were merely intended as humanitarian devices, and not for the purpose of lessening the number of those employed, and were then glad to use them.

BOMB EXPLODES AT CONCERT.

Panic Narrowly Averted at Sanders Theatre, Harvard—Probably Intended as Joke for History Class.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 11.—The explosion of a bomb in Sanders Theatre, at Harvard, to-night, while 500 or 600 people were listening to a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, not only put a sudden stop to the concert, but for a few minutes, by reason of the panic which followed, threatened the lives of many in the rush for the doors.

Fortunately, through the efficient action of a number of cool-headed men, the turmoil was calmed and the audience left the building quietly, although greatly excited. As an alarm clock was found attached to the remnants of the bomb, the college authorities to-night believe the whole affair was intended as a joke on the history class, and that it exploded twelve hours ahead of time.

The hands of the alarm clock had stopped at 9:20 o'clock, and it is thought by the college authorities that some one put the bomb in the theatre with the idea of throwing the history class, which would meet there in the morning, into confusion. The janitor found a satchel under one of the seats this afternoon, and put it in a closet.

A detective, however, was immediately engaged, and will investigate the affair.

GOVERNOR ATTENDS FUNERAL.

Present with His Staff at the Service in Schenectady Over the Bodies of Mr. and Mrs. S. Dana Greene.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, Jan. 11.—The most largely attended funeral service that has ever been held in this city took place to-day, when the last religious rites over the bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dana Greene, who were drowned in the Mohawk River while skating on Monday, were held in St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church.

The bodies were viewed by hundreds of persons during the morning in the parlors of the desolate home, and at 12:30 o'clock a short service was held. The coffins were then escorted to the church by Company E, Second Regiment, and a detachment of the First Naval Battalion, composed of men who served under Lieut. Greene aboard the Yankee during the Spanish war. The Rev. Dr. J. Philip B. Pendleton officiated and the Right Rev. Dr. Doane, Bishop of the Diocese of Albany, read the Episcopal service for the dead.

Gov. Roosevelt, Adjt. Gen. Hoffman, the Governor's staff, and prominent military and naval men occupied seats directly in front of the chancel, while fully 200 officials of the General Electric Company and other former business associates of Mr. Greene, together with immediate relatives of the family, were seated on the right. The floral tributes were many and beautiful.

At the conclusion of the service the bodies were placed in a special car, bound for New York City, whence they will be taken to Bristol, R. I., for burial.

Among the members of the Governor's staff who attended were Major Craig Wadsworth, Capt. William Littauer, Capt. F. Norton Goddard, Col. George Curtis Treadwell, Capt. George Albert Wingate, Capt. James Radison Andrews, Lieut. Col. Harry H. Treadwell, Lieut. Adrian W. Mather, and Lieut. Robert K. Prentice. The naval detachment consisted of Capt. J. W. Miller, Lieut. Commander A. B. Fry, Lieut. Commander J. G. Agar, Lieut. Barnard, Lieut. Craven, Lieut. Townsend, Lieut. Andrews, Lieut. Fish, Surgeons McGowan and Forbes, Paymaster Pardington, and a detail of twenty men. There were also Capt. H. L. Satterlee, Lieut. Stayton, Lieut. Sloan, Lieut. Dimock, and Lieut. Brown, former naval officers.

Among prominent persons in the party were F. P. Fish, C. T. Hughes, A. D. Page, W. G. Whitemore, C. W. Howell, and E. H. Mullin, all of the General Electric Company; W. S. Howell, Secretary of the Edison Illuminating Company; Luther Stieringer, Electrical Engineer of the Pan-American Exposition; W. S. Parstow, Electrical Engineer of the Brooklyn Edison Company; W. J. Insull, Vice President of the General Incandescent Light Company; J. H. McGraw, editor of The Street Railway Journal; C. W. Price, editor of The Electrical Review; T. C. Martin, editor of The Electrical World and Engineer; F. J. Sprague and Alexander Henderson of The Sprague Electric Company; W. H. Johnson, General Manager of the Electric Vehicle Company of America, the Philadelphia Edison Association, and the Associated Edison Companies; R. W. Pope, C. O. Mailloux, W. J. Hammer, and Dr. C. J. Hutchinson of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers. Among other General Electric officials were B. E. Sunny of Chicago, W. C. Fish of Lynn, and Charles B. Davis and F. M. Kimball of Boston.

SUNDAY NECESSARIES DEFINED

South Norwalk Mayor Includes Shaving, Newspapers, and Ice Cream, but Bars Cigars and Fruit.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Jan. 11.—Mayor Charles G. Bohannon of South Norwalk instructed the Chief of Police as to the enforcement of the Sunday law. Under his construction of the law the Mayor believes that Sunday shaving, ice cream, soda water, as well as other soft drinks, shoe shines, and Sunday newspapers are necessaries, while cigars, fruits, confectionery, and peanuts are entirely unnecessary, as well as harmful to digestion, and therefore should not be allowed on sale on the Sabbath day.

Drug stores may remain open, but the cases containing cigars and confections must be sealed. Barbers' shops must keep the shades drawn and make no attempt to secure trade, keeping up the appearance of being closed. The livery stables and butchers' shops, as well as dry goods and clothing stores, were not mentioned in the Mayor's instructions, but he was very specific about the places mentioned and wanted all violations reported for prosecution.

Immediately after giving these instructions the Mayor left on a fox-hunting trip, possibly to escape the criticism which his peculiar construction of the law has caused among the local merchants. They claim that if South Norwalk is to have a Sunday law enforcement, it should be carried out to the letter and no favoritism shown. As a result, several of the cigar dealers after consulting counsel, will lay in a stock of soda water, as well as hire a bootblack, and give away a cigar with every drink or shine. The Mayor has decided that he will not prosecute soda water stands or bootblacks, and there is no law to prevent a man giving away cigars if he wants to.

It is the general belief that the Mayor found his Sunday message received with such general disfavor that he is trying to gracefully recede from the position in which it placed him.

TROLLEY CARS IN COLLISIONS.

Fire Truck and Wagon Run Into on the Third Avenue Line.

Two collisions between electric cars of the Third Avenue Line and vehicles occurred yesterday afternoon. The truck of Hook and Ladder Company No. 14 was struck by an east-bound car as it was backing into the firehouse in One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, between Lexington and Fourth Avenues. The three horses attached to the truck were thrown down, the two poles broken, and the heavy iron crossbar of the truck snapped in two. None of the passengers in the car was hurt.

Another car ran into a delivery wagon at Third Avenue and Eighty-fourth Street. The driver, Joseph Rampt, fifty-two years old, of 614 Second Avenue, was thrown to the ground and badly bruised. He was taken to the Presbyterian Hospital.

Much complaint, it is said, has been made along upper Third Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street of the speed of the electric cars. It is claimed that at the time the fire truck was struck, the car was going at the rate of thirty miles an hour.

INSURANCE OFFICE ROBBED

Bold Hold-Up in Long Island City Office of the Prudential.

Cashier Looks Into Pistol While $800 Is Swept Off His Desk—Open Safe with Thousands in It Not Seen.

There was a bold hold-up which netted the robbers over $800 in the Long Island City section of Queens Borough last night. The robbers took what money was in sight and decamped, not waiting to rifle a safe in which were thousands of dollars, and the safe stood open in the office and the robbers passed it on their way in and out, but did not notice it.

The office robbed was that of the Long Island City branch of the Prudential Insurance Company. The collectors settle up their accounts on Thursdays, when there is always more money on hand than on other days. The usual settlements were made yesterday, and when the rest of the office force left in the evening, Harry Athing, nineteen years of age, of 594 Fifth Avenue, Brooklyn, the cashier and confidential employe of Division Superintendent C. V. Dykeman, remained behind to close up the books.

Athing was alone in the office for several hours. The safe in Mr. Dykeman's office in the front of the building at 85 Borden Avenue stood open. Athing was to put the money in the cash drawer into the safe and lock it up. It was late by the time his books were balanced, and when this was done and he had ascertained how much money he should have, Athing took the money from the cash drawer and put it on the desk in front of him.

He reascended the stool and began to count it. According to the books as he balanced them the amount in the drawer should have been $808.37. He had not finished separating the money into piles for ease of counting when a man about 5 feet in height, with a red face and red mustache, entered from the street and walked to the glass and brass partition between the inner office and the section outside reserved for those having business with the cashier.

The man asked Athing if any one else was there, and where the Superintendent was. Athing replied Mr. Dykeman had gone home, and that he was alone. The man remarked that it was all right and not to mind, and started toward the street. He did not go out, but passed into the private office by a door at the front, which was open. He entered the rear part, and as the young man turned to demand what was wanted he found himself covered with a revolver. He was warned not to move or make an outcry.

A moment later a smaller man entered through the private office and went to the desk and swept the money upon it into a pile and stuffed it into his pockets. He then passed out while the taller man waited until his companion was outside. Then with a warning that any alarm within five minutes would result in the death of the young man, he departed.

Athing, when he recovered from his fright, ran to the Seventy-fifth Precinct Station House and gave the alarm. Detective Peter Kelly was detailed upon the case. He said he thought he knew who the robbers were, and started in search for them.

Both men wore black derby hats and black overcoats. The smaller one had his overcoat collar turned up about his face, but the other did not. Athing says he would know both again.

INJURED IN A RUNAWAY.

Horses Attached to a Carriage Dash Down Third Avenue—Driver and One of the Occupants Hurt.

A runaway in which two persons were injured occurred on Third Avenue last night. The injured persons are Louis Fransen, a driver of 33 Reid Avenue, Brooklyn, and Mrs. Isabella Lyon of 308 Halsey Street, Brooklyn.

Mrs. Lyon, with her husband and four-months-old baby, arrived at the Grand Central Station at 10 o'clock after a visit of several days with relatives in Massachusetts. They had telegraphed ahead and ordered a carriage sent to the station to take them to their home. Fransen was sent with the carriage to meet them.

The party left the station soon after the train arrived and had proceeded to the corner of Third Avenue. Here the horse on the right shied at some material piled on the side of the avenue, and which was to be used in repairing the roadbed. The animal broke the pole chain, and its mate also became scared.

The two beasts then ran down the avenue at a rapid rate, drawing the coach with them. The horses ran into the middle of the street and continued between the two tracks until Forty-first Street was reached. Here they turned to one side and missed running into a north-bound electric car.

At Fortieth Street the animals ran into an elevated road pillar. Fransen, who was still on his seat, was thrown to the pavement and received a severe scalp wound. The Lyon family were still inside the coach and Mrs. Lyon was thrown heavily to the floor of the vehicle and received several bruises about the body. Her husband and child escaped injury.

Fransen and Mrs. Lyon were carried into a near-by drug store, where their injuries were attended by Dr. Bryan of Bellevue Hospital. They refused to go to the hospital and were taken home.

On the way down the avenue Mrs. Lyon attempted to jump from the coach, but was prevented by her husband. Several citizens who saw the woman as she was about to jump called to her.

DR. BABCOCK RELEASED.

Discussion in the Baltimore Presbytery Over His Course.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 11.—There was a discussion in the Baltimore Presbytery to-day over severing the pastoral relations of the Rev. Dr. Maltbie D. Babcock, who has accepted a call to the "Brick Church," New York, from the Brown Memorial Church of this city. Some of the members of the Presbytery expressed the opinion that the call should have been brought before that body before it was finally accepted by Dr. Babcock. Instead, it was contended, the change had all been arranged, and the Presbytery was then simply asked to register the judgment of other parties. When Dr. Babcock produced the letter containing his call to New York, the Rev. F. E. Williams and others declared they should have officially known of it before.

Dr. Babcock said he believed his work would count for more in New York at the particular church to which he was going than it would in Baltimore, and it was a rule he had always followed to go where his work would count for the most.

The Rev. Dr. J. Addison Smith, in reply to Dr. Babcock, said that Dr. Babcock was making the mistake of his life. He thanked God, however, that Dr. Babcock had caught the crowd without preaching heresy on the one hand and turning the church into an opera house on the other. If Dr. Babcock had called his fellow-presbyters together before making his decision, as is provided in Presbyterian procedure, he would have put before him so strongly the reasons for not accepting the call that he would have remained.

It was then ordered that Dr. Babcock be given a letter of dismissal to the New York Presbytery without the technical requirements being followed.

MAZET REPORT IS DELAYED

Democrats Force a Change in the Majority Findings.

MINORITY CONCESSIONS ALSO

Mr. Odell Brings the Document Back to This City for Conference with Mr. Platt.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—The Democrats of the Assembly won a victory over their Republican opponents to-day when they forced the latter to keep back the majority report of the Mazet Investigating Committee, which was prepared by Messrs. Mazet and Fallows. It was the original intention to have the report presented to the Assembly this morning, but after the Republican leaders learned of the nature of the minority report, they changed their programme, and it looks to-night as if the report will not go in before the middle of next week. Chairman Odell of the Republican State Committee, who has been here for two days, went to New York to-night and took with him the majority Mazet report. It is said here that Senator Platt will be in New York on Saturday, and will have a talk with his lieutenants regarding the report. When the report comes back to Albany next week it is expected that its text will be greatly modified.

When the Tammany leaders in New York heard of the report, which had been drawn up by the Chairman of the Mazet committee, arraigning the administration of the New York City Government, and charging officials with extravagance and incompetency, as well as making a personal attack on Richard Croker, they immediately set to work to counteract this with a minority report. This report bitterly denounced Senator Platt and other Republicans of prominence, as well as assailing the Republican majority for the partisan features of the late investigation. The report made an emphatic denial of the charges made by the Republicans that corruption and vice were permitted to flourish in New York and called attention to the fact that Republicans were not summoned to appear before the committee as were the recognized organization leaders of the Democrats.

Civil Justice Benjamin Hoffman, who was an Assemblyman last year and a minority representative on the Mazet committee, brought this report here for transmission to the Assembly when the majority report was presented. The Tammany legislative leaders lost no time in informing their Republican friends of the character of the minority document. The Republicans were astounded, and some of the more conservative men recommended that the presentation of the minority report be deferred until the Legislature reconvenes next week. This course was adopted.

It is understood here that a meeting of the Mazet committee will be held in Albany early next week, and that Mr. Mazet will come up to attend it. It was learned this evening that Assemblyman Costello of Oswego had not signed the majority report. Mr. Costello will not talk about the matter, but his friends say that he is not at all satisfied with the report as drawn up, and further that he blames Mr. Mazet for permitting Frank Moss, counsel to the committee, to conduct the investigation according to his views, instead of the wishes of the party leaders and members of the committee.

A man who is in the counsels of the Republican organization said to-night that when the reports come back to Albany next week, all personal attacks on party leaders will have been eliminated. This statement was also made by a prominent Tammany Senator. The argument in favor of this plan used by the organization leaders on both sides is that while personal abuse might be used in campaign, it was not proper to make charges against men based upon testimony such as was heard by the Mazet committee, and have such things appear on the legislative records, thus becoming part of the history of the State.

The Democrats who are here to-night are in a jubilant frame of mind over the outcome of the matter, while more than one Republican has expressed himself as being pleased over the prospect of the Mazet committee soon becoming a thing of the past. The Republican leaders make no secret of the fact that they regret that such an investigation was ever held. They admit privately that whatever political advantage has resulted from the investigation has been to the gain of the Democrats.

MOONLIGHT MARRIAGES BARRED.

Greenwich Town Clerk Says He Will Issue No More Licenses at Night.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Jan. 11.—When Town Clerk James R. Mead assumed charge of the new offices fitted up for him in the Town Building to-day he made a rule which concerns New York people contemplating coming to Greenwich to be married. He and his assistant have had many an evening's pleasure spoiled recently by strangers coming into town at night and applying to them wherever they are for marriage licenses. Then the applicants would go to the house of some minister, get married if possible; if refused, would seek out a Justice of the Peace, and eventually depart from town happy.

The clergymen also have tired of these almost nightly interruptions, and now refuse to marry strangers unless arrangements are previously made and satisfactory answers received.

Mr. Mead said to-day:

"Hereafter these New Yorkers who want to get married in Greenwich by moonlight must procure their licenses during reasonable hours. I am tired of these midnight interruptions, and will accommodate no more New York divorcées. If more come I will ask them to wait till the morning, and refer them for the night to the hotel."

PHILIPPINE JUNKET PROPOSED.

Senators and Representatives Would Like to Make the Trip.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—About the last of January the Philippine Commission will submit their full report to the President. President Schurman was at the White House to-day to announce that progress was being made and that before February the work of the commission will be completed. The report made in September was a general one, in which all the Commissioners joined. In the full report, each Commissioner will deal with a separate subject. That of President Schurman is on government for the Philippines. He has considered the matter fully, and has discussed his report with the President. It is assumed that such practical points as he may offer will be brought to the attention of the appropriate committees of the Senate and the House.

As to the question of again sending a commission to the Philippines, it has been suggested in the Congress, by both Senators and Representatives, that a joint committee of members might be named for that purpose. It would be very popular, and also very expensive, but it is insisted that it would be a better way of preparing Congress for legislative action than the plan of making up a commission outside of Congress and expecting members of both houses to read their report after it had been made in order to become informed. It is maintained that a report from members who are well known would be more interesting and impressive.

BIG STEAMER WRECKED.

Believed to be Passenger Ship—Several Persons Washed Off Deck—Grounded on Reef Near St. John's.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Jan. 11.—A large steamer, believed to be a passenger ship, whose name cannot yet be ascertained, has been wrecked on a reef in St. Mary's Bay, about five miles from shore.

The vessel, which lies with her head low in the water, is on fire aft.

Several persons have been washed off the dock in the course of the day. Just before nightfall others were descried in the rigging. It is feared that these will perish before daybreak.

At this hour—9 P. M.—it is impossible to secure any further particulars, nor can any be obtained before morning.

Edenmoor May Try to Reach Halifax.

HALIFAX, Jan. 11.—The agent here of the Moore Line received telegraphic instructions to-night to keep a lookout for the disabled steamer Edenmoor, from Pensacola for Amsterdam, before reported passed at sea disabled, as it is expected she will try to reach Halifax.

ICEBOATS IN COLLISION.

Two Men Seriously Hurt and Two Women Bruised in an Accident at Red Bank.

RED BANK, N. J., Jan. 11.—Iceboats owned by Charles Foxwell and Robert Hance came into collision on the river this afternoon. Elwood Ivins and Dr. Frank Jones, who were in Mr. Foxwell's yacht, were seriously injured.

Dr. Jones is internally hurt, and Mr. Ivins's leg is terribly cut and his body is badly bruised. Miss Julia Hance and Mrs. Emile French, who were sailing in Mr. Hance's boat, were slightly bruised. Both boats were wrecked.

NARROW ESCAPE OF A STEAMER.

The Empress Goes Ashore on the Carolina Coast, but Floats Again.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 11.—During a heavy fog this morning the British steamship Empress stranded on Peeble Shoals, abreast the life-saving station at False Cape, on the Carolina coast. Wrecking tugs were speedily dispatched to her assistance.

Before the tugs could get to her the heavy seas that momentarily threatened to engulf or pound her to pieces were piled up on the beach by the gale, forming such a high tide that the Empress floated without assistance. She is not believed to be very seriously injured.

SANTA FE INCREASES WAGES.

Conductors and Brakemen Will Get $450,000 Per Annum More.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—The Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fé Railway company has signed a new contract with the trainmen in its employ, granting the conductors and brakeman what amounts practically to a 15 per cent. increase in wages.

The agreement was entered into to-day between General Superintendent Henry U. Mudge for the company and J. C. Ramsey, Chief of the Conductors, and W. R. Scott, Chief of the Brakemen, on the entire system. The increase will amount to about $450,000 annually.

COMPLIMENTED BY MR. M'KINLEY

Representative Fitzgerald Congratulated on His Expansion Speech.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Representative Fitzgerald of Massachusetts, who was among the callers upon the President this morning, is reported to have been cordially complimented by Mr. McKinley upon the speech he recently delivered to his Boston constituency on expansion, in which he sustained the attitude of the Administration about retaining control of the Philippines. The President complimented Mr. Fitzgerald not only upon the patriotic position he had taken, but the skill with which he had maintained it.

Mr. Fitzgerald says that New England wealth and position in this country arise largely from her manufacturing interests. Inasmuch as these interests are receiving severe competition from the growth of manufacturing in the South, it is necessary that there shall be new markets for the output of the New England mills. These markets, he says, cannot be had unless there is expansion and new places for selling the manufactured articles.

CHICAGO-BALTIC STEAMSHIPS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—Direct steamship communication between Chicago and the Baltic ports, employing vessels of fourteen feet draught and 160 feet length, may begin soon after the opening of navigation in April. Ole A. Thorp, Chairman for Illinois of the International Deep Waterway Association, has received numerous communications from foreign shippers indicating that they are about to engage in this traffic. Consular representatives of the Baltic countries have received similar letters and inquiries regarding the possibility of the traffic, and Chicago merchants, both importers and exporters, are taking a lively interest in it.

The wide advertising given Chicago Harbor by the opening of the drainage canal and the opening at almost the same time of the enlarged canals along the St. Lawrence River have made possible trade between this port and foreign countries in vessels of sufficient size to make the journey safely across the Atlantic and compete profitably with rail and steamship lines via New York for the carrying trade.

PLAGUE AT RIO JANEIRO.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The bubonic plague has made its appearance at Rio Janeiro, as shown by the following cablegram received here to-night by Surgeon General Wyman of the Marine Hospital Service:

Rio Janeiro, Jan. 11.

There has been one death from plague at Rio Janeiro. This diagnosis confirmed by bacteriological examination. Acting Assistant Surgeon Carson has arrived en route to Santos. HAVELBURG.
Acting Assistant Surgeon.

Some weeks ago cases of the plague were said to exist at Santos, Brazil, and it would not be surprising to the officials here if later developments show that the case at Rio Janeiro is traceable to Santos. It was from Santos that the ship Taylor, with a cargo of coffee, arrived at New York some time ago.

Prompt measures will be taken by the Marine Hospital Service to prevent the introduction of the disease into the ports of the United States by means of any vessels that may leave the Brazilian ports.

MARRIED IN SHORT ORDER.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, La., Jan. 11.—Rosedale, Miss., a little town near here, has been enjoying a round of marriages the past month, the participants in each one striving, seemingly, to outdo the others in peculiar features. Yesterday W. A. Stone, Chancery Clerk for Bolivar County, was married to Mrs. W. A. Martin.

At 10 o'clock in the forenoon Mr. Stone called up Mrs. Martin over the telephone and asked her if she would marry him in time to catch the 11 o'clock north-bound train over the Valley Road. A clear, ringing "yes" came back over the instrument, and the Rev. J. E. Cunningham tied the nuptial knot. So sudden was the affair that the immediate family hardly had time to be present. The couple left at 11 o'clock for Louisville and Chicago.

BRITISH REPLY RECEIVED

Secretary Hay's Contentions on Flour Seizures Conceded.

CONTRABAND OF WAR DEFINED

Claims for Compensation Can Be Adjusted Later On, but It Is Believed They Will Be Paid Promptly.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The following official statement was to-day given out by the State Department:

"A telegram has been received from Ambassador Choate, reporting an interview had by him with the Marquis of Salisbury on the afternoon of the 10th inst., in regard to the American shipments of flour and provisions on the detained British steamers Beatrice and Mashona and the Dutch steamer Maria. The British position as to foodstuffs and hostile destination is that they can only be considered contraband of war if supplied for the enemy's forces, if not being sufficient that they are capable of being so used, but it must be shown that this was their destination at the time of seizure.

"This qualification virtually concedes the American contention that the goods were not subject to seizure and practically disavows the seizure, if not being claimed there is any evidence of hostile destination."

Mr. Choate reports, in brief, as follows:

That the answer is highly satisfactory; that it is broad and liberal in terms. The position assumed by the British Government is that foodstuffs in transit to a hostile destination can be regarded as contraband of war only when they are supplies for the enemy's forces. It is not sufficient that they are capable of being used for the benefit of the enemy; it must be shown that they are so in fact, through their destination at the time of the seizure. The British Government does not claim that any of the American goods on the German bark Maria and the British bark Mashona were contraband of war.

The British Government is investigating the facts in connection with the goods seized on the third vessel, the Beatrice.

Mr. Choate's message embodied succinctly the authorities relied upon by the British Government to sustain its position

WILL ARREST MORRISON

Murder the Charge Against the Man Who Killed His Wife.

IGNORANT OF THE DECISION

Morrison Cowers in His Room, Eating Little and a Victim of Paralyzing Fear.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, Jan. 11.—Prof. Alfred Morrison, who shot and killed his wife on the night of Dec. 28 at their home, 230 South Tenth Avenue, during an attack of what he called somnambulism, will be arrested to-morrow on a charge of deliberate murder. The warrant will be applied for to-morrow morning before City Judge Adam Schatz by District Attorney George C. Andrews of Westchester County. The charge will be based on "information and belief," and the warrant will be issued. The prisoner will then be taken before County Judge Smith Lent, sitting in White Plains, and committed, without bail, to await the action of the Grand Jury, which will convene in White Plains on Feb. 1.

This programme was decided upon this afternoon by District Attorney Andrews after a consultation with Judge George C. Appell, Morrison's counsel, who agreed that in case of his client's arrest the latter would waive examination when arraigned in court. Judge Appell will not state his plans for the defense, but asserts with the utmost confidence that his client will never be convicted of murder.

Morrison, knowing nothing as yet of what is in store for him to-day, cowers in his room at No. 7 Rich Avenue with a policeman constantly on guard over him, half crazed from a deadly fear of arrest. The man scarcely eats at all, and sleeps only with the aid of narcotics. He spends his time now walking the floor like a caged animal puffing constantly at cigarettes. At night when he lies down upon his bed he is apparently tortured by nightmares. On more than one occasion since he has been under police surveillance he has, during one of these attacks, seen or pretenued to see in his dreams burglars such as he says he thought he fired at when he killed his wife. It is expected that there will be a painful scene at the house to-morrow when the hand of the law is at last laid upon his shoulder.

Two physicians visited Morrison to-day. One of these, Dr. W. S. Fleming, was called by Morrison's aunt, Mrs. Cahen. He maintains professional reticence regarding the man's condition. The other, Police Surgeon E. S. Newell, reported that Morrison is perfectly sane, and he is said to have added that allowing him to remain at large so long was an outrage.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S ACTION.

District Attorney Andrews, who has been forced to act in this case by the press and public opinion, has now gone into it to the exclusion of all his other business. He has already spent two days here taking the depositions of witnesses. He stated when he began the investigation that he would not put the county to the great expense of a murder trial unless it was found that there was a good chance of conviction. He has worked slowly and deliberately. So have the Mount Vernon police. That it has now been determined by these officials to bring a charge of murder against Morrison indicates, it is said here, that there was evidence at hand tending to show that an investigation was needed. Fully a score of witnesses have already been examined by the District Attorney. Only two or three of the least important of these appeared before Coroner Banning.

The District Attorney's investigation has been secret, of course. It is known, however, that damaging evidence against Morrison has been brought forward. A motive for murder in the case is alleged by the officials from the following facts: Morrison had two wives living. One of these, to whom he had been married eighteen years, was living in New York and knew that he was living here with the other woman to whom he had been married eleven years. Wife No. 1 was becoming restive and inclined to make trouble, as shown, the authorities say, by her refusal to accept a cheap Christmas present from her husband. At present it is not publicly known what messages and threats may have passed between the two. It is hinted by the police, however, that various negotiations were on foot between Morrison and his first wife, conducted by a mutual friend, a bookseller named Lang, living in New York.

SHOOTING OF WIFE NO. 2.

Then came the shooting of wife No. 2 by Morrison. To a half dozen persons, including the Coroner and two physicians, who arrived at the house within two hours after the shooting, Morrison said that he had been dreaming of burglars and, drawing his pistol from under his pillow, fired at an imaginary burglar standing at the door. Between the foot of Morrison's bed and the door slept the baby in a baby carriage. Mrs. Morrison, her husband said, who had been sleeping on a lounge at the foot of Morrison's bed, had arisen and was standing over the baby carriage when Morrison fired. She was thus in the line of fire, and received the bullet, which entered her shoulder and, passing through her arm, re-entered the body and passed diagonally downward, lodging in the abdominal cavity. The woman with her dying breath, corroborated this story of her husband, and principally on the strength of the woman's ante-mortem statement Coroner Banning exonerated the husband.

It has since been stated by Dr. I. W. Ferris, who was the first physician to arrive after the shooting, that it would have been an impossibility for the bullet to have taken the course it did through the woman's body had she been standing up and Morrison lying down when he fired, as both he and his wife declared was the case.

Mrs. Wells of 243 South Tenth Avenue, who was the first person in the room after the shooting, has told the District Attorney that the baby carriage, over which Mrs. Morrison was said to be standing, was about two feet to the right of the foot of Morrison's bed and was not in the line of his fire toward the door unless he had been sleeping with his head toward the foot of the bed.

Dr. Ferris, in a supplementary affidavit made before the District Attorney to-day, says that Morrison did on that night sleep with his head toward the foot of the bed. Dr. Ferris said that when he arrived at the house, Morrison told him that he had been sleeping in that position. The pillow on the bed, with the pistol near it further more bore out this assertion. Dr. Ferris's statement to this effect, it is said, is corroborated in two more depositions now in the hands of the District Attorney. No reason has been given by Morrison for reversing his position in bed on this particular night.

MRS. MORRISON'S REPLY.

Dr. Ferris further asserts that when he arrived at the Morrison house he examined Mrs. Morrison's arm and found that the bullet had passed through it. Not noticing at the time that the ball had re-entered the body, he remarked to the woman: "You have been shot through the arm." She replied: "Yes. It isn't very serious," and said nothing about being shot through the body. The utmost importance is attached to this incident by the police, as showing, they say, that Mrs. Morrison deliberately tried to shield her husband by a falsehood. If she was false in this, it is argued that her great love for the man might lead her to make an entirely false ante-mortem statement for his sake.

The District Attorney's theory based on the hypothesis that the shooting was premeditated is that Morrison by reversing his position in bed brought his pistol arm six feet nearer to his wife, and that he fired at her while she was bending low over the baby carriage in which was the baby. There being no blood stains on the couch where Mrs. Morrison slept shows conclusively that she was not shot while lying there.

The District Attorney is disgusted with the story that came from Middletown to the effect that Mrs. Ellenberger, a sister of Mrs. Morrison, has had a dream in which her dead sister appeared to her, and requested her not to prosecute Morrison because he was innocent.

"There has been too much nonsense about dreams in connection with this case," said Mr. Andrews. "Morrison is either guilty or innocent and all the dreams cannot affect the case one way or the other."

The final determination to arrest Morrison, as indicated, followed a long conference held at White Plains this forenoon between the District Attorney and Judge Appell, Morrison's counsel. The District Attorney immediately afterward came to this city and continued the work of examining witnesses.

LOSES FAITH IN HER DREAM.

Mrs. Ellenberger Will Testify Against Her Sister's Husband.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Jan. 11.—Mrs. Harry Ellenberger has determined that she will go to Mount Vernon to-morrow to testify against Prof. Alfred Morrison, who shot his wife, Mrs. Ellenberger's sister.

Mrs. Ellenberger had a dream the other night, she alleged in which Mrs. Morrison appeared to her and begged her not to prosecute her husband, and Mrs. Ellenberger thought she would not prosecute on this account. But she has changed her mind, as she is not quite satisfied, she says, with the idea the dream conveyed to her.

MR. GERRY ATTACKED.

Controller Says He Changed Residence to Escape Taxes and Is "Superior to the State."

Controller Coler is not pleased, he says, with the recent decision of the Court of Appeals, which holds that the Gerry Society and other charitable institutions do not come under the rules of the State Board of Charities. Commenting on the decision, Mr. Coler said yesterday:

"In the scheme of charity reform suggested by me to the Board of Estimate and adopted I recommended that no lump sums be given hereafter to institutions. This would have cut off from the Gerry Society the $30,000 which they get annually. My recommendations were applied to all organizations but this one; the $30,000 for the Gerry Society was included in the budget.

"I regard the decision of the Court of Appeals as unfortunate for the State of New York. It is astounding that a man, not a citizen of the State, who has changed his legal residence to another State to escape taxation, should receive such remarkable privileges. According to the decision Mr. Gerry is superior to the State, is absolutely irresponsible, and forms a distinct entity in himself. I think the law should be changed at once. My sympathies are with the State Board of Charities, and I hope they will win in the end."

A MALONE WILL CONTEST.

Dead Priest's Housekeeper to Fight for Bequests — May Have Mrs. Havemeyer's Aid.

Miss Winifred Brennan, who was the housekeeper for the late Father Malone for over a quarter of a century, and one of the beneficiaries in the will said to have been executed on Nov. 6 by the late pastor of the Church of Sts. Peter and Paul, Brooklyn, resigned her position yesterday. She stated emphatically that she would make a legal fight for the $1,000 left her according to the provisions of the will drawn up by Lawyer Fox on Nov. 6, and would spend that amount and more to secure her rights. Although Miss Brennan would not disclose the names of those who are to aid her in the fight against the Malone family, it is alleged that Mrs. Theodore A. Havemeyer, who has long known her, will care for her interests.

Dr. Silas Blaisdell, who was Father Malone's physician for a number of years and was dismissed at the time of Father Malone's last illness by the family, will sue the estate of Father Malone for professional services covering a period of over six years. The bill will amount to over $5,000, and this amount, if successful in his suit, Dr. Blaisdell stated yesterday, he would divide among charitable institutions.

The Rev. Joseph O'Brien, who had charge of the parish at the time of Father Malone's illness, is broken down in health, dusk it is said, to the recent trouble, in which he figured as the acting pastor of the church. Father O'Brien will leave for the South in a few days and will be absent for the Winter months.

CHANGE FOR KOSTER & BIAL'S.

Mr. Roberts to Add Burlesque, Extravaganza, and Pantomime.

When Nelson Roberts took the management of Koster & Bial's Music Hall it was his plan not to give entirely straight vaudeville performances, but to introduce burlesques, extravaganzas, and pantomime, and with these ideas in his mind he has gone ahead to perfect his arrangements to that end. In four or five weeks he hopes to be able to offer the patrons of the house an attraction which will be musical in character, but embracing burlesque, extravaganza, and pantomime.

Fully appreciating that an attraction of this kind will draw for eight or possibly ten weeks, a conclusion he reached after the many experiences of other managers with attractions of this kind, Mr. Roberts proposes to have material ready constantly for changing the performances when one runs its limit. Herman Perlet, who formerly was the musical conductor of the Herald Square Theatre, has been taken into conference with Mr. Roberts in his plans, and the probabilities are that he will be engaged to write the greater part of the music for the production.

A company will be secured which will be competent in every particular, and efforts will be made to engage Mme. Camille Darville, Thomas Seabrooke, and Marie Dressler to play the leading rôles. Definite plans for bringing out productions will be arranged Sunday.

MAURICE GRAU'S NEW TALENT.

Frau Olga Pevyn, Fritz Friedrichs, and Victor Ocellier Engaged.

The North German Lloyd liner which arrived yesterday brought to this country Frau Olga Pevny and Herr Fritz Friedrichs, two additional members to the German forces of the Maurice Grau Opera Company. Frau Pevny is a contralto who was heard last year during many of the German opera performances, while Herr Friedrichs is one of the new members of the company. He will probably make her début in the first performance of "Die Meistersinger," which is scheduled for the week after next.

Victor Ocellier, another baritone, was engaged by Mr. Grau yesterday. He came highly recommended, and a rehearsal was given on the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House before Signor Mancinelli, Signor Bevignani, and other musical authorities, and his voice and M. Ocellier's stage presence were so thoroughly satisfactory that he was immediately engaged. He came to this country early in the season with the French Opera Company, and sang in Montreal and in large Western cities. The company finally came to an end in Havana. He is familiar with many of the leading rôles in the French operas, including the baritone rôle in the new Massenet opera "Herodiade," which will probably be given for the first time early in February with Mme. Calvé in the leading rôle.

Victor Capoul who has been identified with the opera company for several years and who goes to Paris to become a director of grand opera in that city, sailed for Havre yesterday on the French liner La Champagne. He will serve as a director with Pierre Gailhard, filling the unexpired term of Director Emile Bertin, who died some time ago. The term will expire this Spring, but the Government has assured M. Capoul that the nominations for the next term of seven years will go to Gailhard and himself.

Performance Resumed at Casino.

After a thorough drying out of dressing rooms, stage, and costumes, Edward E. Rice gave his regular matinée and evening performance of "Little Red Riding Hood" at the Casino yesterday. Miss Kitty Mitchell and Clara Havel, in whose dressing room the explosion of the alcohol lamp which caused the fire occurred, appeared with the company, but with bandaged arms and wrists.

Dispute Over "The Gunner's Mate."

NEWARK, N. J., Jan. 11.—The application for a receiver for the partnership alleged to exist between Hugh J. Gallagher and William J. McKiernan, the co-authors, according to the former, of the melodrama, "The Gunner's Mate," was denied by Vice Chancellor Emery to-day. The vacation of the temporary injunction of a week ago enables McKiernan to collect any profits accruing since it was made.

Pleasure Palace Lease Renewed.

F. F. Proctor has renewed his lease on the Pleasure Palace, on Fifty-eighth Street, near Third Avenue, for a term of five years from Sept. 1, 1900. Randolph Guggenheimer is the lessor. The lease, which was filed for record yesterday, states the annual rental at $20,000.

THE HOTEL MEN'S DINNER

Celebrate Their Twenty-first Anniversary at Delmonico's.

Senator Grady Says New York's Best Citizens Are Derelict in Their Duty —Simeon Ford and Others Speak.

The Hotel Men's Association was old enough to vote yesterday, as Simeon Ford, President of that body, told several hundred diners at Delmonico's last evening who had met to celebrate their twenty-first anniversary as an organization. The dining room was filled with business and professional men, city and State officers, and politicians as guests of the association, and what with an orchestra and popular songs roared out in chorus, the hotel men of New York managed to have a pleasant evening themselves and give one to those who sat at their board.

Simeon Ford presided, and at the speakers' table were Senator Grady, Abraham Gruber, James Breslin, who was toastmaster; Horace Brockway, C. L. Jones, Postmaster Van Cott, the Rev. Dr. C. L. Twing, Charities Commissioner Keller, Tax Commissioner Feitner, and Justices Fitzgerald, McAdam, Gildersleeve, Bookstaver, Dugro, and O'Gorman. There were also present Maurice B. Holahan and nearly all the Judges of the different courts in the city.

Simeon Ford, who was the first speaker, said in part: "This is the twenty-first anniversary of our association. We are of age. We are old enough to vote. How we will vote I cannot say, but it looks now as if, irrespective of party, we will all have a chance in November to cast a vote for what we landlords dearly love—a 'Bill.'

"We have had a year of glorious prosperity. For five or six years we have been up against it, unsuccessfully drawing to bobtails, small pairs, and partially developed flushes; but at last the wave has struck us, and now we are on velvet, sitting behind a pile of blue chips, ready to see every raise and boost it back again.

"Some folks claim that 'Bill' McKinley is our mascot. Some say 'Dick' Croker, with his three attendant Johns—John, Demijohn, and John Keller—and the policy of the open door, is responsible. But all we know is that something has happened to change our luck. So we lay low, say nothing, and 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'

"Since our association was formed, twenty-one years ago, the hotel accommodations of New York have vastly increased. Every year two or three great structures are built, for which we all predict dire failure and disaster, but somehow they all seem to get along. The fact is the American servant girl is rapidly driving people out of their once happy nomes and into hotels.

"And now we are to have a woman's hotel! That will fill a long felt want. We all have a few lady boarders we would like to recommend—ladies with strong minds and weak appetites The kind that send for a waiter and order a pot of tea, a package of canary bird seed, and a hot flatiron and 'don't be all day about it, please.' What a pleasure it would be for a man who was ready and anxious to die to run such an Adamless Eden! With what harmony will the inmates mingle together! Just imagine the conversation which will ensue after the first lady with peroxide hair comes down to breakfast in a pink Mother Hubbard."

Senator Grady was received with cheers when he arose to speak. Senator Grady began with some playful digs at his friends the hotel keepers. Presently he got down to political references, and, bringing up a remark made by Mr. Ford, said he objected to having him talking of some mysterious candidate as "Bill."

"If he means by his reference any one of our late nominees I would have him understand that we call him William."

Senator Grady was talking of the Democratic Party, and his reference to Bryan seemed to please the crowd greatly. Later on the Senator made another reference to a statement of Mr. Ford that his representations had been sent out broadcast through the country before the Dewey celebration serving notice that New York was a dangerous city to come to. Mr. Grady became serious, and proclaimed that "we have had the last of Mazet committees," at which there was much laughter and clapping of hands.

Then the Senator went on to say that while the city would not justify an infraction of the law its people must insist that it have a government that is a convenience and not an annoyance. Above all, he said, New Yorkers should insist that this community boast of a law-abiding government, and that this should be made known abroad.

"And let us demand," he went on, "that this city shall never be named save in words of respect."

If a man should go to an officer of the Stock Exchange, he went on by way of illustration, and complain that it is other than straight, then the members would rush out and hand you." It was the same with the Bar Association should it find out that it had a bad member. The self-respect of the bar would show him quickly his shortcomings.

"But let the City of New York be attacked," said the Senator, "as one given over to crime, and not one of those big institutions of which the city boasts, whose lists of Vice President are long, will rise up in its defense, and that explains the lack of civic pride. Those of us who believe in the city first and its institutions afterward are depended upon to rise up and defend it."

Maurice B. Holahan, who had all along applauded the Senator's remarks vociferously, interrupted by exclaiming. "Civic pride: that's the thing." Then Mr. Holahan cheered again.

Abraham Gruber, C. L. Jones, and the Rev. Dr. Twing also spoke.

Fighting Tax on the Stevens Estate.

The Hoboken Commissioners of Appeals having refused to reduce the valuation of $500,000 on the Stevens estate at Castle Point, Col. E. A. Stevens has given notice that he will appeal the case to the State Board of Taxation. The property was divided into five plots at the death of Mrs. Martha B. Stevens, each heir taking one plot, with the house upon it. The heirs claim that these separate plots are worth about $30,000 each, making $150,000 for the entire property.

UNION LEAGUE CLUB FIGHT

Regular Ticket Headed by Henry E. Howland Defeated.

F. D. Tappen Elected President by a Vote of 184 to 154—Consented to Run Only Two Days Ago.

The annual election of the Union League Club, which was held at the clubhouse last night, resulted in the defeat of the "regular" ticket, headed by Henry E. Howland, and the choice of Frederick D. Tappen, President of the Gallatin National Bank, who had been placed in nomination as an independent, for President. The successful ticket received 184, and the unsuccessful ticket 154 votes.

At various times since the "regular" ticket was placed in nomination, on Dec. 31, there had been rumors that an opposition ticket would be placed in the field. These rumors, which connected the name of Mr. Tappen with the club Presidency, were denied as often as they were repeated, and Mr. Tappen himself declared that he was not a candidate.

It was learned last night that Mr. Tappen's name had been under consideration by the Nominating Committee, and that his friends were so greatly displeased with the selection of ex-Judge Howland that they determined to use every endeavor to place an opposition ticket in the field. Mr. Tappen, it was said, declined to permit the use of his name until within the last two days, and then the "regulars," who had heard of it, became alarmed and inserted this advertisement in yesterday's newspapers.

"Union League Club.—Election of officers this evening. It is thought to be very important that all friends of Judge Howland for President should be sure to attend and vote the regular ticket. Polls open at 6:30 o'clock and close early."

Both factions in the club denounced the action of the person who inserted the advertisement. Judge Howland was ignorant as to who his friend was who had taken such a course. Some of Judge Howland's friends said if it had not been such a stormy night, his vote would have been much larger.

The two tickets were identical, with the exception that on the regular ballot Mr. Howland appeared as candidate for President and Mr. Tappen for one of the Vice Presidents, while on the independent ticket Mr. Tappen was named for President and Orson D. Munn for Vice President.

The officers chosen were:

President—Frederick D. Tappen; Vice Presidents, Class of 1902—Orson D. Munn, Cornellus B. Mitchell, Charles A. Peabody, Jr., and James W. McLane; Secretary—George S. Terry; Treasurer—William G. White.

Executive Committee, Class of 1902—William H. Hollister, Harrison E. Gawtry, Henry F. Shoemaker, Joseph C. Willetts, and Albert H. Brown.

Committee on Admissions—Class of 1902.—Henry C. Ward, Frank H. Carpenter, Edward D. Fisher, Jefferson Clark, and Augustus Kirkham.

Committee on Library and Publications—Class of 1902.—Marshall H. Clyde, Joseph Henry Harper, and Jonas M. Libbey.

Committee on Art.—Thomas B. Clarke, Alfred E. M. Purdy, Joseph S. Stout, Henry R. McLane, Howard C. Smith, Davis Barnes, and E. Clifford Potter.

Committee on Political Reform—Cephas Brainerd, Charles T. Harbeck, James A. Blanchard, E. B. Hinsdale, Thomas L. James, Edward Mitchell, William M. V. Hoffman, Samuel Thomas, John S. Wise, Edward F. Brown, Justus A. B. Cowles, David Willcox, and John C. O'Conor.

Auditors—Walter A. Pease, Andrews Mills, and William T. Cornell.

Elihu Root presided at the annual meeting and delivered an address on retiring from the Presidency of the club. It was stated that this address with other addresses made at the meeting would be published in the annual proceedings of the club.

FARMER FEARS DOG'S BITE.

Pet Attacks Its Master, Then Wanders Off, Biting Other Dogs.

Special to The New York Times.

FLEMINGTON, N. J., Jan. 11.—John E. Lance, a farmer living near High Bridge, has gone to the Pasteur Institute in New York for treatment. While engaged about the house a few days ago, his dog suddenly sprang at him and bit him in the hand. Lance had a glove on the hand, but the dog's teeth sank deep into the flesh, inflicting a serious wound. The dog had always been a pet about the house. It was chained at once and a close watch was kept over it. The dog remained quiet, and later was released, when it left immediately in the direction of Glen Gardner and Change-water.

The citizens of Glen Gardeu saw the dog pass through the town, and several persons were close to the animal, but it made no effort to bite any one. Several valuable dogs were bitten between High Bridge and Changewater, however. At the latter place the dog was dispatched by Andrew Cestner. Several dogs were also bitten in Irishtown. All the dogs known to have been bitten have been killed.

Frederick A. Schroeder's Will.

The will of ex-Mayor Frederick A. Schroeder of Brooklyn was admitted to probate yesterday. The document was found in the pocket of his house coat and bore a number of penciled interlineations which might have formed a ground for a contest had there been any desire to make one. Frank D Arquimbau testified that when the will was executed in presence of witnesses the interlineations were not upon it. The document was admitted without them.

Despondent Youth Takes His Life.

After brooding for two years over a deformity of the mouth which impeded his speech, Paul Duncan, nineteen years old, committed suicide last night by taking carbolic acid in his room at 26 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street. Duncan lived with his parents and worked in a wholesale dry goods store in Franklin Street.

VICE ON THE EAST SIDE.

What Is Sought to be Brought About by a Body of Citizens.

A conference was held at Police Headquarters yesterday afternoon between several of the persons who have become interested in the movement to eradicate the evidences of vice from this city as far as possible, and Chief Devery and Police Commissioners York, Abell, and Hess; Deputy Chie fCortright, and Inspector Cross. The session lasted an hour and a half. Those consulting with the police were Prof. Felix Adler, Josephine Shaw Lowell, the Rev. Father Alexander P. Doyle of the Paulist Fathers, Jacob H. Schiff, and the Rev. Mr. Paddock, Vicar of the Pro-Cathedral in Stanton Street. The entire party were reticent on the subject of their conversation when seen afterward. This was due to the fact that the citizens concerned are anxious to avoid newspaper or other notoriety as far as possible.

Mr. Paddock, when seen att he Pro-Cathedral later, said that there was no organization of the citizens, that no radical step had been taken at the conference, and that no definite action had been determined upon. He said there would be no crusade or hiring of private detectives to secure evidence, so far as he knew, nor had any mass meeting been arranged for.

"Personally," said he, "I don't think it would be well to arrange for any mass-meetings now. Everybody interested in the movement is anxious to have things done in the quietest way. All that has taken place so far has been a little friendly conversation with the police, in which we showed them that we knew what was going on. Things on the east side are in a bad condition. They could not well be worse. Our idea is now to bring pressure to bear on the police by each one using what influence he or she possesses, and if things are not bettered, then something else may be done. We believe that the great majority of voters in this town are anxious to have it clean, and for the sake of their children are anxious not to have vice flaunted in public. The movement has done some good already. It has bettered the city in spots. The police have uniformly received us graciously and in the best spirit."

GEN. DABNEY H. MAURY DEAD.

His Service in the United States and Confederate Armies.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 11.—News has been received here of the death in Peoria, Ill., of Gen. Dabney H. Maury, late of the Confederate army, and at one time Minister to Colombia. The remains will be brought to Fredericksburg, Va., for interment.

Dabney Herndon Maury was born in Fredericksburg, Va., May 21, 1822. He was graduated from the University of Virginia with the class of 1841, and from the United States Military Academy in 1846. He served in the Mexican War, and was brevetted First Lieutenant for bravery at the battle of Cerro Gordo, where he was severely wounded. For his services there he was presented also with a sword by the citizens of Fredericksburg and the Legislature of Virginia.

From 1847 to 1852 he served as an instructor at West Point. At the outbreak of the civil war he was acting as Assistant Adjutant General in New Mexico. He resigned to enter the Confederate service, receiving first an appointment as Adjutant General. He acted as chief of staff under Gen. Earl Van Dorn, and after the battle of Pea Ridge was promoted to the rank of Brigadier General. At Corinth he led a division, being made there a Major General. He served in the operations around Vicksburg, and participated in the defense of Mobile, commanding the Department of the Gulf.

At the close of the war Gen. Maury returned to Virginia, where in 1868 he organized the Southern Historical Society. He originated the movement for the reorganization of the National Militia in 1878. In 1886 he was appointed United States Minister to Columbia. Gen. Maury was the author of a treatise on "Skirmish Drill for Mounted Troops."

CHURCH WORK IN CUBA.

Bishop Whitaker to Leave on a Tour of Investigation.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 11.—Bishop O. W. Whitaker of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Pennsylvania will leave to-morrow for Cuba to inquire into the progress of the Protestant Episcopal Church there. He will be accompanied by the Rev. Dr. Powers, General Church Missionary. Bishop Whitaker will go direct to Havana, and relieve the Rev. W. H. McGee, who has charge of the Protestant Episcopal work in that province. Mr. McGee has just recovered from an attack of yellow fever, and will return to this country to recuperate.

In speaking of his tour of the island, Bishop Whitaker said to-night: "I shall appoint a successor to Mr. McGee and then I shall proceed to Matanzas where good results have rewarded the labors of the Rev. Pedro Duarte and his assistants. For a time they had to give up work owing to the Spanish interference, but the mission is now in excellent working condition."

Kills Himself with Morphine.

A man supposed to be Edward F. Sargent, a trained nurse and druggist of Plymouth, Mass., committed suicide by taking morphine yesterday in his room at the Eastern Hotel, at the foot of Whitehall Street. He was arraigned in the Yorkville Police Court on Monday last, accused by his alleged wife with deserting her about five weeks ago, soon after they were married. His body was taken to the Morgue.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST.—Rain, northeasterly gales, shifting to northwesterly.

The storm, central Wednesday night in the West Gulf, has moved with great velocity, 53 miles an hour, to Western Pennsylvania and has caused snow in the lake regions and rain elsewhere from the Middle and Lower Mississippi Valley to the Middle and South Atlantic Coast. Rain has also fallen in the North Pacific States and northern plateau. The storm has also caused easterly gales on the Middle Atlantic and Southern New England Coast. Block Island reporting 48 miles an hour. The temperature conditions are moderate over the whole country, with a slight rise in the upper lake region and on the Middle Atlantic Coast. Snow may be expected in Northern New England; rain, followed by fair weather this afternoon or tonight in the southern portions; increasing cloudiness and light snow in extreme northern North Dakota. It will be generally fair elsewhere, preceded by snow flurries in the lower lake region, and by light rain on the Middle Atlantic Coast. The temperature will remain moderate over the whole country, but will fall slightly in the Middle Gulf States and on the Middle Atlantic Coast. Easterly gales will prevail on the North Atlantic Coast, high southerly, shifting to northwesterly winds on the Middle Atlantic and brisk southwesterly, shifting to northwesterly winds on the South Atlantic Coast. Storm signals are displayed on the Atlantic Coast from Delaware Breakwater to Eastport.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES's thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

IS LORD METHUEN INSANE?

Reported that the British General Is a Mental Wreck.

HIS FRIENDS DENY THE STORY

They Assert that He Is Only Suffering from Great Nervous Strain —Rumor of His Recall.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—A special cable to The Chicago Tribune from London says:

"Lieut. Gen. Lord Methuen, commanding the column advancing to the relief of Kimberley, is to be relieved of his command within two weeks. Later he will be sent to Cape Town, and eventually ordered home. When he reaches England he will be retired. These facts have been confirmed by an official of the War Office."

Lord Methuen's case is a sad one. Always a man of rather frail physique—although a clever boxer and an all-around sportsman—his constitution began to show signs of breaking down almost immediately after he took command of his division. Three days after the battle of Belmont Gen. Wolseley suggested to the War Office that Methuen be relieved. His advice was not needed. The wisdom of the aged but keen Commander in Chief of the British Army is now realized to the fullest extent by the War Office, who scoffed at his suggestion.

Friends of Lord Methuen insist he is only in broken health; that the strain of many campaigns has shattered his naturally nervous system. Those who know the circumstances and the situation on the Modder River equally well, and who are willing to state facts plainly, say that Methuen's mind is unbalanced. Constant proof of this has been coming to the notice of the officials of the War Office for two weeks past. The commander of the Modder River forces has bombarded the Government with some of the most remarkable messages ever received from a General in action. One, received a few days ago, is a fair sample of the rest.

It contained just three words: "Darkness after dawn!"

It is stated by those acquainted with the inner workings and plan of campaign adopted by the War Office that Lord Kitchener, the hero of Omdurman, who with Lord Roberts arrived at Cape Town to-day, will proceed immediately to Modder River. He may not take active field command of the troops, but will put the column in working order again and then assign some one else, probably Gen. Colville, to take Methuen's place.

Lord Methuen, in addition to his other eccentricities, has quarreled with a number of officers under him. Three of them, Col. Arthur Paget, Col. Gough, and Capt. Campbell, he ordered home. They arrived in London to-day. Col. Gough is seeking a vindication by court-martial. When Gough attempted to discuss the plan of the Magersfontein attack Methuen ordered him under arrest. The London press is considerately suppressing the true state of affairs so far as Methuen's ailment in concerned, but the papers do not hesitate to print the hard facts about the battle of Magersfontein, which are just reaching London through the mails, all of which go to show, in the language of an officer, that "the attack was that of a madman."

The death of Lord Wauchope, Commander of the Black Watch, was one of the many sad results of that engagement. Lord Wauchope, it is now well known, realized the futility of the assault as planned by Methuen. He argued strongly and expostulated bitterly against it. Methuen, however, persisted, and the two quarreled over the matter the night before the battle which proved so disastrous to the British forces. A member of the Black Watch in a letter just received gives the details of the charge which led Wauchope to his death. He quotes the General's dying words—words showing how fully he realized the situation even in the hour of his death.

The letter reads:

"It was one of the darkest nights we ever saw. The rain fell in torrents and we went on and forward, falling, stumbling, and slipping over rocks and ant hills. It was impossible to see where we were going. After we had been taken by surprise, our right half battalion charged, but the men were mown down like grain before a reaper. Gen. Wauchope was shot at the beginning of the charge. When he saw the mistake that had happened, he shouted:

"'Rally round me, Black Watch. It's not my fault.'

"Then he fell, literally riddled with bullets."

Letters from men serving in the Modder River column tell of the demoralization of the troops since the commander's incapacitation.

A Highland Brigade man says:

"There is not the slightest doubt that Methuen has lost the confidence of every man in the Highland Brigade. I am not going too far in saying that they are afraid to trust their lives with him."

Corp. Bevan, in describing the fateful battle, says:

"When the enemy opened fire, Lord Wauchope, our brave General, who was killed, turned to us and said: 'Don't blame me, lads.' We hear he remonstrated with Methuen before we left camp about the plans for the battle, but Methuen only told him to obey orders."

"Wauchope, no doubt, went out to find death," writes Sergt. Grey, "when such a disastrous fire opened.

"He had previously shouted to the Argyll Highlanders:

"'Don't blame me for this. I received my orders and had to obey them.' With proper handling we could have cleared the Boers out in two hours. As it was, we were taken into a butcher's shop and left there."

Dozens of other letters are printed, all of the same tone.

So far as known there is no insanity in Methuen's family back of the present generation, but it is generally understood all three of his sisters have been backward from childhood.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The War Office declines to confirm the report that Lord Methuen has been recalled to England, but inquiries made by a correspondent at Methuen's home, in Wiltshire, have elicited the information that, when he received his wound, his horse threw him heavily and spinal and other injuries supervened.

ROBERTS'S PLAN OF CAMPAIGN.

Great Central Advance on Bloemfontein Expected, but It Will Be Delayed.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—Stories are rife that inaction is enforced on Gen. Buller owing to the exhaustion of the reserves of ammunition, and there are even wild rumors of a shell famine at home. But not much importance need be attached to these rumors. It is almost universally assumed that with the landing of Gens. Roberts and Kitchener a prompt return will be made to the original plan of campaign, a great central advance on Bloemfontein.

But the most impatient of the enthusiasts admit that Gen. Roberts will be unable to move before the end of the month.

Critics conclude that not much is to be expected of the British hosts in South Africa until Lord Roberts shall have had plenty of time to think and fresh levies shall have arrived.

Time is working now for the Boers. Each day makes more difficult the three beleaguered positions.

The Cape Town correspondent of The Daily Mail, telegraphing Monday, says:

"The vanguard of the Sixth Division is waiting at Table Bay until the arrival of Lord Roberts."

WHITE'S LOSS PLACED AT 848.

That of the Boers in the Ladysmith Attack Estimated at 2,000 to 3,000.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The Daily Mail says:

"We learn that in the attack on Ladysmith last Saturday, Jan. 6, the British losses were 14 officers killed, 34 wounded, and 800 non-commissioned officers and men killed or wounded.

"The Boer losses, we hear, are estimated at between 2,000 and 3,000."

Nothing, however, has been given out by the War Office regarding the losses in the engagement. The War Office asserts that it has nothing to give out.

The Standard has the following dispatch, dated Monday, from Frere Camp:

"Our patrols have searched both flanks of the Boer position. They found a large camp five miles east of Colenso, evidently in anticipation of a British attempt at a turning movement."

A dispatch to The Daily Mail from Petermaritzburg, ated Jan. 8, says:

"Private advices from Ladysmith, dated Jan. 2, say that rations of bread and meat are plentiful, and the garrison had not then touched the 'bully' beef and biscuit supplies. Luxuries are scarce in Ladysmith, but the hospitals are well supplied with milk, and the horses are in good condition."

ANOTHER BATTLE IS RUMORED.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—There was a rumor current in the clubs to-day, that a battle was progressing at the Tugela River, but nothing could be obtained in corroboration of the report.

THE CENSOR IRRITATES LONDON.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—Even the announcement of the arrival of Field Marshal Lord Roberts and Gen. Lord Kitchener at Cape Town has failed to stem the growing impatience of the country at the prolonged inactivity in the main British camps, and the absence of news giving an adequate insight into the local situation, the public and the press being unable to form any just judgment as to the actual position of affairs.

The newspapers were reconciled during the early days of the war to cable censorship, taking it for granted that full narratives sent by mail would supply all deficiencies. For some weeks, however, even the mail correspondence that has arrived in London has shown signs of habitual scissoring by the censor. Pages are renumbered without chronological or logical connection, leaving the happenings described quite unintelligible in many cases.

The editors, acting possibly in concert, are laying these facts before the public and insisting that they be permitted to know and to print the facts. The Daily Mail formally accuses the War Office of "doctoring" in editing official dispatches before their issuance, and cites particulars.

The Daily Chronicle avers that there seems to be an official conspiracy against letting the truth be known.

Liner Umbria Sails for the Cape.

SOUTHAMPTON, England, Jan. 11.—The Cunard Line steamer Umbria, which has been chartered as a transport by the British Government, sailed from Southampton this afternoon with 2,200 soldiers bound for South Africa.

BRITISH WILL USE DUM-DUMS?

LONDON, Jan. 12.—Lee-Metford cartridges are running short in the British magazines, and, according to a semi-official report, the War Office purposes to fall back temporarily upon 100,000,000 "Mark IV." expanding bullets, most of which are already in storage in South Africa.

After the public announcement that no such bullet would be used in this war, its employment, The Daily Chronicle thinks, would be a serious breach of faith, especially as the British commanders have complained that the Boers occasionally use such projectiles.

The War Office, however, has issued a strict order to the volunteers that the fifty rounds of "Mark IV." given them must be used in practice at home, none being taken to South Africa.

CANADIAN CHURCHMEN LOYAL.

Article in La Semaine Religieuse Repudiated by Archbishop.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Jan. 11.—The article which appeared in La Semaine Religieuse of Quebec last Saturday, telling the French Canadians the hour of their redemption was at hand, and predicting the humiliation of Great Britain and the United States, which was telegraphed to THE NEW YORK TIMES at the time, has been repudiated, so far as the sentiment of the Church of Montreal is concerned, by Archbishop Bruchesi of this city.

The repudiation was made through the Rev. Father Elias H. Younan of New York, who is conducting a series of services at St. Patrick's Church here. Preliminary to a sermon Father Younan devoted some time to answering written questions on doctrinal matters. Among the inquiries was a letter inclosing a copy of the article in La Semaine Religieuse, and commenting thereon in rather strong terms. Replying to this communication Father Younan expressed the pain caused to himself upon reading the article. The sentiments, he said, were those of an individual, and, therefore, no responsibility should be thrown upon the Archbishop of Quebec, nor the Catholic Church. In due time, it was added, his Grace would no doubt make it clearly understood that the newspaper was not his organ, and did not reflect his sentiments toward the Crown.

"His Grace," continued the speaker, "repudicates the statements, and authorizes me to express openly his unswerving loyalty to the Queen, with all his clergy and every Catholic in his archdiocese."

The editor of La Semaine Religieuse states: "The article which has so much grieved our English fellow-citizens is not from the editor's pen. It is the reproduction of a portion of a long essay, the publication of which began some time ago, and which treats in extenso of the Manitoba school question, both from a political and philosophical standpoint. The essay in question was reproduced in La Semaine Religieuse without any intention of offending British feeling."

Supposed Suicide of a Physician.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 11.—Dr. J. C. Mullhall, an eye and ear specialist, was found dead today in his office. He had been shot through the heart. A revolver was found lying beside the body, and this, with the fact that all the doors of the office were locked, seemed to indicate suicide. It is supposed that the act was caused by despondency on account of ill-health. Dr. Mullhall, who was forty-nine years of age, leaves a widow and three children. He was a member of the Climatological Association and the author of a number of books and pamphlets, which won him a high reputation in medical circles.

Twelve Oil Tank Cars Burned.

BETHLEHEM, Penn., Jan. 11.—A dozen big oil tank cars at the United States Oil Company's loading station at Freemansburg, three miles from here, were destroyed by fire to-day, together with oil racks, &c. The cars were all 6,600 gallon capacity, and had just been loaded. The Jersey Central Company's loss is $40,000 and the oil company's $10,000. A stiff northeast wind swept the flames away from the town.

DOG BURIED IN FAMILY PLOT.

Other Cemetery Lot Owners Aroused Over New Jersey Doctor's Action.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., Jan. 11.—Dr. Charles Burnett, a leading physician of South River, has buried his pet St. Bernard dog, which died a few days ago, in a grave in the family plot in Monumental Cemetery, South River.

This action has aroused considerable indignation among the other lot owners in the cemetery, and an effort will be made to cause the dog to be removed. Dr. Burnett claims the lot belongs to him, and he can do as he likes.

BOY MURDERER FOUND GUILTY.

Kornstett Convicted in Kansas of Killing a Ten-Year-Old Girl.

ANTHONY, Kan., Jan. 11.—Guilty of murder in the first degree was the verdict rendered to-day in the case of John Kornstett, a sixteen-year-old boy who has been on trial here for the murder of his cousin, Nora Kornstett, a ten-year-old girl.

In June last the child went to a field where Kornstett was plowing, and was not seen again until two days later, when she was found in an abandoned well. She was taken out unconscious and died within a few hours. When arrested the youth admitted having thrown the child into the well after having brutally attacked her.

LAMBERTON FAMILY TROUBLES.

Sugar Broker's Wife Wants Alimony—Husband Also Seeking Divorce.

Lucy Lamberton, the wife of Edward S. Lamberton, a sugar broker, yesterday made application to Justice Fitzgerald in the Supreme Court for counsel fees and alimony pending trial of an action against her husband for a limited divorce on the grounds of cruel treatment. Mr. Lamberton's counsel told the Court that his client had an action for divorce against the plaintiff on the ground of abandonment pending in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn. Justice Fitzgerald reserved decision.

Mrs. Lamberton was prior to her marriage a school teacher at Kansas City, Kan., where she met Lamberton in 1897. The two were married on July 27 last. Mrs. Lamberton asserts that she had been treated with contempt by her husband almost from the start, and that he had failed to provide even street car fare for her. They separated on Nov. 15.

OMAHA OFFICIALS ARRESTED.

Members of Board of Education Charged with Taking Bribes.

OMAHA, Neb., Jan. 11.—Four members of the Board of Education were arrested today on warrants charging three of them with accepting bribes and one with demanding a bribe. They are A. M. Cowie, G. G. Irey, George H. Hess, and Frank A. Sears. The case grows out of the letting of a contract for Venetian blinds for several large new school buildings erected last year.

The evidence on which the charge was made was furnished by Charles Chiniquy, the representative of the Bostwick & Burgess Company of Ohio. He made an affidavit admitting paying to all of the accused except Cowie certain sums for their influence, and turned over to the authorities the checks with which the sums were paid, showing the indorsements of the accused. Cowie, Chiniquy alleges, demanded money, but wanted more than he was willing to pay.

A committee of the board is also investigating charges of bribery connected with other contracts.

MOUNT VERNON SAVES WATER.

Will Shut It Off from Those Who Use It for Power Purposes.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Jan. 11.—The water company has notified the users of water motors and of water for purposes for which steam or electricity can be substituted that on and after Monday next the water will be cut off from them until such time as the supply available is larger.

The local water company takes its water from the Hutchinson River. This is the source of the New Rochelle Water Company's supply. This city now uses about 3,000,000 gallons a day. Owing to the long-continued drought, the local company has been pumping but half of its contract supply and has been buying the remainder from the New Rochelle Water Company.

Adrian Iselin, who owns the New Rochelle Company, has notified the local company that from the 15th of this month he will be obliged to cut off the million and a half gallons a day he has been supplying it. He finds that the supply which is available for him is getting down close to the needs of New Rochelle.

The water company will at once dispose of bonds to enable it to put down a line of pipes to Mamaroneck, where it controls an ample supply of water, which, owing to lack of a pipe line, is not now available. If the bonds can be readily disposed of, and it is thought they can, work will be pushed night and day.

Preservation of the Palisades.

The Society for the Preservation of Historic Places and Objects met yesterday in the office of Andrew H. Green, President of the society, 214 Broadway. Secretary Hall announced that arrangements had been made for members of the committee to go to Trenton and work in conjunction with the New Jersey Commission in favor of a bill that will be introduced into the New Jersey Legislature for the preservation of the Palisades. Mr. Hall said that Gov. Roosevelt had announced his intention to go with the committee. Gov. Voorhees of New Jersey had also promised his hearty support to get the bill passed.

Called to a Perth Amboy Church.

PERTH AMBOY, N. J., Jan. 11.—A call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church of Perth Amboy was last night extended to the Rev. Dr. H. G. Mendelhall of Kansas City, Kan. The church has been without a pastor for three years. The pastorate was offered to Dr. Mendelhall ten years ago, but he declined because of ill-health.

New Electric Street Line.

After several months' work the new electric street line between One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and One Hundred and Sixty-second Street has been completed and opened for travel. The first car over the new road was operated Wednesday night at 11 o'clock. To-morrow a full complement of cars will be run on the line.

Edward R. Snow's Sentence Commuted

BOSTON, Jan. 11.—By a unanimous vote the Executive Council to-day commuted the sentence of Edward Ray Snow, the nineteen-year-old Yarmouth murderer, from death by electricity to life imprisonment. Snow recently pleaded guilty to a charge of murdering James T. Whittemore last September.

Cranford to Get the Organ Factory.

CRANFORD, N. J., Jan. 11.—The struggle between Cranford and Westfield for the location of the Votey Organ Factory has been settled. The Cranford people have secured a contract with the organ people to locate in their section.

MR. ROOT ON EXPANSION

Tells Hamilton College Alumni Great Opportunities Are Opening.

Glad to be with Those Who Help "to Do Things in the Philippines."

About 100 members of the New York City Association of the Alumni of Hamilton College met at the Savoy Hotel last night to hold their annual banquet and election, and incidentally to celebrate the birthday of Alexander Hamilton. The guest of honor was Secretary of War Elihu Root, who is himself an Alumnus. He delayed the dinner for two hours, for he was received with a veritable ovation, and had to hold an impromptu reception in the parlors, during which his friends, who crowded around him eager to shake his hand, pressed him to make a speech at the dinner.

"I cannot do it, really," he protested. "I must get back to Washington on the midnight train. I am awfully sorry, but I can only stay a short time. I must be present at the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Union League Club."

John N. Beach, President of the Alumni Association, presided at the banquet, and at the table of honor, in additon to Secretary Root, were President M. Woolsey Stryker of Hamilton College, the Rev. Dr. Donald Sage Mackay, Edward L. Stevens, the Rev. Dr. John A. Munn, John A. Taylor, Charles A. Hawley, Theodore Pomeroy, the Rev. Dr. Anthony H. Evans, George M. Diven, and Charles A. Gardiner. Some of the other persons present were Chester S. Lord, Gen. George Moore Smith, ex-Judge Warren Higley, C. S. Truax, George S. Hastings, Dr. William F. Northrup, Dr. Selden H. Talcott, Dwight Holbrook, Schuyler C. Brandt, the Rev. Dr. Anson F. Atterbury, Beecher Tolles, Hamilton B. Tompkins, and John K. Martin.

The dinner was interrupted in the middle by the Chairman, who explained that Secretary Root had to leave, but would address a few words to the Assembly before he took his departure. There was great applause as Mr. Root rose to speak. After acknowledging the greeting, he said:

"I am very happy to have passed out of the ranks of the speechmakers and gone into the business of helping people to do things—do things in the Philippines. Therefore, you cannot expect a speech from me. I have, however, delayed my departure to keep other engagements, for I want to show my loyalty and devotion to our common mother. I wish to say to my old college friends that I hope they are all enjoying or will enjoy the pleasure that I have in hearing news of old Hamilton from my own boy when he comes home for his vacations. I am sorry some people are so foolish as to commit their boys to the tender mercies of Yale and Harvard and deny them the advantage of training in such a college as Hamilton. Great opportunities are opening before the country, and great achievements in the work of American colonization are being made possible for our college men. The future of the college never before held out such noble possibilities. Long live and long flourish in its benevolence and simplicity our beloved Alma Mater."

Secretary Root was cheered enthusiastically, and as he passed along the room many hands were outstretched to grasp his, and the assembly thrice gave the college yell in his honor.

Mr. Beach, at the conclusion of the repast, opened the speechmaking by alluding to the prosperity of the college and paid a compliment to the President, whose efforts had resulted in placing the institution on its present footing.

President Stryker delivered a eulogy of Alexander Hamilton. "When I think," said he, "that that shabby memorial to Hamilton in Trinity Churchyard is the best tribute the Empire State considers his achievements for his country call for, I am consoled by the reflection that his fame is upheld in majesty and grandeur in that Pantheon whose dome is the eternal blue of God's sky."

He spoke in praise of Secretary Root, and adverting to college affairs urged the alumni to co-operate in the work of raising funds for a dormitory and other additions necessitated by the institution's growth.

Other speakers were John A. Taylor, the Rev. Donald Sage MacKaye, Edward L. Stevens, Theodore Pomeroy, and C. R. Hawley.

The following ticket was unanimously elected: President—John Henry Hewson, class of '53; Vice Presidents—George Seymour Hastings, '57; Henry Harper Benedict, '69; Charles Alexander Gardiner, '80, and Chester S. Lord, '72; Corresponding Secretary—Dr. A. Norton Brockway, '55; Recording Secretary—Dr. J. Conger Bryan, '84; Treasurer—James Sanford Greves, '61.

SUIT AGAINST V. P. TRAVERS.

Former Head of the Cordage Trust, Who Is Charged with Conspiracy, Is Not Worried.

The Standard Rope and Twine Company, through its counsel, Lindabury, Depue & Faulks of Newark, has filed a suit in the Chancery Court at Trenton, N. J., charging Vincent P. Travers of New York, formerly President of the corporation, with conspiring against the company. The Standard Rope and Twine Company is the Cordage Trust, the successor of the United States Cordage Company, which succeeded the National Cordage Company. Charles Efros of Bayonne, N. J., is made a co-defendant.

According to the complaint Mr. Travers, who received a salary of $15,000, agreed to transfer to the company a secret process for coating and treating binding twine and that the company was to have the exclusive use of it, except that Travers Brothers of New York reserved the right to use it. The company purchased expensive machinery and then Mr. Travers advised that only one mill be fitted with it. The Bayonne plant was selected.

Then Mr. Travers and Mr. Efros organized the Charles Efros Company, of which they were the sole owners, and it is charged that Mr. Travers, while pretending to act for the Standard Rope and Twine Company, expended many thousands of dollars for the sole benefit of Efros and Travers. The latter, it is also charged, sold large quantities of manufactured goods to Travers Brothers at cost price to the great loss of the plaintiffs and without their knowledge. An accounting is prayed for to determine the amount which, the Standard Company claims, Travers & Efros have wrongfully obtained, and also an order commanding Mr. Travers to turn over the secret formula as was agreed upon at the outset.

"The charges of fraud are all buncombe," said Mr. Travers last night. "I have an unsettled account with the Standard Rope and Twine Company, amounting to about $200,000. It is mainly for royalties. I was President of the company for four years, being re-elected each year, and all the Directors knew just what was going on.

"This is the first time in my life that I have been a defendant in a suit, and as a matter of fact I placed myself in a position to compel the Standard Company to go into court. I am not at all uneasy about the case, but if I suspected I was so black a fellow as I am painted I should feel a trifle worried.

"Mr. Efros and myself are the inventors of the process, and it belongs to us, but I do not care to go into details at this time."

HACKENSACK IN DARKNESS.

Four Men Injured by an Explosion in Light Company's Plant.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Jan. 11.—There was an explosion in the plant of the Bergen County Gas and Electric Light Company this afternoon. A sixteen-inch steam supply pipe burst, and a fifteen-foot section of it went through a brick wall.

Manning Bilby of Newark, who was tightening bolts on the pipe, was sent flying up to the roof and dropped to the floor, a distance of twelve feet. He was badly scalded, and is in the hospital in a critical condition. Alfred Weber of Newark, Superintendent Jones, and August Metzler, a fireman, were also injured.

The town is in darkness to-night, but by to-morrow the damage will be repaired. The cause of the explosion is unknown.

Prices of Hosiery Advanced.

ATLANTA, Ga., Jan. 11.—The Southern Association of Hosiery Manufacturers met here to-day and advanced prices 10 per cent. This is a total advance of 20 per cent. in three months. The association adopted a resolution urging the United States Senate not to ratify the pending reciprocity treaty between France and the United States.

CHICAGO'S FREE SCHOOL BOOKS.

Commission Appointed to Ascertain Cost of Printing and Binding.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—Action taken last night by the Board of Education is expected to result in publishing and furnishing to pupils at cost price all books used in the public schools.

By a unanimous vote the President was instructed to appoint a commission of seven to investigate printing and binding in order to ascertain the cost. They are called upon to make a recommendation on the question of whether the board shall provide itself with facilities for printing and binding or let work to the lowest bidders.

BRYAN TO VISIT PLAINFIELD.

Has Accepted Invitation of J. E. Martine, the "Sage of Cedar Brook."

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Jan. 11.—James E. Martine, variously known as "the Sage of Cedar Brook," "Farmer Jim," and "the Farmer Orator," who is an advocate of 16 to 1, has received a letter from William Jennings Bryan accepting Mr. Martine's invitation to visit Cedar Brook while Mr. Bryan is in New Jersey.

Mr. Bryan says he will come to Plainfield whether he has the time to stop elsewhere or not, but that his stay will be brief, as his whole time in New Jersey will be limited.

Vendever Treasurer of Maryland.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Jan. 11.—Murray Vendever of Harford County was to-day elected Treasurer of the State by the General Assembly in joint convention. He received the unanimous vote of the Democratic majority, while Gen. Thomas J. Shryock, the present incumbent, was supported by the Republicans. He will assume charge of the office in a few days.

DEMENTED FARMER'S VAGARIES.

Drove Horse and Wagon Off a Dock and Tried to Go Further.

SOUTHPORT, Conn., Jan. 11.—A. S. Price, a prosperous farmer living in Nichols, was found wandering about the streets of Westport at an early hour this morning, apparently demented. He had recently suffered an attack of the grip, and, according to friends, had been at times deranged.

Late yesterday afternoon he deliberately drove off the dock. The tide was out, and the outfit landed in the mud. Price, however, urged his horse on and with much deliberation drove into the harbor channel, where, in four feet of water, the horse stuck. Price mounted the animal's back and undertook to pound him into further progress. By means of a tackle, and after half an hour's work, the team and man were lifted from the water, whereupon Price jumped to the horse's back and galloped away. He was not seen until this morning, when he was found, as indicated above, walking about Westport, leading the horse. His friends were notified, and undertook to take the man in charge. He fought desperately, but was finally overpowered.

DR. ELIZABETH J. FRENCH DEAD.

She Was Distinguished as a Physician, Writer, and Lecturer.

BOSTON, Jan. 11.—Dr. Elizabeth J. French, one of the most distinguished women in the medical fraternity of this country, died at the home of her daughter, Dr. Belle French Patterson, on Huntington Avenue, this afternoon, after a short illness.

Dr. French was born in Mechanicsburg, Penn., in 1821, the daughter of a physician, and from an early age worked with her father at the place of her birth. Later, after her marriage, she removed to New York, and continued in practice there and in Philadelphia for many years, and for the last six years in Boston, with an office on Huntington Avenue.

Her special line of work was in the medical and therapeutic uses of electricity and electro-cranial diagnosis, in which she established a fame almost world-wide, receiving commendation from the most distinguished members of the medical profession in her age and time.

Dr. French was a strong advocate of temperance, having lectured extensively on this subject, and being the originator of the Women's Praying Band. She also was the author of several books on her special medical work and upon temperance.

She is survived by two daughters, the elder being May French Sheldon, the first female Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society of England, having achieved distinction in African exploration and as an author and translator. She now resides in London.

The younger daughter, Dr. Belle French Patterson, is a practitioner and lecturer on health topics, residing in Boston, making her home with her mother and continuing the work begun with her mother.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

Men's Mackintoshes, $6.50. There's much we might tell about them—but what's the use? Our guarantee is broad, and lived up to.

Men's Goods—Ninth street side.

The Cheapest Store in New York

THERE'S a wide difference between the light, jerky train on a narrow-gauge railroad and the heavy "limited" that skims smoothly along at sixty-five miles an hour. And the difference is not offset by the price of the ticket. The limited is really the cheaper—in time-saving, security and comfort.

The Wanamaker Store and railroads have points of similarity. The heavy, secure and really cheap road has flower beds and beauty along its path. The store is beautiful. The poor railroad and the ordinary store are skimpy. Great stocks—ample selections—characterize the Wanamaker system.

The hot-box of haste and carelessness are unknown here.

Which sort of store do you take stock in?

Personal responsibility—hold us to it. One buys at a "cheap" store in the unacknowledged belief that the customer is smartest—that one gets the best of it. But do you? And when, too late, the purchase turns out badly the unction you take is, "Well, I didn't pay much." If anything from this store fails to please, bring it back. Hold us to our promise—

"Reliable goods only, at the least cost; anything (barring certain articles not exchangeable, for reasons of safety to health, and daintiness) returnable for cheerful re-imbursement, if uninjured."

Wanamaker's is the safest, cheapest store in New York. And thousands have proved it.

New Silks From the Orient

Japanese Silks, forty-three kinds. These at 45c a yard.

Shanghai Silks—designs in white on blue grounds. These 60c—and they give great service.

This is a very blunt way of inviting you to a rather novel show to-day.

This Morning the Overcoat Sale.

Details were printed in some of last night's papers. In a word, the story is that we have nearly five hundred of the popular Kersey Overcoats, blue and black, to sell at $12 and $13.50, though values run up to $20, and the garments marked at $13.50 have satin-lined shoulders. All are full lined with all-wool fabric. Wish we had more, but there is no possible chance, it seems, to get them.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Cashmere Wrappers Here's a lot just came in. All of one quality—a superior quality at the price. The gowns are most attractively made; pointed yoke back and front, the back plaited; bretelles, collar, sleeves and belt all trimmed with narrow black braid. In red, cadet blue, purple and black. $3.75 each.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Rubber Shoes—Men's and Women's

How good? That should be first thought in buying rubbers. If a pair bought here "goes wrong" it is because of some defect we couldn't find out in advance—an accident of manufacture—and the loss is ours. For we want you to fetch a poor pair back.

Men's Rubbers, high or low cut, 75c.
Women's Rubbers, "storm" cut, or as low as you please, 50c.

And every right sort of Artic, Alaska and boot is here, as well.

Sold in regular shoe store. And, for convenience, in the Bargain Store on fifth floor—not deceptively, but to save time and trouble.

Muslin Underwear—More Selling Space

Shop in comfort. If you find the second floor counters crowded, go to the fifth floor and make your selections leisurely. Up there are many of the lower priced garments—excellent values, as are all the kinds, whatever the price. These very little priced kinds, however, are for Our Public—not for dealers; so only three of them to a buyer.

Cambric Corset Covers at 8c; Drawers at 10c, 15c and 18c; Night Gowns at 38c, 50c and $1; Petticoats at 35c, 50c, 75c and 90c.

Eiderdown Sacques, all seams felled, 50c; Seersucker Petticoats, 50c.

All of the above will be found on the second floor, too. In addition:

Gowns

50c—Muslin; Empire; large revers; lawn ruffles; shield of embroidery.
65c—Muslin; high neck; yoke of fine plaits and insertion.
75c—Muslin; yoke of fine plaits and insertion; edging on sleeves; ribbon at neck.
$1—Cambric; yoke of plaits and torchon insertion; lace on sleeves and necks
Up to $7.50.

MRS. ROGERS WITNESS IN MOLINEUX TRIAL

The Daughter of Mrs. Adams Tells of Her Mother's Death.

DRAWS BARNET CASE IN AGAIN

Mr. Osborne Questions Prof. Witthaus About His Analyses in It—Sure He Found Mercuric Cyanide.

There were but two witnesses of any importance examined during yesterday's session of the trial of Roland B. Molineux for the murder of Katherine J. Adams, the ninth week of which will close to-day with the prosecution still presenting its case. They were Mrs. Florence E. Rogers, the only surviving daughter of Mrs. Adams, and Prof. Rudolph A. Witthaus, the chemist who analyzed the organs of the dead woman and of Henry C. Barnet, who is also alleged to have died from mercurial poisoning.

Mrs. Rogers gave her testimony in a self-contained manner. Although Mr. Weeks had put Cornish on the rack on cross-examination and had asked him point-blank if he had not been the cause of the separation between Mrs. Rogers and her husband, he made no such attack on Mrs. Rogers when it came his turn to submit her to a cross-examination. Mrs. Rogers told how she had been primarily accountable for the administration of the fatal dose to her mother, as she had asked Cornish to give Mrs. Adams some bromo-seltzer from the bottle he had brought home the night before, as she was suffering from a headache.

Another feature of Mrs. Rogers's testimony was her contradiction of a part of the evidence she had given before the Coroner's jury in February last. At that time it appeared to be Mr. Osborne's intention to fix the crime on Cornish. It was this examination, Mrs. Rogers said, that had confused her, and from it Mr. Weeks drew the inference of her interest in Cornish. She said she might have made a mistake on the point in question, which was admitted to be immaterial from the fact that Mr. Weeks did not dwell upon it in his cross-examination.

Mrs. Rogers admitted that she had hired a letter box from a man on Columbus Avenue and received mail there under the name of Miss Addison. She had done this on the advice of counsel, as at that time she was having her husband watched by detectives and their reports were sent to the letter box addressed under the name she had assumed.

DR. WITTHAUS A FAST TALKER.

Dr. Witthaus's testimony was, to the lay mind, the most uninteresting testimony of the trial. He talked of rare chemicals and infinitesimal tests in technical phrases of great length, and he kept this up for hours at such a rate that it was impossible for the official stenographer to follow him at times. Many times the Recorder stopped him and asked him to make his meanings clearer, and the jurors also interjected questions that Dr. Witthaus seemed to think trivial, but which seemed of import to the questioners. He answered all questions in the same doleful monotone in which he delivered his testimony.

When he took the stand he extracted several formidable looking notebooks from his satchel and settled himself low down in the chair as if he was about going to take a nap and awaited the assault. Mr. Osborne, who had learned a lesson from interfering in scientific dissertations when Dr. Persifor Frazer was on the stand, allowed the chemist to go on uninterrupted.

At times Dr. Witthaus's enunciation was of such a character that his words could not be distinguished at a distance of ten feet. He talks without opening his mouth, and a great volume of sound that he emits is lost in his long drooping mustache. Interruptions seemed to bore him very much. He was still on the stand on direct examination when the session closed.

Molineux seemed to take more interest in Dr. Witthaus's testimony than he has taken in any since the opening of the trial. He is a chemist, and that element in him was appealed to by the testimony of the expert. He made many notes during the time Dr. Witthaus was delivering his address, and his usual smile was replaced by a look of keen interest.

Dr. Hamilton was at last in his element. He also followed the deductions of Dr. Witthaus closely, and from time to time he suggested a question to Mr. Weeks which the lawyer put, not in the way of cross-examination, but, as he said, to have certain points elucidated and to save time.

THE BARNET CASE AGAIN.

The Barnet case was made a feature of the examination of Dr. Witthaus. This testimony concerning the examination of the viscera of Barnet did not get in without serious opposition on the part of Mr. Weeks.

Dr. Witthaus was allowed to tell about the taking up of the body, of his examination of the organs, and of his finding mercury and hydrocyanic acid in them, but he would not go so far as to say that they had entered the system in combination or in the form of mercuric cyanide. He said, however, that the finding of the minute particles of the drugs in the body indicated that much larger doses than those found had been originally taken.

The quantitative analyses of Dr. Witthaus were conducted so as to show the mercury in the bodies of Mrs. Adams and Barnet in the form of mercuric chloride or calomel. It was necessary, he explained, to reduce the mercury to that salt so as to weigh it properly, and it is expected that the defense will make much of this point, especially if it can be proved that Barnet took calomel while he was supposed to be suffering from diphtheria.

Another seemingly significant point in the testimony of Dr. Witthaus was that he found acetanylid in the combination of bromo-seltzer and mercuric cyanide sent to Cornish. Mr. Weeks, during his cross-examination of Dr. Weston, asked him if he had not seen the same symptoms as those exhibited by Mrs. Adams present in acetanylid poisoning. Dr. Weston said that he had never come across such a case.

Dr. Witthaus did not arrive at the stage of telling that either Barnet or Mrs. Adams died from poisoning by mercuric cyanide, although it is sure that he will so testify concerning Mrs. Adams, as in the report he made to the District Attorney after his analysis he stated this fact. So far he has only sworn that he found mercuric cyanide present in the box of supposed Kutnow powder from which it is said that Barnet partook, and in the bottle of supposed bromo-seltzer from which the dose given to Mrs. Adams was taken.

RECORDER INTERRUPTS WITTHAUS.

At one stage of the proceedings yesterday Dr. Witthaus's testimony became such a mass of intricate technicalities that the Recorder suggested that he either put his testimony in plainer language or, failing this, that he discontinue it altogether, as there were grave doubts if the jury understood and followed him clearly. Both Mr. Osborne and Mr. Weeks objected to this, the latter claiming that unless the defense knew the processes by which the witness had arrived at his conclusions it would be impossible to combat them if this course was found necessary. The Recorder yielded to this argument, and Dr. Witthaus showing signs of great annoyance at having been interrupted, even by the Court, continued to give his testimony in his usual monotone.

The first witness called to the stand when the morning session opened was William A. Maguire, at one time in the employ of Weeks & Battle. He told Mr. Osborne that he was a stenographer and while not an expert he could take an ordinary conversation correctly.

"Did you make notes of a conversation that took place between Mr. Weeks and Detective McCafferty?"

"I did."

"Have you those notes now?"

"No."

"Where are they?"

"I do not know. To the best of my knowledge they were in the possession of Mr. Weeks when I left his employ."

Mr. Osborne served notice on Mr. Weeks to produce the notes if he had them, and the witness was excused.

Mrs. Florence Eva Rogers entered the courtroom with Harry Cornish and her brother, Howard Adams, just at this time, and she was at once called to the stand. She was dressed entirely in black and seemed in better health than when she went on the stand eleven months ago at the Coroner's inquest. She answered all the questions put to her readily and in a clear voice.

MRS. ROGERS'S TESTIMONY.

She said that she was the only living daughter and her brother was the only son of Mrs Adams. She had been married for fourteen years, she said, and in that time had practically always lived with her mother. The family, when they lived at 61 West Eighty-sixth Street for the first time, consisted of her mother, her husband, her daughter, her husband's brother, and her own brother.

They lived there for three years, and then went to 19 West Eighty-fourth Street. After that they moved to the Adelaide, in Park Avenue. They lived there for seven months, and then went back to the flat at 61 West Eighty-sixth Street. Since the death of her mother, she said, she had been living in Hartford, Conn., and then she told who lived in the flat at the time of her mother's death.

Mrs. Rogers was at times very pert in her answers to Mr Weeks's questions, but the counsel for the defense took little notice of it, and showed no intention of badgering the witness. In describing the scene on the morning of the fatal day, Mrs. Rogers said:

"After I had left my bedroom on that morning I found my mother in the dining room with her head bound up. She said she was suffering from a headache, and asked me if there was anything I could give her. I at first said that I had nothing, and then thought of the bottle of bromo-seltzer that had been brought home by him the night before.

"I went to his room and asked him to let me have the bottle. He gave it to me, and I could not open it on account of the seal. We told Mr. Cornish of this, and he came out of his room and opened the bottle with a fork. He mixed a dose of it in a glass of water. She swallowed it and complained of the taste. Mr. Cornish said he supposed it was all right and took a portion of what remained in the glass. Then he went back to his room.

"A moment later my mother was taken violently ill and fell. I thought that she had fainted, and called Mr. Cornish. He came out of the room, and we tried to lift my mother up. I tried the usual remedies for fainting, a condition in which I had never seen my mother before, but they did no good. We then sent for Dr. Hitchcock, and he gave her a hypodermic injection.

"There was some talk about a stomach pump, but the doctor said she had nothing left on her stomach and that it would do no good. Dr. Hitchcock then said he would like to have another physician in, and we called Dr. Potter. When he came my mother was dead."

THE BOTTLE OF BROMO-SELTZER.

"When did you first hear about the bottle of bromo-seltzer?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"On Christmas Day."

"Who told you about it?"

"Mr. Cornish." The witness was not allowed to give the conversation, and she was asked what was done with the bottle holder after Cornish brought it home.

"It was placed on my dressing table."

"What became of the bottle?"

"It remained in Mr. Cornish's room."

"And you are sure that you knocked on his door and asked for the bottle?"

"I am."

"What did you do with the glass and spoon in which the dose was mixed?"

"I put them away in a closet."

"And were they later given to the police?"

"They were."

"Had they been disturbed in the meantime?"

"No."

Mrs. Rogers braced herself for an expected attack when Mr. Weeks arose to examine her and seemed surprised at the easy tone and tenor of the questions put to her on cross-examination. She said in answer to Mr. Weeks's first question that she had left the apartment only once while the glass and spoon were there, and that was to attend her mother's funeral.

"Did the bottle holder match the toilet articles on your dressing table?"

"It did."

"Where did you get those articles?"

"At different places. I bought some of them, and others were presented to me."

"When did you first see the bottle holder?"

"On the night of Dec. 27, about midnight."

"Had you been to the theatre?"

"Yes."

"Did you see the package in which it was said to have come?"

"No, I saw only the address."

"What was said about that?"

TALK OF DISGUISED WRITING.

"Something about the person having tried to disguise his writing."

"Were any names mentioned?"

"None."

"Had you had any previous experience with bromo-seltzer?"

"Never."

"Did you ever take any of it?"

"If I had I would have had experience with it," said the witness.

"Answer my question, please?" said Mr. Weeks.

"I never took any," said Mrs. Rogers.

"Is it not a fact that when you were living at the Adelaide you purchased a bottle of bromo-seltzer at a drug store at Sixty-third Street and Madison Avenue?"

"I never purchased a bottle of bromo-seltzer in my life that I can remember."

"Do you remember, Mrs. Rogers, how Cornish was dressed on the day your mother died when you first saw him?"

"He had all his clothes on, I know that. I do not remember what their color was, but he was fully dressed when he came out into the dining room."

"Now, is it not a fact that he had his pajamas on?"

"If he had had I would not have said that he was dressed."

"Answer my question, please," said Mr. Weeks again.

"He had his street clothes on."

"Over his pajamas?"

"I'm sure I don't know."

"Do you not know that Cornish has said that he had to pull his clothes on over his pajamas to go for the doctor?"

"I don't know. All I know is that when I saw him he was dressed."

"Was your husband living with you when you resided at 19 West Eighty-fourth Street in 1898?"

"We were separated at the time."

"When did you separate?"

"In 1897."

"How soon after your separation did Cornish go to live in 204 West Eighty-fourth Street?"

"I don't remember."

HER PRIVATE LETTER BOX.

"Prior to that time had you a letter box?"

"I had. Under advice of counsel."

"Under the name of Miss Addison?"

"Yes."

"Did you lease that letter box for three years?"

"No, Sir, I did not."

"This letter box place was kept by a man named Murdoch, was it not?"

"Yes."

"And did you not know that the same man served Mr. Cornish with newspapers?"

"No."

Mr. Weeks asked the witness whether she had ever had trouble with tenants in the Adelaide, and she said she had not. She said she left the apartments because the rent was too high for her to pay.

The only trouble she ever heard of, she said, was an argument between Cornish and another tenant, who complained of some noise made by Cornish's friends. She said Mr. McIntyre had been her counsel, and had called on her several times when she lived in the Adelaide.

"How often have you spoken of this case with Mr. McIntyre?"

"Whenever I saw him."

"Do you know of the Elm Tree Inn in Hartford?"

"Yes. It is outside of the city."

"Were you there last Summer?"

"Yes. With Mr. and Mrs. Hovey and Mr. McIntyre."

"Did that visit have anything to do with this case?"

"No."

"Who were you stopping with in Hartford?"

"Mrs. Hovey."

"Were you ever at the Elm Tree Inn on any other occasion with Mr. McIntyre?"

"No, Sir."

"Did you ever see an article like this holder before?"

"I never did."

"Never saw one like it in Hartford?"

"No, Sir."

"Did you ever know Cornish's wife?"

"No."

MEETING WITH CORNISH HERE.

"When did you first meet Cornish in New York?"

"In 1895 or 1896."

"Where?"

"At my home in New York."

Mrs. Rogers then went on to state that she had known Cornish's family since her childhood, including Mrs. Saunders, Cornish's sister. Mr. Osborne tried to get in an objection, knowing what was coming, but the Recorder overruled him.

Mr. Weeks then read from the witness's testimony before the Coroner, in which she said that she had only known Mrs. Saunders for a short time. She was asked to reconcile this statement with the one that she had known the woman since her childhood.

"It is probable that I made those answers at the inquest," said Mrs. Rogers, "but I was so annoyed and upset by Mr. Osborne's persistent manner that I may have made a mistake."

"But you were under oath then?"

"I was. I did not mean anything."

"You would not violate your oath because you were angry, would you?"

"I would not. I meant to say that I was not intimately acquainted with Mrs. Saunders."

"What is the relationship existing between you and Cornish?"

"My father married Mr. Cornish's uncle."

"When you separated from your husband you were in the right, were you not?" asked Mr. Osborne on redirect.

"I was."

"Oh, the woman's always in the right," observed Mr. Weeks.

"And he agreed to pay you $50 a month, which he has since paid?" said Mr. Osborne.

"He has."

"And this amount not being enough to support you you rented rooms to Cornish and Yocum. Is that right?"

"It is."

MRS. ROGERS NOT MALIGNED.

The Recorder reproved Mr. Osborne for going again into the marital relations of the witness and said he was wasting time.

Mr. Osborne said that the witness had been maligned and that there was something due to her. The Recorder said he could not see in the evidence any signs that Mrs. Rogers had been maligned, but he allowed Mr. Osborne to go on.

"You rented the letter box to get information about your husband, did you not?"

"I did."

"Was your husband in the habit of opening your letters?"

"Yes. He opened all the letters he could get hold of."

"You say that you leased the letter box under advice of counsel?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"Yes."

"Your lawyer had an office?"

"He had."

"And yet you had to lease a box under an assumed name?"

"Yes, my counsel advised it." Mrs. Rogers was then excused, and left the room in company with Cornish and her brother.

Karl E. Trommer of Roessler & Hasslacher, chemists, was called to the stand to identify a letter written to his firm by Molineux asking about enamels.

"Do you use cyanide of potassium in that business?"

"We do. We are large manufacturers of it."

"Do you sell cyanide of mercury?"

"No."

"Did you ever sell any goods to Molineux?"

"No, I never heard from him after that first letter."

DR. WITTHAUS ON THE STAND.

Dr. Rudolph A. Witthaus then took the stand. The first question put to him after he had told of his experience was whether he had made an analysis of the box of Kutnow powder delivered to him by Detective Carey. There was an immediate wrangle over this, Mr. Weeks contending that the best way to get evidence of what caused the death of Mrs. Adams was to get a statement from the witness as to what he had found in her organs.

The Recorder ruled that as a specimen case the evidence was admissible, and the witness stated that he had made qualitative and quantitative analyses of the powder. Besides a lot of chemicals that belonged in the powder, he said he had also found cyanide of mercury. He said that he could not tell what amount was in the box, as he had not used all of it.

The part analyzed, he said, contained 122.73 grains. He said that it was not hard in this combination to determine the presence of cyanide of mercury, and then went on at great length to tell of the methods he had used to determine the presence of the poison.

Dr. Witthaus, after stating that he was present when the body of Barnet was exhumed, told of the analysis he had made of the various organs. In the liver, he said, he had found by one process .43 grains of mercury, and by another process .38 grains. He also found a trace of cyanogen.

He said that he did not find in the liver sufficient cyanide to determine whether there was enough with the mercury to make mercuric cyanide. Dr. Witthaus told of other smaller quantities of mercury that he had found in the brain and kidneys.

"In all, how much mercury did you find in the body of H. C. Barnet?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"I found .087 grains, or about seven-tenths of a grain in all," said the witness, after a lot of figuring.

"Now, would you say from what you found that a much larger dose of cyanide of mercury had been taken?"

"Yes, if it was taken as cyanide of mercury."

"Yes, if it were," said Mr. Weeks.

The witness then went on to state that there were only five cases on record of poisoning by mercuric cyanide, the first dating back to 1824.

ANALYSIS IN ADAMS CASE.

The Adams case was then taken up. Dr. Witthaus described at length receiving the viscera and brain of the woman from Dr. Weston and the poison bottle and tumbler containing a quantity of colorless liquid and a silver-plated spoon from the police. The bottle he described as bearing a distant resemblance to a bromo-seltzer bottle.

"Was there anything on the side of the cork to show how it was withdrawn?" Mr. Osborne asked.

"I object," said Mr. Weeks. "If there was, it is there now and will speak for itself."

The Recorder sustained the objection, and a real bromo-seltzer bottle which Dr. Witthaus had purchased the day before was marked for identification, and with the poison bottle passed among the jurymen.

Dr. Witthaus testified that the bottle when he received it was in practically the same condition that it is now. It contained a white powder caked at the bottom and loose on top. The caked part was raised from the bottom of the bottle, and at first glance the bottle seemed much fuller than it really was.

His first analysis was of a small portion of the loose power, which he shook out of the bottle, but on Jan. 3 Detective Carey asked him for the original bottle, so he transferred its contents to another bottle and gave it to him, and he took it away. The subsequent analyses were therefore from portions that had been lower down in the bottle.

By weighing the bottle full and the bottle empty and subtracting he had found the weight of the contents to be 202 grains. The bottle and contents weighed without the cork 30.3260 grams. Mr. Weeks insisted on having this translated to grains, and it took three minutes for Dr. Witthaus to compute the answer—606.80.

AMOUNT OF MERCURIC CYANIDE.

He said he could not tell how much cyanide of mercury the bottle had contained, as he had tested different parts of the mixture and had found different quantities in each part. He said that the bromo-seltzer had had the effect of disintegrating the mercuric cyanide, and, proceeding with his discourse, the witness showed the jury a leather case holding a number of bottles, which he said contained different poisons in the form of mercuric sulphate, mercuric cyanide, mercuric chloride, and metallic mercury.

The cyanogen was shown in the form of a slight precipitate on a piece of filtering paper. A few blue spots were shown, and these the witness said were Prussian blue.

"There is no question that the powders contained cyanide of mercury?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"None at all," said the witness.

The glass from which Mrs. Adams drank and the spoon that mixed the dose were then produced by the witness, and he started to tell of the analysis he had made of the white precipitate in them, portions of which could still be seen adhering to the glass. This brought on a long argument between counsel, Mr. Weeks contending that the connection had not been shown, and that even Mrs. Rogers had testified that the glass and spoon had not been constantly in her possession.

Howard Adams and Detective Carey were called to the stand to try and prove the connection, but Mrs. Rogers could not be found. The Recorder finally decided to allow the witness to make his statement, with the proviso that if Mrs. Rogers, when called to the stand again, could not prove sufficiently that the articles had not left her possession, the testimony would be stricken out. He ordered the District Attorney to have Mrs. Rogers in court to-day.

When the argument was concluded the adjournment hour had arrived, and the Court decided to have Mrs. Rogers on the stand first before Dr. Witthaus was allowed to proceed. The Recorder said he could then judge as to the admissibility of the evidence. The case goes on this morning.

Oyster Bay Express Nearly Wrecked.

MINEOLA, L. I., Jan. 11.—The Oyster Bay Express, eastbound, had a narrow escape from being wrecked near Roslyn last night. Engineer Birdsall saw an object on the rails and reversed his lever, but the train ran into it. The passengers were thrown from their seats by the sudden stopping of the train, but nobody was hurt. Investigation showed a large heap of scrap iron had been placed on the tracks, some of the heavier pieces being braced against the ties.

WILL DISCUSS LIVE STOCK.

Arrangements for the Annual Convention at Fort Worth.

Special to The New York Times.

FORT WORTH, Texas, Jan. 11.—The time for the convening of the third annual session of the National Live Stock Association is near at hand, and every indication points to the largest attendance in the history of the association. Within the past ten days hundreds of letters from nearly every State in the Union have been received by the Secretary, C. F. Martin, from those interested in live stock affairs, asking that hotel accommodations be secured for them and reservations made on the excursion which leaves here on the evening of Jan. 19 on a trip to Galveston, San Antonio, and other southern towns of the State.

During the past year two large hotels have been erected, and they can accommodate several hundred visitors. In addition, the Rooming Committee, which is thoroughly organized, has established an office where rooms are being listed. With the hotel accommodations and rooms in private residences, fully 8,000 visitors can be cared for.

In the matter of entertainment, an attractive programme has been arranged. On the evening of the first day a "smoker" will be tendered to the delegates and visitors at the Hotel Worth. On the second evening the Mystic Knights of Bovinia will have a street parade, which promises to eclipse everything of the kind ever given in the city, and it will be followed by a ball. This function is under the direction of prominent citizens of Fort Worth.

There will be a reception to visitors at the Commercial Club rooms on the evening of Thursday, Jan. 18.

The exhibit of range stock cattle at the stock yards will afford an opportunity for visitors to the meeting to see just what Western cattlemen are doing to improve their herds. The prizes are sufficiently large to attract a large number of exhibitors, and already over 100 competitors are assured.

An interesting programme has been prepared for the session, and some of the leading authorities of the United States will take part in the discussions. The subjects cover many which are of the greatest importance to not only the feeders and breeders, but every one engaged in any branch of the industry.

All transportation companies running west of Chicago have granted a half-fare rate, which makes the trip within the reach of every one.

The Governor of each State, every live stock association, all County Commissioners, Live Stock Exchanges, Sanitary Boards, stock yards, and transportation companies have the right to name delegates, so it is possible for every one interested to take part in the convention if he desire.

MRS. G. F. ROESCH A CATHOLIC.

Wife of the Municipal Court Judge Received Into the Church.

OGDENSBURG, N. Y., Jan. 11.—Mrs. George F. Roesch, wife of Justice George F. Roesch of the Fourth District Municipal Court, New York City, was received into the Roman Catholic faith to-day in this city with the full ceremony by Bishop Gabriels in the presence of many nuns of the Sacred Heart and priests. A public reception was tendered to Judge and Mrs. Roesch by the Knights of Columbus last night.

Mrs. Roesch was a Miss Lederle. She was educated in a convent, and had long attended the Church of the Immaculate Conception, on East Fourteenth Street with her husband, who is a practical Catholic. It was no surprise, therefore, to the friends of the family when announcement was made of her conversion to the Catholic faith. Mrs. Roesch has sung in a Catholic church choir, and before her marriage was a school teacher. Justice Roesch is a Grand Master of the Knights of Columbus. The family home is at 109 East Tenth Street.

Soldier Killed at Newport.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 11.—This afternoon while the members of Light Battery C, Seventh Artillery, stationed at Fort Adams, were out for horse exercise Private Allen was thrown from his horse. He was taken to the post hospital, and died this evening. He was a recent recruit, and came from Boston.

THE PRESIDENT ASSAILED

Senator Pettigrew Attacks His Philippine Policy.

CHARGES HIM WITH PERFIDY

Alleges that Information Is Withheld in the Interests of Politics—Mr. Lodge Joins in the Debate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—In the Senate to-day the resolution offered by Mr. Pettigrew (Silver, S. D.,) several days ago, together with the substitute for it offered by Mr. Lodge (Rep., Mass.,) was taken up. This lead to a somewhat sensational debate, in the course of which Mr. Pettigrew fiercely attacked the Administration of President McKinley.

The object of both the resolution and the substitute was to obtain from the President, if not incompatible with public interests, all information in regard to the insurrection in the Philippines. Mr. Lodge suggested that both Mr. Pettigrew's resolution and his own substitute be withdrawn, and that the resolution offered by Mr. Hoar (Rep., Mass.,) be adopted as a substitute for both, amending Mr. Hoar's resolution as might be deemed desirable or advisable.

The resolution offered by Mr. Hoar was sweeping in its call for information relating to the Philippine insurrection, but Mr. Lodge said his desire for all information concerning the insurrection was so great that he proposed to offer an amendment extending its provisions. It had been stated, he said, that there was danger of an uprising in Manila by the Filipinos, with the object of murdering Americans and all foreigners. It had been stated also that Filipinos had threatened to throw bombs into the funeral procession of Gen. Lawton. He wanted information upon these points, as well as upon others. He wanted to know what information the Government possessed as to reprisals placed upon other tribes by Aguinaldo and the Tagalos.

He wanted especially to know how the Filipinos had treated American and Spanish prisoners, there being wide divergence of information upon that point. If the Government had information relating to the encouragement received by Aguinaldo and the insurgents from the United States, and what effect that encouragement had had upon the course of the rebellion, he thought the Senate and the people were entitled to it.

This point was most important, and the Senate and people were anxious for the truth. It was a matter, too, of common report that the Anti-Imperialistic League had been urging our soldiers to oppose the war. This work, Mr. Lodge thought, had had little effect because of the insignificance of the persons engaged in it. Little attention had been paid by the Government to this treasonable action, "because," said Mr. Lodge, "no sensible man wants to convert a bore into a martyr, even though the bore be malevolent." He thought there was no disposition in any quarter to suppress information. He believed, with the amendment he proposed, Mr. Hoar's resolution would cover every point upon which information was desired.

Mr. Hoar said he was in general accord with his colleague's ideas as to the resolution. He would be glad to have the correspondence between the President and the Peace Commission at Paris, but at this time he would not insist upon that. He wanted, however, the distinct recommendations and instructions of the President to the Philippine Commission. Mr. Lodge suggested that the resolution of Mr. Pettigrew and his own substitute be laid on the table and that of Mr. Hoar with his proposed amendment be adopted.

To this Mr. Pettigrew objected. He had asked in his resolution for specific information, which he desired. It made no difference to him, he said, what information the Massachusetts Senators wanted. Mr. Pettigrew then launched into a rather sensational speech, containing bitter attacks upon the Administration. The information covered by the amended resolutions of the Massachusetts Senators was not all that might be called for. Senators might ask, he said, for information concerning the desetration of churches by American soldiers in the Philippines, and as to many other horrors that follow in the path of war.

It was evident, he said, that the object of the Administration was to keep detailed information from the people, and it was quite as evident that the political success of the President and of the Republican Party was of greater concern to the imperialists than whether the information asked for should reach the Filipinos.

Such an objection to the sending to the Senate of information as that it would be communicated to the Filipinos was ridiculous, since the Filipinos already were in possession of it. The real reason for objecting to its publication was that it was deemed not desirable the American people should have it.

"The trouble with the imperialists," said Mr. Pettigrew, "is that they have confounded the interests of the people of the United States with the political desires and ambitions of their puny President, and regarded him and his success as more important than a rightful treatment of the Filipinos."

Mr. Pettigrew said he wanted the information he was seeking, whether the President regarded the publication of it as compatible with the public interests or not. And he wanted it whether the President desired it should or should not be known.

If any amendment is to be made to the resolution," said he, "it ought to be made to read that the information should be transmitted to the Senate if not incompatible with the President's interests as a candidate for re-election. The fact is, this whole business is bound up in the President's desire again to be a candidate of his party for President."

Mr. Pettigrew then devoted some time to a discussion of the censoring of dispatches from the Philippines.

He declared that important and significant facts had been stricken from news dispatches from Manila and from official reports, because it was regarded by the powers that be as undesirable that they should reach the American people.

"As an instance of this work," said he, "the Sulu treaty was mangled and partly suppressed until after the election in Ohio," and he discussed at length the proclamation issued by the President declaring that it was in such shape that Gen. Otis recommended it should be changed in order not to provoke hostilities on the part of the Filipinos. Subsequently, he said, it was altered materially, and, as altered, was published to the Philippine natives. As originally drawn it was, to his mind, a flat declaration of war, and when Aguinaldo and his leaders came into possession of the original they so regarded it.

"The whole wretched business," declared Mr. Pettigrew, vehemently, "was one of concealment and duplicity, intended to deceive not only the people of the United States, but also the islanders themselves."

In substantiation of his charge that the dispatches from the Philippines were censored in the interest of the Administration, Mr. Pettigrew quoted from a letter written by Mr. Robert M. Collins, Associated Press representative at Manila. In this letter Mr. Collins related the substance of an interview upon the subject of censoring dispatches which he had had with Gen. Otis. Mr. Pettigrew read the statements of Mr. Collins, in which he had said it was the evident desire of the officials to prevent certain information from reaching the people of the United States. When he (Collins) had filed a dispatch containing information which he thought was proper to send to the United States he had been informed by the censor that he had been instructed to cut out anything that might hurt the Administration. Subsequently, when he had desired to send a story relating to the use of silver in the Philippines, the censor had told him that his instructions were to allow nothing to pass him which would be helpful to William Jennings Bryan in the United States.

Upon this point Mr. Pettigrew became particularly sarcastic, and again adverted to what he termed the President's desire to succeed himself as President, even though essential information had to be suppressed to accomplish that end.

Mr. Pettigrew declared that the President himself really began the war in the Philippines, and was responsible for it.

"If," said he, "the Administration had had a spark of honor in dealing with the Filipinos, it would have told Gen. Merritt to lay the whole truth of the intentions of the Government before Aguinaldo and his associates."

Had this been done, Mr. Pettigrew believed that half the trouble might have been averted.

That we had fired the first shot which had precipitated hostilities, nobody denied. Aguinaldo had then tried to secure a suspension of hostilities, but had been told by Gen. Otis that now the fighting had been begun, it must continue to the grim end.

"If," said Mr. Pettigrew, "I were a Filipino I would fight until I was gray against the unholy aggression of the United States. If this country is wrong, this country could take no grander position before the nations of the world than to admit that it is wrong. We have reached the turning point. We must decide whether we are to pursue a course of rapacity and aggression on the British principle or to pursue a course of justice and right. No nation long can pursue such a course as the imperialists have marked out for us—a course of wrong and treachery to friends—and hope to stand well before the nations of the world."

Mr. Pettigrew at this point was cut off by the expiration of the morning hour.

SENATE GETS DEWEY'S REPORT

Prediction from Hongkong Concerning the Capture of Manila Is Furnished by Secretary Long.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Responding to the Senate's resolution of inquiry, the Secretary of the Navy to-day sent to the Senate a copy of Admiral Dewey's report from Hongkong, dated March 31, 1898, relative to the capture of Manila. The text of the report shows that it was made in response to a telegram of inquiry from the Secretary, and the Admiral gives in detail the names of the available vessels under his command, and also a list of Spain's vessels and other means of defense at Manila. He stated that his own squadron was in a high state of efficiency. Speaking of the Spanish force, he said "it numbered about 15,000 soldiers of all arms in all the islands, of which half are in the vicinity of Manila. The islands are now in a state of insurrection, and my informants state that even the Spanish soldiers, who constitute only a small part of the whole, are disaffected. Both ships and forts are in need of ammunition."

To this statement he added the following: "I believe I am not overconfident in stating that with the squadron now under my command the vessels could be taken and the defenses at Manila reduced in one day. There is every reason to believe that with Manila taken, or even blockaded, the rest of the islands would fall either to the insurgents or ourselves, as they are only held now through the support of the navy and are dependent upon Manila for supplies. Information has just reached me that there are 5,000 armed rebels in camp near Manila, who are willing to assist us."

CLASH OVER THE TRUSTS.

Senators Allen and Tillman Disagree Over the Question of Great Trade Combinations.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Consideration of the census measure conferring additional authority upon the Director of the Census was taken up in the Senate to-day, Mr. Hoar withdrawing an amendment he had offered.

Mr. Pettigrew (Silver, S. D.) offered an amendment directing the Director of the Census to collect statistics in regard to the distribution of wealth, in regard to the extent to which machinery has displaced manual labor, and in regard to private and corporation indebtedness. The amendment was defeated.

Mr. Allen (Pop., Neb.,) proposed an amendment providing for the collection of statistics relating to trusts, and that, too, was defeated by a viva voce vote.

A sharp and amusing colloquy took place between Mr. Allen and Mr. Tillman (Dem., S. C.,) over the amendment. Mr. Tillman criticised it, and Mr. Allen charged that Mr. Tillman had gone over to the side of the trusts. In emphatically denying this, Mr. Tillman likened Mr. Allen to a dog in a Southern opossum hunt who followed the trail to a tree and then "reared up on it." When the tree was cut down no opossum was found.

The hunters went home in disgust, declaring that the dog "had been chasing a 'hant,'" [spectre.]

"That," said Mr. Tillman, "is what my friend from Nebraska is doing." [Laughter.]

Mr. Allen, with some heat, declared that Mr. Tillman would find difficulty in explaining his position to the people of his State. He said there was a disposition among Senators to say, "The public be damned," and he had no idea there was any intention to gather information regarding trusts.

The bill was passed without further objection.

STEWART ON THE CURRENCY.

Nevada Senator Arraigns the Republicans for "Abandoning the St. Louis Platform."

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—At the expiration of the morning hour in the Senate today the currency bill was taken up and Mr. Stewart (Silver, Nev.) addressed the Senate, opening with an attack on the Republican Party for bringing in a measure "so utterly contradictory of the St. Louis platform." He then entered upon a general discussion of the financial conditions of the world, attacking the advocates of the gold standard for denying that either the supply or the demand for gold has any effect in estimating the quantity of any particular commodity which a given amount of gold will buy.

Referring to the reply of Secretary Gage to the Senate, he said:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is not so absolutely ignorant of money science as his contention that the value of gold never changes would seem to indicate. In his reply to the resolution of the two houses of Congress respecting his transactions with certain New York banks, he gives as a reason for depositing the money of the Government in National banks that it is necessary to do so to avoid contracting the circulation, and that to keep it in the Treasury would disturb the business of the country.

"It seems a little strange that the Secretary can understand that locking up money in the Treasury vaults disturbs business and at the same time thinks it is necessary to use, only the commodity gold upon which to stamp money, although every foreign financial trouble takes gold out of the country and deposits it in a foreign vault. In his lecture on gold the Secretary claims that it possesses intrinsic value, while in administering the Treasury he regards the volume of money in circulation as of paramount importance, and deposits the surplus of the Treasury in banks to keep it in use and prevent contraction.

"It is passing strange that business men shape their transactions in view of the probable supply of money, but when they discuss it from the position they follow the example of the Secretary and assert that the quality of the material used as money is the only question of importance without regard to the volume in circulation. Is it not singular that people cannot see the absurdity of the intrinsic value theory while in every kind of business, industrial as well as speculative, they act on the quantitative theory of money? In their business they have in view the supply of money, but many of them in their arguments follow the teachings of the Clevelands and the Harrisons and maintain that all they want is intrinsic value in the money in circulation, no matter whether the volume is large or small."

In conclusion Mr. Stewart said:

"The passage of this bill, whatever may have been the intention of its authors, will bring this question squarely before the American people. If this bill should become a law there will be no dodging the issue. It must be met and that issue will be between a government by a colossal and imperial concentration of capital, wielding the sovereign power of the United States to create, contract, and expand the volume of money, and an honest measure of value consisting of the legal tender money of the United States."

Mr. Aldrich, (Rep., R. I.) in charge of the financial bill, asked to have some arrangement made regarding that measure. He asked if any other Senator desired to speak upon it.

Mr. Jones, (Dem., Ark.,) replied that no Democrat was ready to speak on the bill, but he assured Mr. Aldrich there was no disposition to delay it unduly.

Mr. Aldrich said the bill had been before the Senate for three weeks—an ample time in which to prepare for its discussion. Therefore, he had a right, he said, to insist that the bill should be disposed of as soon as possible. Mr. Teller (Silver, Col.,) asked if there were to be no speeches in support of the measure. To this Mr. Aldrich said he was unable to reply. Republicans, he thought, were prepared to vote upon it.

Mr. Teller regarded it as remarkable that a measure of such importance should go to a vote without discussion from all sides.

Mr. Aldrich replied that he had not defended the bill because it needed no defense. It spoke for itself. He had merely examined its provisions.

At the request of Mr. Aldrich the financial measure was postponed until 2 o'clock Monday next.

The Senate then agreed that when it adjourned to-day it be until Monday.

WITNESSES ACCUSE MR. CLARK.

Alleged Payment of Money to Montana Legislators Is Described in Detail.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Mr. Campbell, attorney for the memorialists in the case of Senator Clark of Montana, began his redirect examination of Witness Whiteside before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day.

Mr. Whiteside said that he had been a supporter of Mr. Clark until the Senatorial election of 1893, when, becoming convinced that Mr. Clark was using money to secure Republican votes for himself, he withdrew.

At this point Mr. Whiteside was withdrawn temporarily in order to allow State Treasurer T. E. Collins of Montana to testify. He had in his possession the $30,000 turned over to the State by Senators Whiteside, Clark of Madison, Myers, and McGarr. He identified and described each of the envelopes containing the money, and, holding the big bills up so as to get the benefit of full light, exhibited them to the members of the committee, while he described them in detail. Mr. Collins turned the envelopes over to the committee, and, laying the exposed bills on the table in front of him, continued his testimony.

Mr. Whiteside was then recalled, and identified the various envelopes as having been given to him to hold for himself and Messrs. Clark of Madison County, Myers, and McGarr.

State Senator W. A. Clark of Madison County, Mon., was next called. He testified that he had received $10,000 in one-thousand-dollar bills from United States Senator Clark's manager, Mr. Wellcome, on Jan. 4, 1897, and that the money was given to him on the express condition that he was to vote for Clark as long as his vote was wanted. He detailed the preliminary talk with Mr. Wellcome, saying Mr. Wellcome said to him:

"We want you with us, and we want you hard," adding: "We are going to get the votes necessary to elect our man, and if we don't get them one way we will get them another."

"I asked Wellcome what there was in it," the witness continued, "and he replied: 'There's ten thousand dollars for you, provided you comply with the condition,' the condition being that I vote for Mr. Clark as long as required."

Mr. Wellcome had told the witness that he would put the money in Mr. Whiteside's hands for him, but the latter asserted, replied he, that that was not satisfactory, that he did not doubt Mr. Wellcome's word, but that he "must see the money." Mr. Wellcome had told him that big bills were scarce, but that "the old man" would arrive from Butte that night and he would bring plenty of cash with him. Accordingly the money—$10,000 in one-thousand-dollar bills—was given to him by Wellcome that night. After counting it he had placed it in an envelope, marked the envelope, and handed it to Mr. Whiteside for safekeeping. He said that when Mr. Wellcome gave him the money he had called him over into a corner of his room and, holding the bills up, had said that he had a fine engraving he wanted to show him.

Attorney Foster cross-examined State Senator Clark. The witness said that before the meeting of the Legislature in January last he had not had a high opinion of Mr. Fred Whiteside, believing that his conduct in the State capital location matter had not been exemplary. Indeed, he had said before the Grand Jury which investigated Mr. Whiteside's connection with the matter that he believed he had acted in a "scoundrelly manner."

The plan for him to take the money from Wellcome and mark and identify it, and then turn it over to Whiteside had been agreed upon between himself and Wellcome, the latter laid it down on a steam radiator in the corner of the room.

"I was not interested in the picture on the wall to which Mr. Wellcome directed my attention," he said. "I was looking after the money."

Speaking of the fact that he had not kept some of his promises to Mr. Wellcome, the witness said that he did not consider it wrong to deceive "that kind of a man."

"Whether a misrepresentation is reprehensible," he said, in the same connection, "depends upon to whom you are making it."

MR. BLISS NOT A CANDIDATE.

Friends of the New York Merchant Deny that He Desires to Re-enter Public Life.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—To many persons in Washington who have known of the wish of the President to keep Secretary Root in the War Department and not to let him get away to be Vice President, it did not need the publication of the Milwaukee dispatch of yesterday denying Mr. Root's alleged desire to be the candidate to set that report at rest.

In the case of ex-Secretary Bliss it was different. Reports from New York have represented him as being receptive, but not as pressing for a nomination by seeking the aid of the men who choose delegates to National Conventions. When he came here a day or two ago, and was asked concerning the report, he made light of it. Since a statement was published representing him as having visited the White House to confer with the President concerning his candidacy he has been provoked, and he says things. Mr. Bliss is very much annoyed by the constant reiteration of the statement that he is to be the Vice Presidential candidate on the ticket with Mr. McKinley. It is extremely annoying and irritating to him to have this persistence after he has repeatedly explained that there is not and cannot be anything in it.

Mr. Bliss retired from the Cabinet on account of the ill-health of his wife and the demands of his business. In leaving the Cabinet he retired from public life, and it is not his intention, as he has said repeatedly to his friends, to re-enter it.

Those who are thoroughly familiar with the situation declare with great emphasis that there is absolutely no foundation for the idle gossip that is being indulged in to the effect that Mr. Bliss is the Administration candidate for Vice President. It is particularly annoying to Senator Hanna to have it stated that he is making selections of a Vice Presidential candidate to go on the ticket with Mr. McKinley. It is said by Mr. Hanna's friends that Mr. Hanna has no disposition to arrogate to himself the powers of the Republican National Convention, and that all talk of such proceedings on his part is idle nonsense. It is very generally understood that the suggestion of the name of Mr. Root or of Mr. Bliss, merely as a suggestion, was gratifying to the President; but the idea that either the President or Mr. Hanna would assume to dictate the nomination in advance of the convention is repugnant, and, as far as Mr. Bliss is concerned, it is disagreeable to him to be constantly put before the public as desiring re-entrance into public life.

Much stress has been laid upon Mr. Bliss's visits to the Executive Mansion Tuesday, but these are explained by the fact that, owing to the close friendly relations between the two, Mr. Bliss called on the President soon after his arrival, but, as the Cabinet was about to meet and the first visit was necessarily short, the President invited Mr. Bliss to dine with him that evening, and the invitation was accepted, and he dined alone with the President and Mrs. McKinley.

SPEAKER HENDERSON IS STRICT.

Curtails the Privileges of Newspaper Men in the House.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Speaker Henderson is promising to be a strict man. His predecessor was a stickler for most of the rules of the House, and went so far as to turn out all the dealers in curios, cigars, and refreshments who had "squatted" in the halls. Speaker Henderson has found other rules not strictly regarded.

The rules of the House say that the floor of the House shall be cleared of all persons except members fifteen minutes before the hour for meeting, and kept cleared until ten minutes after adjournment. Orders have been issued that this rule shall be kept by the Doorkeepers. While it drives off the floor a number of general visitors who linger there daily, it falls with something like distress upon newspaper men who have used the opportunity to see members up to five minutes before the falling of the gavel, thus getting ten minutes more than visitors, and they have been passed in immediately after adjournment, while the crowd has been kept out until the prescribed ten minutes have passed.

No complaint has been made that the rule was flagrantly violated by newspaper men. The custom of giving the reporters grace beyond the rules has been practiced without interruption by every speaker for many years. The Senate, which is much more particular in most respects than the House, extends some privileges to the press which are not provided by their rules, and only one occasion has arisen in four years for disciplining a newspaper man for breaking the regulations.

The privilege which is now withdrawn was enjoyed by the press during the entire term of the late Speaker Keifer, who violated rules which he had himself approved and undertook to put visitors into the press gallery, with results remembered by Gen. Keifer, though probably forgotten by most other persons.

RULE FOR THE PHILIPPINES.

Senator Spooner Introduces a Resolution Covering It.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Senator Spooner (Rep., Wis.,) to-day introduced the following bill:

"That when all insurrection against the authority and sovereignty of the United States in the Philippine Islands shall have been completely suppressed by the military and naval forces of the United States, all military, civil, and judicial powers necessary to govern the said islands shall, until otherwise provided by Congress, be vested in such persons and shall be exercised in such a manner as the President of the United States shall direct for maintaining and protecting the inhabitants of the said islands in the full enjoyment of their liberty, property, and religion."

MR. ROBERTS'S CASE DISCUSSED.

Committee Seeks to Make a Unanimous Report to the House.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The Roberts Investigating Committee held a protracted executive session to-day in hope of reaching a conclusion, but so many legal questions were discussed that a final result was not reached, nor was any vote taken indicating the standing of the committee. Another meeting will be held to-morrow.

A member of the committee is authority for the statement that the delay is due mainly to a desire to secure unanimity, and to avoid if possible two reports. The members are practically agreed on the facts involved. The differences relate to the manner of excluding Mr. Roberts.

NAVAL OFFICER A SUICIDE.

Schley Reports from Montevideo Lieut. Commander F. E. Greene Killed Himself Wednesday.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The following cablegram was received at the Navy Department to-day from Admiral Schley, commanding the South Atlantic Station:

"Montevideo, Jan. 11.

"To the Secretary of the Navy:

"Lieut. Commander F. E. Greene committed suicide Wednesday evening. Arrangements have been made for burial ashore. A board is ordered to examine the circumstances of the case and report."

The officer's friends at the department are at a loss to account for the suicide. His record was excellent, and he had no known bad habits.

Lieut. Commander Francis E. Greene was born in Indiana, and was appointed a midshipman in 1867. He was graduated in 1871, and went to the Congress. Becoming an Ensign in 1872 while on the Ticonderoga, he saw in succession duty on the monitors, on the Kansas, on the Shawmut, and in the Coast Survey. He became a Master in 1875, and a Lieutenant in 1882. He made cruises in turn on the Yantic, the Alert, and the New Hampshire, and came to the Naval Proving Ground here in 1890. The following year he was on duty at the Washington Navy Yard, where he remained until 1893, when he went to the Pacific Coast on the coast defense ship Monterey. He was in service on the Ranger, the Adams, the Petrel, and again at the Washington Navy Yard in 1896. In the following year he was attached to the Alliance, but when the war broke out he became the executive officer of the Montgomery. He became a Lieutenant Commander in 1899, and was again ordered to the Montgomery on the South Atlantic Station, where he was serving at the time of his death.

Navy.

Lieut. Commander J. C. Colwell is detached from duty as Naval Attaché at London, England, April 1; home and wait orders.

Government Vessels' Movements.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Admiral Farquhar's flagship, the New York, arrived at Barbados yesterday on her cruise through the West Indies.

The gunboat Machias has left San Juan for Santo Domingo, and the Lancaster has arrived at Ponce.

The cruiser Hartford left San Francisco yesterday bound for Valparaiso.

The transport Kilpatrick, with the Tenth Cavalry aboard, arrived at Galveston, Texas, yesterday afternoon.

The Terry arrived at Havana yesterday.

The Burnside, which arrived at Havana yesterday, sailed to-day for New York with seventy-six passengers.

JOHN Q. A. HOYT DEAD.

Succumbed to Heart Disease at His Home—Large Interests That He Had Been Identified With.

John Quincy Adams Hoyt, formerly one of the most prominent business men in this city and Chicago, and one of the original promoters of the present elevated railroad system of this city, died at his residence, 133 West Sixty-first Street, on Wednesday of heart disease.

Mr. Hoyt was born Dec. 8, 1827, in East Ware, New Hampshire, and was educated in the country schools there. He started in the wholesale grocery business when a very young man in Boston, and from there went to Chicago in 1856. He continued in business in the latter city, and soon became prominent in politics. He was an Alderman for many years, and during the civil war, in the absence of Mayor Rumsey, was Acting Mayor of the city. He was a staunch Republican and an intimate friend at that time of Gen. Grant, Gen. John A. Logan, Stephen A. Douglas, and other prominent men.

Coming to New York in 1868 Mr. Hoyt became associated with George Gilbert in the elevated railroad system, of which he was the originator, and which laid the foundation for the present elevated railroad system of this city. Public opinion was strongly against the new idea, and the funds of the elevated railroad company were so low that the charter granted to Mr. Gilbert would have been cancelled because the proper plans and specifications had not been presented at Albany had not Mr. Hoyt come to the rescue with his own money, which placed the company on its feet.

Shortly after this Mr. Hoyt built the New York and Putnam Railroad, which at first was intended to reach as far as Montreal, and which was known, at the time it was built as the New York, Boston and Montreal Railroad. Owing to the panic of 1873 it was never completed. At that time Mr. Hoyt was a Director of the New York Loan and Indemnity Company, which has since gone out of existence; the Central Vermont Railroad, and was associated with such men as Collis P. Huntington, William E. Dodge, Jesse Seligman, Joseph E. Stout, and Gov. J. Gregory Smith of Vermont.

Mr. Hoyt lost his fortune in the panic of 1873, but started in business again, and was interested in oil springs in Pennsylvania up to 1880, when he received a paralytic stroke. He leaves a widow and three sons. John Quincy Hoyt, Jr., the eldest son, is a traveler. Charles H. Hoyt is the organist in All Souls' Church, and was formerly a Captain in the Seventh and Seventy-first Regiments. Adelbert, the youngest son, is in the real estate business in this city.

In accordance with his own wish, Mr. Hoyt will be buried in the cemetery at Sleepy Hollow. He was an ardent admirer of Washington Irving, and desired that his body should rest in the neighborhood which Irving described, and in sight of the railroad which he himself had built.

Fatal Lamp Explosion in Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 11.—Mrs. Mary Theobold, aged fifty-six, was burned to death and her daughter, Lucinda, aged twenty-three, was fatally burned at their home in this city to-day. Miss Theobold was filling a lamp in front of a stove. An explosion followed, setting fire to her clothing. In attempting to save her daughter, Mrs. Theobold's clothing took fire, and before assistance arrived she was burned to death. Mrs. Theobold was the widow of Edward Theobold, for many years cashier of the Farmers' Bank of Kentucky at Frankfort.

More Escapes from Trenton School.

TRENTON, N. J., Jan. 11.—Elsie Field and Minnie Perrine, two inmates of the State Industrial School for Girls, made an effort to get away from Mrs. Eyler's care last night and enjoyed a short term of liberty. They stopped at Krutz's Hotel, at Trenton Junction, about two miles from the school, and before they started on were overtaken. Ten girls have escaped from the school during the last two months. Eight of them have been retaken.

THE MOSLER PICTURE SALE.

There are now on exhibition at the American Art Galleries, Madison Square South, ninety-eight oil paintings by the well-known American artist Henry Mosler, together with a varied collection of studio effects, including furniture, decorations, and Apache and Alaska Indian costumes, relics, trappings, and curiosities, and forty oils, five water colors, and ten drawings by other artists, chiefly of the modern German, English, and French schools, owned by Mr. Mosler. This collection will be sold at auction in the galleries—Mr. Mosler's own paintings on Thursday evening, Jan. 18, and the studio effects and paintings by other artists on the afternoon of Jan. 19.

While Mr. Mosler has been resident abroad for the most part since 1880, he is distinctively an American artist, and his home and friends are chiefly here. He passed his early years in Cincinnati, where he began his art studies under the well-known artist James H. Beard. During the civil war he was for two years attached to the staff of Harper's Weekly, and was also a volunteer aide de camp to Gen. R. W. Johnson. After the close of the war he went to Düsseldorf to continue his art studies, and thence to Paris, where he worked in the studio of the renowned French painter Hebert. He returned home after a brief sojourn abroad, to exhibit his well-known picture "The Lost Cause," which at once secured him recognition in art circles. Mr. Mosler was not content with his art and wisely returned to Europe in 1874, where, studying under the direction of Wagner and Piloty, in the Academy at Munich, he won a medal at the Royal Academy. From Munich he went to Paris, where he has since, with brief intervals, resided. He exhibited first at the Salon of 1878 and annually there since that time. In 1879 the French Government conferred upon him an honor, up to that time never accorded to any American artist, by its purchase of his second Salon picture, "Le Retour," for the Luxembourg Gallery. His Salon picture of 1880, "The Purchase of the Wedding Gown," was painted to the order of M. Turquet, Minister of Fine Arts of France, and is now in his private collection.

The pictures of Henry Mosler are to be found in the Luxembourg at Paris, the art museums of Sydney, Australia, and Grenoble, France, and in this country in the art galleries of Louisville, Ky., Springfield, Mass., Cincinnati, Ohio, the Polytechnic Institute, the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art in this city. Among the honors that have been awarded him are a gold medal at the International Exhibition of Nice, France, in 1884; the gold medal at the Salon of 1888, and a silver medal at the Paris Exposition of 1889. He wears the ribbon of a Chevalier of the French Legion of Honor, and is an Associate of the National Academy of Design, and an officer of the French Academy. In this country he has won the prize of $2,500 at the Prize Fund Exhibition of New York in 1883, the Thomas B. Clarke prize at the National Academy of Design in 1896, and the gold medal of the Philadelphia Art Club in 1897.

An artist who has sold pictures to the French Government and has won the decorations, medals, and prizes detailed above must have more than ordinary ability. Henry Mosler, while he has won his chief reputation as a genre painter, or a follower of the old Düsseldorf School of German story picture painters, is a far more versatile painter than even some of his admirers know. He has been and is a believer in the story picture, which some art lovers and students now call old-fashioned, but he many years ago broke away from a servile following, or copying, of the school in which he first studied and in his choice of subject, no less than in his treatment, gave new life to the wooden figures and the flat interiors which were so marked a characteristic of the Düsseldorf School. Influenced also by his French master and his studies of modern French art, he tried his hand, and with success, at landscape painting, and there are a number of plein-air landscapes and studies in the collection now to be sold, so full of air and light, so permeated with outdoor feeling, and, moreover, so marked by a freer and broader handling than his earlier work, that they will surprise and delight that portion of the public who have only known the artist through his genre work.

In noting Mr. Mosler's versatility one should not decry the merit of the genre pictures which have brought him his chief fame. The painter of "Le Retour," "The Husking Bee," "The Last Sacrament," "Invoking God's Blessing," "The Last Moments," and "The Ghost Story"—the last three in the collection now to be sold, deserves special honor from American art lovers, for these canvases have honored not only the American artist who painted them, but American art abroad. The stories that those now to be sold tell are those simple ones which appeal to universal human nature and which stir the hearts of young and old and rich and poor alike. Whether one in sympathy bows his head with the Puritan family at their simple meal in the rough log hut, while the father invokes God's blessing upon the food before them and upon themselves, studies the face of the dying old man and looks anxiously at those of the doctors considering what may prolong his "Last Moments," or a child again with the other children grouped around the old fireplace, listens with upturned face and bated breath to the grandmother as she relates "The Ghost Story," one feels that "touch of nature which makes the whole world kin." In each of these and his other more important genre pictures, Mr. Mosler has selected a good story full of human interest, and has told it well. His composition is always good, his drawing virile and truthful, his color effective and harmonious, and his accessories diligently and thoughtfully studied and carefully painted. He is a good delineator of character, and this trait he has brought out in some excellent portraits which, during the last two or three years, he has painted in New York. Local color and atmosphere, most important and most necessary to the genre painter, have also been always a careful study with the artist. He has lived among the poor whom he paints, has known their customs and has studied them in their daily tasks and sports. Note the details of costume, the quaint furniture in the "The Last Moments," and the touch reminiscent of Josef Ismels, in the rugged details of the room in "The Ghost Story." Mention must also be made of the artist's management of reflected light, particularly noticeable in "The Last Moments," where the light of dying day falls through the open window upon the doctors' faces and that of the old man, and the light reflected from the yawning fireplace on the faces of narrator and listeners in "The Ghost Story."

The large story pictures must not detain us too long, for there is much more to be seen in this collection so soon to be dispersed. There are a sunny and bright study of St. Mark's Place, Venice, full of light and air. "A Morning in Venice—On the Grand Canal," very delicate and charming in color, two or three sparkling little water colors; a little landscape, "The Willows," with fine sunlight effect; a Normandy landscape, "The Farm," with deep and rich color quality; an interior with figure, "The Old Chest," exceedingly decorative; another two-figure work, "Teaching the Koran," delightful in color; a charming plein-air study, "Girls at the Spring," fresh and clear in color; "A Low Tide—Normandy," a coast scene, which well shows the artist's versatility, full of atmosphere and good in color, and three landscapes especially good, "Puldu, Brittany," "Harvesters' Repose," and "Old Vitre."

A large study of "A Normandy Garden Grandcamp" has a foreground of green cabbages, which are rather insistent, but the cement cottages in the background are well painted, and the picture has much light and air. There is good painting also in "The Spare Hour—Catskills" and the "Broken Sabot." "Helping Grandpa" is a good outdoors, with well drawn figures and an excellent story. "A Summer Dream" has a delicate color scheme and is suggestive of some of F. A. Bridgeman's work.

"The Coquette—First Empire" is a good character study, and there are some heads which are well worth attention.

Enough has been said to show those art lovers who do not know Henry Mosler's work that it is worthy of their attention. Story pictures are still popular, but to those art lovers or buyers who care more for landscape or portrait work the collection offers many opportunities. Among Mr. Mosler's pictures by other artists there are a few excellent examples, including a characteristic water color by Gustave Doré, a study, "Reverie," by Saunier; two charming little landscapes by Pelouse, a thoroughly good example of the lamented W. L. Picknell; some fifty of whose works are to be sold at auction next week at the Avery Galleries, and a characteristic marine by the late Harry Chase. Mr. Mosler's studio effects contain some fine tapestries, antique brass and copper lamps and water vessels, some excellent bronzes, a number of authentic old French and Italian male and female costumes, together with Apache and Alaskan Indian costumes, relics and trappings, as said above, which should delight the collector of such articles.

The Discount Absurdity.

It was mere chance that prompted us to use Clerical Suits to illustrate the way credit houses affect liberality by allowing discounts and commissions to certain classes.

We could have chosen thousands of other things to demonstrate how such a policy is opposed to economy and justice—for the store is full of them. However, we are glad we hit upon Clerical Suits. It struck a popular chord.

It may be of advantage to you—or to some one you know—for us to repeat the argument:

Clerical Suits, made of fine soft finished Clay diagonals, lined with mohair serge, thoroughly well-tailored, sold elsewhere at $18.00

Less 10 per cent usually allowed to ministers by credit houses $1.80

Net cost of suit $16.20

$12.98 is our price for precisely the same kind of Suit—identical material, tailoring and finish. And we show others made of serviceable raw worsted, sold elsewhere at $22.50; our price $14.58.

Clerical Suits made to order of fine Clay diagonal, $22.47; of undressed worsted, $23.74; nicely trimmed and thoroughly tailored. Either will cost you a third more elsewhere.

The above remarks are not printed at random. They are the results of accurate—almost judicial investigation.

We take this occasion to say that ministers can decide which store serves them best—ours with rock-bottom prices and no discounts, or others with sky-rocketty prices and small discounts.

Any public interest that accords and encourages special privileges is unsound. Man and master—mistress and maid—rich and poor—reach the same price-level when they trade here.

Another thought. If giving commissions and discounts is a good, fair principle why don't the stores that practice it give it the same publicity they give to other features? There's an air of secrecy about such transactions.

Beneficiaries of the system are tacitly given to understand that it's a matter not to be talked about.

You know of stores that give discounts and commissions to dressmakers, guardians, coachmen and many others. But did you ever read an acknowledgment of it in their advertisements?

Agate Kitchen Ware.

We believe New York is a bad market for "Seconds." Women have come to watch for the scarlet letters that brand agate ware as being damaged. Our stock is free from all such. We sell only firsts. Hygienic, intelligent and economical women want no other kind.

THEY BOW TO PUBLIC OPINION.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER and Mr. HAVEMEYER, the two greatest trust makers and trust managers in the country, have at last recognized the principle that the big industrial concerns they control can no longer be managed as a blind pool, but must admit their shareholders, and consequently the public, to a reasonable knowledge of their operations and their results.

It was in his written answer to the questions of the Industrial Commission that Mr. JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER suggested this project of legislation in regard to industrial combinations:

First, Federal legislation, under which corporations may be created and regulated, if that be possible.

Second, in lieu thereof, State legislation as nearly uniform as possible, encouraging combinations of persons and capital for the purpose of carrying on industries, but permitting State supervision, not of a character to hamper industries, but sufficient to prevent frauds upon the public.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER has probably been advised that without a Constitutional amendment the Federal Congress cannot grant charters to general business corporations. His second suggestion, therefore, must be accepted as the definite and practical plan put forward by the chief of the Standard Oil Company for the regulation of trusts by statute. The plan has three distinct features: (1) Uniformity of corporation laws of the States throughout the Union, which is a much-needed remedy for rapidly-growing evils; (2) the encouragement of combinations of capital by law, instead of passing laws to punish and prevent such combinations; (3) "State supervision sufficient to prevent frauds upon the public." The greatest of the three is this last, for upon that hangs the chief count in the indictment against the trusts. Coming from a great trust magnate, too, it is the most surprising of the three. It admits the principle of publicity in corporate management. It means that in Mr. ROCKEFELLER'S view the affairs of a great trust should no longer be managed by a few Directors or head men behind closed doors, that its millions of capital may no longer be handled and juggled with in complete disregard of the public interest, and that dividends may no longer be diminished, withheld, or increased without informing the shareholders—and the public—of the business facts that have warranted the policy pursued. This is what State supervision means if it means anything. Nothing less will satisfy the public, or cure the evils of secret management.

How urgent is the necessity for a law that will make it impossible for trusts to do all their deeds in darkness may be judged from the language of Justice VAN BRUNT in RICE vs. ROCKEFELLER:

> There being no proof upon the trial of the agreements under which the Standard Oil Trust was formed, our sole knowledge as to the position and duties of the defendants, the Trustees under said agreements, is derived from the allegations of the complaint so far as they were admitted by the answer. * * * In fact, we know little or nothing of, the internal arrangements or constitution of this association and cannot therefore determine the rights of parties interested in these certificates.

The law needs mending when the courts are forced to tell the purchasers of securities bought in open market that they are unable, on account of the secrecy with which the corporation is managed, to determine what their rights are as shareholders. Mr. ROCKEFELLER'S plan provides the remedy.

Mr. HAVEMEYER made his new confession of faith in his annual report at the stockholders' meeting of the Sugar Trust. It is notorious that this concern has never given its stockholders or the public any information about its affairs. The curiosity of the holders of the common stock has been lulled by continuous 12 per cent. dividends, and the public has been told to mind its own business. But while 12 per cent. dividends are quite palatable without the sauce of explanation, the passing of a dividend calls loudly for a statement of the reasons that have made it necessary. Accordingly, Mr. HAVEMEYER thought it expedient to make a statement, the only one of the kind that has ever been made officially about the operations of the Sugar Trust. He did not say that the dividend would be passed, but he did say plainly that the profits of the concern had been diminished. Here is his statement in regard to the dividend:

> I cannot, of course, say what your Directors will do in the matter of declaration of dividends in the future. Such declaration can be made by them alone, and will be made under the situation which will then exist.
> I am very sure, however, that when the duty of determining the amount of dividend is imposed upon them they will take into careful consideration the fact of a reduction of profits which has resulted from the policy which has been pursued. I do not believe you would desire them to declare any dividend which would weaken the financial strength of the company, or would render it less able in the future than it has always been in the past to look ahead without fearing the result of any policy which may be deemed advantageous. Speaking for myself, I say, with as much force of statement as is possible, that I would oppose any such declaration of dividend.

That is not very much, but from Mr. HAVEMEYER to his own stockholders it is what the open heart and white-souled candor are to other men. The President of the American Sugar Refining Company tells the holders of the company's shares that it has not made so much money as in former years. That is a new policy. It is a concession to the principle of publicity in the management of trusts.

We do not think that remorse of conscience or a prayerful resolve to lead a better life has prompted these warriors of finance to this new and notable departure from their old policies and practices. They have yielded to the cumulative pressure of public opinion, as every man must yield to it if the public thinks it worth while to make him yield.

Combinations of capital are not of their nature evil. They may be beneficent. Mr. ROCKEFELLER spoke the truth when he told the Industrial Commission that they cheapened production, reduced prices to the consumer, and made it possible to pay high wages. Not all the trusts confer these benefits on the public, but many do, and are justified thereby. But a trust that does business in a cave, that is based on secret agreements, and that offers its securities to investors but withholds from them all knowledge of its operations is an evil and a menace whose continued existence the public will not tolerate. The managers of the Sugar Trust and of the Standard Oil Company have evidently come to that conclusion. They and the public are to be congratulated.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN CAMPAIGN.

It is no wonder at all that the British public should have begun to show itself very weary of the military conduct of the war in South Africa. Two little republics, containing a total of not more than 50,000 men of arms-bearing age, have for three months, dating from the issue of the Boer ultimatum, succeeded in standing off the British Empire. They have really done much more than that. The whole contest thus far has been fought on nominally British soil, and the horrors of war, so far as they affect non-combatants, have fallen upon nominally British subjects. Meanwhile the English have had in the field 120,000 men. That is to say, they have outnumbered more than two to one the whole fighting population of the South African Republic and the Orange Free State. According to a very experienced and apparently a very shrewd observer, Mr. J. B. ROBINSON, who has been giving the benefit of his observations to The London Daily News, the real disparity is much greater. His estimate is that the Boers, of both States, have not more than 30,000 men in the field. This would make the odds in favor of the British four to one. Given military equality and given the enormous superiority of the invaders in everything except fighting qualities, the advantages of position the Boers enjoy ought to have been more than neutralized. Why have they not been neutralized? Why, three months after the war has begun, have the British been on the defensive within their own borders and the Boers on the offensive within British territory?

These are the questions which all thoughtful Englishmen must be asking themselves in private and which Englishmen who are not conspicuously thoughtful are asking with much heat in public. No wonder! The prestige of the British Empire as a military power is not so much "at stake" as it is lost and needing to be regained. A "show" is being made of the British Army in the only war it has fought with white men for nearly half a century. That Englishmen should be bitter, that they should be hunting for a scapegoat, is in these circumstances a mere matter of course. The question where the blame lies is so much agitating them that friendly foreigners may be excused for interesting themselves in it.

It was NAPIER, the British historian of the Peninsular War, who first said that the British were "warlike but not military." It is KINGLAKE, the British historian of the Crimean war, who ceaselessly repeats the phrase and who seems to regard the immeasurable incompetency shown in the staff departments of the British Army during that conflict as somehow proof of the national genius for battle. As a matter of fact, the national contempt for professional military training was expressed much earlier than the time of either of these writers and by no less a person than JOHN DRYDEN. Englishmen have to admit, said DRYDEN, that the French are as much better critics than they as they are worse poets, just as he courteously adds, "we all have to admit that they understand the management of war better than we do, although, of course, we are fully aware that we can beat them." And the result of several centuries of action upon this dictate of national self-conceit was summed up by CARLYLE in his account of the battle of Fontenoy: "The English officers, it is evident, behaved in their usual manner, without knowledge of war or fear of death."

That seems to be very much the manner in which they have been behaving in South Africa. What is now called "the frontal attack," directed upon enemies who have chosen their own position and fortified it in view of such an attack and with the hope that their enemy might be foolish enough to make it, is an illustration of the mental attitude toward war which last year we came to look upon as Spanish. This attitude of mind regards war, not as the most serious of all businesses, but as the "sport of Kings" and of aristocrats, of which the object is to display personal gallantry rather than to "get there." That is a curious anomaly for the most businesslike nation of the modern world, except the speakers of the same language in other countries and the Germans. Why should the tactics of METHUEN and BULLER at the end of the nineteenth century repeat the tactics of BRADDOCK in the middle of the eighteenth? Why should the scornful Briton reject the advice of humble but intelligent provincials like GEORGE WASHINGTON and insist upon going to meet the enemy in his own position for no better reason than that it would not befit the "dignity of his Majesty's troops" to take reasonable precautions for their own safety?

That this is the principle upon which the British campaign has been conducted would be made plain, if there were no other evidence, by the acclamations which have greeted in England the remark of the American attaché in Natal, who was shown the formidable strength of the Boer position and who made answer in the form of a question: "Isn't there any way around?" That was the natural suggestion of anybody who had been trained to regard war as a game in which the more skillful combatant won, and not as a means of showing that the officers were not afraid. Accordingly, officers and military students of all nationalities are agree that there has been nothing creditable to the British Army in the South African campaign except the splendid and unavailing gallantry of the officers and men, since the rapid transport of 50,000 men is a tribute to the efficiency, not of the British Army, but of the British mercantile marine, of which the efficiency has not been called in question.

This is the old story. It has been supposed that since the abolition of purchase and the consequent democratization of the British Army it had become more like other armies, always excepting the officers of the Guards, who, as before, were fulfilling their function if they "existed beautifully" in time of peace and risked their own lives freely in time of war, and who were not supposed to know anything about war. But it seems that under the long and paralyzing régime of the Duke of CAMBRIDGE the old system has been too much for the new blood. The British Army, engaged against a foe one-quarter of its own numbers, has shown itself helpless to do anything but to die very handsomely. There are, of course, exceptions to the rule. There are British officers who have studied their profession as thoroughly as the officers of any other army. But they do not seem to attain commands or to be intrusted with the laying out of battles, much less of campaigns. Whether the rumor of Lord METHUEN'S insanity is well or ill founded, it is one which his friends should apparently hesitate before rejecting, if they are solicitous about his reputation. The last words of Gen. WAUCHOPE, just before giving up his own life in pursuance of orders which he thought insane, frame an indictment against the whole scheme of the campaign and its conduct on the British side. They come to the same criticism upon the British Army in the nineteenth century which CARLYLE passed upon its conduct in the eighteenth—that the British officers behave themselves "without knowledge of war or fear of death."

THE SCHOOL BILLS.

Two important bills relating to the schools of this city were introduced in the Senate yesterday. They are sound in principle, and if they stand the test of discussion as to their practical details, they should be passed.

One of these bills, introduced by Senator GRADY, is prepared by Controller COLER, and is intended to meet the difficulties that have arisen with regard to the payment of teachers' salaries. It simply puts it in the power of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment to use the money appropriated for the total requirements of the schools for any particular requirement for which it is needed, provided that it is not needed for the one for which it was originally set apart. It also authorizes the use of unexpended balances left over from a previous year. In effect the situation of the schools for the past year has been that plenty of money was raised and appropriated for all their needs, but that in dividing it up some branches got too much and others did not get enough. Among the latter were the teachers' salaries, and the teachers suffered accordingly, besides having their rights tangled up in the interpretation of the Ahearn law. The Controller is of the opinion that the bill he has prepared will prevent any such trouble in the future. He is a careful and capable financier, and in treating the numerous trying questions raised in connection with our complex and bothersome consolidation he has shown himself surprisingly acute, broad and accurate. His opinion in a matter of this sort can be accepted with entire confidence.

The second bill, introduced by Senator ELSBERG, is much more important, and goes to the root of most of the defects in the present system, or lack of system. Instead of the cumbersome borough boards, and the central board, now existing, it provides for a Board of Education for the city to consist of 39 members. Of these 21 shall be appointed from the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, 12 from the Borough of Brooklyn, and 3 each from the Boroughs of Queens and Richmond, and the members from each sub-division shall constitute the School Board for that sub-division. Under this arrangement the borough boards will be practically committees of the Board of Education, which will possess the powers given to the several School Boards now in existence. The central board will have more power than at present, and a corresponding increase in responsibility. Greater harmony, consistency, and vigor will be had in the general administration of the business side of the school system. The wretched confusion, delay, and inefficiency from which the schools have so sorely suffered in the past two years will be remedied.

As important as this reform, and in line with it, is the change provided for in the Department of Supervision and Superintendence. The Superintendent of Schools is given authority to select from the Borough Superintendents and the Associate Superintendents three persons to be Deputy Superintendents of Schools for the rest of the terms for which they have been appointed, and at the close of their terms their successors shall be appointed by the Board of Education on the nomination of the Superintendent of Schools for six years. The intention of the bill evidently is to give some real force and effect to the authority of the Superintendent of Schools, which at present is in many considerable regards only nominal. The principle on which the present system was supposed to be based was that of legislative and business functions in the boards and executive and regulating functions in the hands of the Superintendent and his assistants, as experts, under the general authority of the boards. But in neither direction was the principle applied. The powers of the boards were largely frittered away by sub-division, while the powers of the superintending body suffered still more from the same process.

We do not know exactly what strength Senator ELSBERG'S bill possesses in the Legislature. The Senator himself is one of the most intelligent and trustworthy of our legislators, and we are sure that the principle of his bill must receive the cordial approval of the enlightened friends of the schools. The adoption of that principle is absolutely necessary to their rescue from the relatively backward condition into which they have been allowed to fall.

BRYAN AND ATKINSON!

The anti-imperialists appear to have clasped hands with the silver folks. Heretofore the American friends of AGUINALDO have contented themselves with declaring that his glorious cause was paramount in our politics, and that his triumph was more to be desired than BRYAN'S defeat. But that was mere talk, and in the air. Now we have reports of negotiations for an actual union of the forces of Bryanism and anti-imperialism. A press dispatch from Minneapolis tells of the nature of the relations established:

> ELWOOD S. CORSER, representing the National Silver Republican Party in its negotiations with the Democrats and Populists, has just returned from a conference of anti-imperialists in Chicago, at which it was agreed to hold a National meeting at Philadelphia on Feb. 22, and another, probably in Chicago, just before the National Republican Convention meets. At the latter meeting it is the intention to make declaration that no party or candidate opposed to the recognition of the Filipinos shall receive its support. This will be meant as a warning to the Republicans.

That is the way coalitions are effected in politics. But what are the anti-imperialists to get? If they get recognition proportioned to the number of voters they claim to be in sympathy with their purposes no mere Cabinet promises will suffice. They will demand a place on the ticket; and as their great multitude of votes will decide the election they will get it. BRYAN would jump at the chance to buy the Presidency by giving the second place to the Aguinaldists.

The next question is, Who is their candidate for Vice President? Will the ticket be BRYAN and ATKINSON?

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Well justified as are the frequent complaints from the pedestrian public of the dangers and alarms to which it is subjected by the youthful or inexperienced drivers to whom so many vehicles used for commercial purposes in this city are intrusted, it is a mistake to give undivided attention to this phase of the question and to neglect another at least as important and perhaps more so. Boyish recklessness and mature incompetence are indeed bad enough when they are combined with equine stupidity, but the drivers with these characteristics rarely threaten anything worse than unintentional assault or involuntary homicide, and as a general rule the person on foot, by the exercise of a little ordinary care, can keep out of their way. It is among the private or semi-private coachmen, men thoroughly versed in the whole science of driving, that there are to be found in numbers far from inconsiderable the out-and-out criminals against whom the walking element of the city's population stands first in need of protection. It is beneath the dignity of these fellows to pay any attention whatever to people who from necessity or preference trust to personal means of locomotion, and they insolently ignore or more insolently reprove the pedestrian who ventures to get into what they falsely imagine is their way. They have never been taught, or have refused to learn, that a man or woman afoot has as many rights on a crosswalk as on a sidewalk, and that there the obligation to exercise especial caution rests upon the driver of horses, no less when he is mounted upon a stately coach than when he conducts the humble butcher's cart. It is usually safer to cross a business street, no matter how crowded, than it is to negotiate the crosswalks near the Metropolitan Opera House just before or after the performance closes.

—Stray specimens of the new "Lafayette dollars" have now reached this region, and the result of their arrival is a notable deepening of the midwinter gloom. In some ways these coins are highly admirable. The mechanical workmanship, for example, is simply perfect, and then, again, they are still so rare that the possession of one of them is a valid claim upon the interest and attention of all your acquaintances. It is only when the Lafayette dollar is considerad as an artistic achievement that the opportunity for criticism of the adverse kind begins. Without pretending to speak with professional authority, it is safe to say that no coin ever issued from an American mint was better calculated to inspire humility. For, judged by ordinary standards, this addition to our silver tokens is an ugly thing—so ugly, fortunately, that one can laugh at it and thus mitigate the sadness it would otherwise produce. The superimposed portraits on one side will carry no suggestion of either Washington or Lafayette to the average observer, and as for the man and horse on the other side, they really must be a mysterious numismatic joke. Certainly nothing just like them has been stamped on gold or silver since Homeric times. When one remembers that some of these coins are to be sent abroad, and to Paris at that, the seriousness of the situation is apparent. The foreign connoisseurs are sure to express their minds very frankly on such a subject, and cruel words are hard to bear—when they happen to be quite true. American coins, as a rule, have ranged from enduable to good, and it is indeed unfortunate that this particular coin should not deserve a place in even the humbler of these two catagories.

—Humiliating as it is to admit again to this column a topic that was sternly banished from it only two days ago, still we are going to do it. Capt. C. H. DAVIS, Superintendent of the United States Naval Observatory, has made some remarks on century endings and beginnings, and his views are so delightfully accurate and vigorous that the mere breaking of a rash resolution is as nothing compared with the pleasure of presenting such high support for our own arguments. "There can be," says the Captain, with an impatience which we are proud to share, "there can be no question of 'opinion' as to the date of the commencement of the twentieth century any more than there can be a question of opinion on any other simple arithmetical fact. The twentieth century commences with the 1st day of January, 1901. An 'opinion' that it commences on the 1st day of January, 1900, if logically sustained, must rest upon the assumption that the enumeration of the years of the Christian era, unlike any other arithmetical series to which serial numbers are, have been, or can be assigned, commences with zero instead of one, and that 'the first year of the era' and the 'year one of the era' are not interchangeable terms, an assumption which is manifestly untenable; or else it must rest on the assumption that some one century since the commencement of the era has contained ninety-nine years, instead of 100 years—also untenable." There is the decision of an astronomer, of a man to whom the problems of chronological computation are thoroughly familiar, and he says that to this particular problem there is only one possible solution, and that a most simple and obvious one.

—We fail to see any material difference between the statement made by the Navy Department officials in regard to the withholding of Lieut. GILLMORE'S salary from his wife and the version of the episode which they declare to be untrue. They do, indeed, give a new explanation of how the trouble arose, and they apparently deny that the lady was required formally to protect the timid Government from paying the money twice over, but they admit that for three months the allotment was not forthcoming, and after all that was the only part of the story that counted for much. And even in the revised version there is one passage that would be the better for both defense and explanation. It seems that the arrangement made by Lieut. GILLMORE terminated in April. That he would have extended it if he had been able to do so was manifest, and an opinion on the legal possibility of taking his consent for granted was immediately asked of the Paymaster General. Not until July 19 did that official decide that the department regulations provided for such cases and that the allotment could be continued. Was deliberation so prolonged absolutely necessary? The question presented was not particularly complex, and the delay certainly hints at the unrolling of whole miles of red tape. We could easily have understood an immediate refusal to take the action requested, for there is obvious danger in making any assumptions whatever in regard to the disposition of an absent man's salary; but if the right to make the assumption really did exist, why should it take three months to discover it? All's well that ends well, however, and as Mrs. GILLMORE is not exploiting her grievance, it is not becoming in others to get excited over it. Still, three months are twelve weeks, and over, and, as everybody knows, department officials work long hours.

—Now, after everybody had become familiar with the new arrangement of street signs—and thoroughly reconciled to it, just as we knew they would be—our amiable Aldermen come along with some gratuitous advice on the subject and do their little best to stir the well-settled matter all up again! That's just like our Aldermen—indeed, it's just like Aldermen in general. But as the official in charge of the signs has firmly endured one storm of criticism, he can doubtless stand another one, and we refuse to get anxious about the permanency of his wise and courageous innovation. The signs are all right as they are, and the condemnation of them by the Aldermen ought to remove all lingering regrets for the abandoned system.

ART AND ARCHITECTURE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The notion which I imagine many Americans have that the Manhattan Office Building is a monstrous freak of art is one that can be easily shown to be erroneous. It bears numerous and evident marks of its legitimate and direct descent from the timbered street buildings of the mediæval cities.

In Hildesheim and Goslar and other cities of Europe where the Middle Ages have lingered the traveler may yet study the top-heavy but very beautiful street houses which we class as timbered architecture. Such a house consists of a frame of heavy oaken timbers or joists, and the interstices of this frame are filled with brick or stone masonry. A wall so built combines the toughness or stoutness of a ship with the solidity of a stone wall. The laws of gravity have very little application to it. That is why they are so tall and top-heavy, as any one can see, with their upper stories each projecting beyond the one below, and their steeply pitched gables rising to a dizzy height. Top-heavy and regardless of the laws of gravity as they are, they have stood, some of them, from the beginning of the sixteenth century, and are to-day as strong apparently as when first built. I have seen such houses, built before the discovery of America, some of them with walls leaning and bulging, yet there is as little prospect of them tumbling down as there is that the Brooklyn Bridge will collapse. Such walls lean and bulge, but never crack or break.

Now the difference between, take for a well-known example the Butchers' Guildhaus in Hildesheim, which was recently destroyed by fire, and, say, the Syndicate Building, on Park Row, only arises from the difference between an oaken beam and a steel girder. Build the framework of the house of iron beams instead of oak beams and apply the masonry so as not only to fill the interstices between the beams but also to cover the whole framework from view, and you have the Manhattan Office Building. The difference in size between the old building and the new is the difference in strength between a wooden beam and a steel beam.

Besides using a different and stronger material, which makes their buildings larger than the European buildings, the Americans have a way of burying and hiding the frame structure in the masonry, and this causes a tremendous difference in artistic effect.

The frame of the Butchers' Guildhaus had all its outer surface exposed; the masonry only filled the interstices to the edge of the beams. Thus exposed, the frame of course became the subject of decoration and was beautifully carved and painted, and fancifully bracketed and put together with as much regard for the laws of art as of mechanics.

Now substitute, for the sake of its greater range of power, the steel for the wooden frame, as in Manhattan. It is no longer possible to expose it, on account of the corroding effect of the weather; and, buried in the wall, the one and only requirement of a frame is to be strong. The decoration must now be wholly upon the masonry, and it cannot be said that the Manhattan Office Buildings are neglected in this respect. Thus it is that while all the decoration of the Guildhaus is on the frame and none on the masonry, the reverse is the case on the Syndicate Building, where all the frame is vanished.

These differences in artistic effect are exceedingly great—great enough to render the American buildings strikingly peculiar and original, yet not great enough to conceal their relationship to the timbered structures of the Old World. It cannot be said that while the Guildhaus bears visible evidence of its timbered structure, the Syndicate Building conceals it and assumes to be a solid masonry building. The very loftiness and proportions of both buildings betray the frame within. It is plain to the eye that without such a frame the walls of both structures would crumble under their own weight. Buildings that soar or topple with impunity have sinews in their walls.

One other point I would like to bring out is that timbered or framed architecture has always been the peculiar and almost exclusive property of commerce and the commercial and lower classes. The oldest examples of it were and are for the most part to be found in the Hansa towns of Northern Europe. It is the architecture of the storage warehouse, the shops, and the office buildings of all times, and in the olden time before caste was abolished it was the house architecture of the merchant, the peasant, the city's multitudes. After its manner were fashioned the handsome structures of the "Reichenstrasse," or Fifth Avenue, of commercial towns, the rural cottage, the porter's lodge, the tenements of the poor cities.

The towns of Northern Europe in Elizabeth's time consisted almost entirely of buildings in this style. Castles, palaces, and cathedrals alone were of another type.

And so in taking possession of the lower end of Manhattan, this style of building has gotten exactly into the place where it properly belongs, and in developing there a form strikingly new and original has done something entirely dignified and interesting to Americans.

HOWARD M. CANNON.

New York, Jan. 10, 1900.

MISS HELEN GOULD'S CHARITY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An article appearing in THE TIMES of Jan. 6, "Helen Gould to the Rescue," reminds me how many times Miss Gould has come and is coming to the rescue. From the time Miss Gould gave $100,000 to the Government at the beginning of the Spanish-American war her name has been before the public in deeds and actions that are so noble and bright that the American people recognize her as one of our noblest women. When the sick and wounded arrived at Montauk Point, and Miss Gould saw so many things they needed and how long it would be before the Commissary could supply them, she gave to Mrs. Helen Walworth, "who was in charge of the nurses," permission to draw at sight for $25,000 to supply their immediate wants. Under the circumstances it was one of the most noble acts a woman could do.

But there it did not end. From pure and generous charity she has continued to show good, sound sense and a tender heart in her recorded benefactions. On another occasion one of the hospital ships was being fitted up at or near Twenty-fourth Street, East River, and which Miss Gould was deeply interested in and had furnished much of the paraphernalia, and on leaving asked if there was anything more she could do. She was informed a few things more were needed, and she took $300 from her purse, remarking if more was wanted to call on her.

The soldiers at Governors Island and Forts Wadsworth and Hamilton were agreeably reminded two or three times a week of Miss Gould's charitable work by the good things they received. The hospital fitted up in East Fifteenth Street, of which Miss Gould was the leading spirit, helped many of the soldiers that were convalescing, as well as the one at Tarrytown.

Another instance, the Windsor Hotel fire, where Miss Gould opened and turned her own house into a hospital, showed the spirit of her goodness, and how her great, big heart as well as her purse has been opened in relieving the distressed and burying the dead, which she has done on several occasions.

In am one of those that firmly believe every person born into this world has a mission to perform, and as I believe it was Mr. Jay Gould's mission to acquire a fortune, so I believe it is Miss Gould's mission to devote time and money aiding and caring for many of the suffering. How well she has performed that duty thousands will join me in testifying. It may well be engraved on her headstone, "Miss Helen Miller Gould, the Daughter of the American Republic."

THAT TWENTIETH CENTURY AGAIN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is amusing in the midst of all the dogmatic infallibility of THE TIMES concerning the mathematical inaccuracy of calling 99 years 100, in the midst of all its epithets "derisory or comminatory," which it will not withdraw, to see no flicker of historical intelligence penetrate so far as the editorial sanctum. We suppose that it must be mathematical facts, and not historical ones, upon which THE TIMES professes to be in a place of certainty from which it can look with scorn on lesser intelligences.

A good many of us have duly celebrated the incoming of a twentieth century, in spite of the derision which will not be withdrawn, and have done so not because of mathematical accuracy, for that is impossible, but because we have been creditably informed by the usual sources of such historical information, which even THE TIMES probably has access to, though it may not use them, that there has always been an inaccuracy of three or four years in our calendar. We are now, as a matter of fact, in the twentieth century, and have been for several years. In other words, Christ was born in the year 4 or 5 B. C. The twentieth century after Christ came in, therefore, some time ago. No one can say exactly when. We do not profess to be historically accurate. High professions of such accuracy are historically amusing. It is fitting enough to celebrate a twentieth century at some time, but it is practically impossible to celebrate it at the right time. Nineteen hundred seems a very fitting time in the absence of any possible accuracy, for with the coming of 1900 attention is manifestly drawn to the fact. Nothing could illustrate that point better than this discussion has done. Seeing as we are all mistaken, it is sensible for sentiment to accompany the change of figures. Anyhow, the nineteen hundred and one-ers are in too much of a glass house to throw stones at those who celebrate in 1900.

So there is no historical accuracy, no mathematical accuracy; there is only custom about it; that is all there can ever be for the most infallible of us, seeing as we are all hopelessly wrong. Archbishop Trench used to say that we are "none of us infallible, not even the youngest of us"; the dictum is still true, and might be worded, "not even the most positive of us," and be equally reliable.

More Post Office Clerks Needed.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have seen an article in your edition of Monday last to the effect that the Merchants' Association and also the Board of Trade and Transportation have taken active steps to procure a new Post Office.

The New York office is the clearing house for all the domestic mails and all the foreign mails, and, as such, is the most important office, and it should therefore possess working room sufficiently large to handle all the mails in a proper manner. But, while all will acknowledge that a new building is an absolute necessity, the fact should not be lost sight of that the inefficient service in New York is mainly due to the small clerical force. This office yields a larger and larger revenue to the Government every year; still its working force is not increased. You cannot mention a single enterprise which involves a greater responsibility, and which involves so many millions and millions of dollars, and yet the real working force amounts to but 1,400 men—I dare say "a mere drop in the bucket."

So, while the commercial bodies of our city should be thanked for taking these active steps for the procurement of a new Post Office building, their work will be only half done if they do not secure an increase in the clerical force.

The United States needs a large navy, but what would be the use of great battleships with all modern equipments if they did not have enough men? And just so with the Post Office Department. It may possess elegant buildings, with all improvements, but it would be of no avail if there were not a force sufficiently large to make use of these improvements.

Meyerbeer's Coronation March.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In this morning's review of Meyerbeer's "Le Prophete," given last night at the Metropolitan Opera House, your erudite critic "slates" nearly every person and everything concerned in that representation, and caps the climax of condemnation by calling the coronation march "antique."

Of course Meyerbeer did not furnish an up-to-date cakewalk, and it may be possible that your critic has knowledge of an opera march musically superior, or more original, but that is somewhat doubtful.

On the dramatic stage "Hamlet" and "Romeo and Juliet" might be classed as "antiques," yet people of culture appreciate their superlative beauties, without sneering at their age.

That there were some faulty vocal features, as there are in all grand opera representations, is not denied, but that the originality and musical grandeur of Meyerbeer's coronation march are yet to be surpassed will be conceded by all competent musical critics.

The Baker Family Provided For.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The public will be interested in knowing that the appeal for contributions to procure a home for the Baker family of South Carolina has brought the desired amount and that further solicitation is unnecessary. The contributions aggregate $1,492.55, which has been expended as follows:

House	$1,250.00
Plumbing	95.00
Taxes and insurance	23.78
Clothing	21.25
Furniture	69.10
Provisions, groceries, &c.	33.42
Total	$1,492.55

Mrs. Baker and her children are comfortably established and are working for their own support. They desire to express their gratitude to the public for the kindness shown them.

Etymology of "Aprosopoleptic."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The suggestion of the significance of the meaning of the word "aprosopoleptic," as applied to the bullet that The London News hoped might not close the picturesque career of Winston Churchill, was a "fancy." Aprosopia does, indeed, mean the absence of the greater part of the face and relates to monstrosities, but the word quoted from The London News is probably no more or less original coinage, composed of alpha, or "a," privative, and "prosopolepsy": the first letter meaning "without," the rest of the word "regard for a person, or prejudice against him, on account of his personal appearance."

Pennsylvania Road Pensions.

From The Philadelphia Ledger.

To correct a misapprehension concerning the pensions to be paid by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company to its employes retired under its new pension system The Ledger is requested to state that payments will be "for each year of service 1 percentum of the average regular monthly pay for the ten years preceding retirement." The pensioners are to consist of two classes. First, all officers and employes who shall have attained the age of seventy years; second, all officers and employes sixty-five to sixty-nine years of age, inclusive, who shall have been thirty or more years in the service, and shall, in the opinion of the Board of Officers, have become physically disqualified.

NOVA ATALANTA VINDEX.

Edward F. Burns, '80, at Boston College Banquet.

I am not a living picture
Of a classical athlete,
I have never made a touch-down nor a goal.
My sporting blood, believe me,
Wouldn't burn at fever heat,
If I chanced to put a golf ball in a hole.

Yet, whene'er I read the story
Of that foot race long ago,
Which Hippomenes from Atalanta won,
And realize the lady
Didn't get a decent show,
I feel like making trouble with a gun.

Atalanta, being swifter,
Could have left the man, with ease,
A parasang or two behind her back,
But when she'd try to distance
The sly Hippomenes
He would drop a golden apple on the track.

As the maiden, thus deluded
By a most unmanly trap,
Stooped and stopped to gather up the golden fruit,
Hippomenes sped forward,
Won the race by half a lap,
Won the maiden and the gate receipts—the brute!

Such a very rank decision
All true sporting men deplore,
But old Time, best referee, may make it straight,
When teams of college maidens
Pay the Atalanta score
And, moreover, wipe some others off the slate.

How I'd like to see the settling
Of that very old account!
See fair Wellesley make the Crimson heroes pale,
See Smith get square with Princeton
For a very large amount,
And see Vassar maidens soundly wallop Yale!

But, suppose those dear young ladies
Played a Boston College team,
Then what feelings do you think I'd entertain?
Wouldn't rude, poetic justice
Then become a fleeting dream?
Is there any living man could stand the strain?

Wouldn't flesh and blood be rebel,
Wouldn't justice be a myth,
If you saw our half back battered by a girl?
Who, then, could keep from yelling,
"You have lost your side combs, Smith!"
Or, "Say, Wellesley, say, your hair is out of curl!"

Yes, 'twill be the same old story
Of the Grecian maiden's fate;
And again will Atalanta have to yield.
If she doesn't lose by trying
To keep her hat on straight,
Why, then, drop a box of candy on the field.

FUNERAL OF DR. M'GLYNN

St. Stephen's Far Too Small to Hold the Great Throng.

ARCHBISHOP AT THE SERVICE

Those Without the Church Plead to Enter—Struggling for Flowers at the Grave.

The voices of an Archbishop, a Bishop, a Vicar General, and over 200 priests raised in chanting; an audience, hushed, awed, immense; the glitter of twelve score tapers, and, finally, the harmony of organ and choir blended, characterized the obsequies held over the body of Father Edward McGlynn yesterday morning in the Church of St. Stephen, of which for so long he was the rector.

Although the service was not to begin before 9:30, and admission was only by ticket, the ticket holders began to form in line as early as 7 o'clock, and by 8 they formed a solid phalanx that stretched along the north sidewalk of Twenty-eighth Street as far as Third Avenue. At 9:15 the doors were opened and the throng hurried in and very soon the building was packed to its utmost capacity. Pews for the delegation of sixty letter carriers in uniform had been reserved under the east gallery. Places also were found for the representatives of various labor organizations and religious bodies.

The appearance of the church, as far as funeral decorations were concerned, differed little from that it presented on the previous night. The black cloth on the high altar had been changed for one of purple. The only floral tributes visible were a large cross composed of lilies and white roses, surmounted by a dove, and bearing an inscription in Gaelic, a large heart-shaped emblem, also bearing an inscription in Gaelic, and a small wreath.

THE ARCHBISHOP APPEARS.

Suddenly a faint burst of melody swelled from the organ, and the murmur of the people ceased. At the same time there emerged from the vestry a long procession of priests. Conspicuous in the white surpliced band were Archbishop Corrigan, Bishop Farley, and Vicar General Mooney and a number of Dominican friars. More than one hundred priests found seats within the chancel rail; the remainder were accommodated with seats around the chancel steps. They came from all over the diocese of New York and from other dioceses as well.

Among the orders represented were the Jesuits, Paulists, Franciscans, Carmelites, Capuchins, Redemptorists, Augustinians, and Dominicans.

Among the priests present were Monsignor Laughlin, Chancellor of the Diocese of Philadelphia; the Rev. Michael J. Lavelle, rector of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Father Ducey, the Rev. Thomas E. Murphy of St. Francis Xavier's, the Rev. J. H. McGean of St. Peter's, the Rev. John E. Edwards of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, the Rev. Gabriel A. Healy of St. Bernard's, the Rev. J. J. Kean of St. James's, the Rev. Malick A. Cunnion of St. Raphael's, the Rev. Dr. Dyer, head of the Dunwoodie Catholic Seminary; the Rev. T. D. McNulty, Paterson, N. J.; the Rev. Dr. P. F. McSweeney, Peekskill; the Rev. F. X. McSweeney, President of Mount St. Mary's Seminary, Emmitsburg; the Rev. Daniel O'Connell and J. H. Dooley, Father McGlynn's assistants at Newburg; the Very Rev. Dean Dougherty of Kingston, the Rev. C. J. O'Keefe, Chaplain at West Point; the Rev. John P. Chidwick, Father Southwell of the Paulists, Father Rupert, Superior of the Franciscan Friars; Father Southwell of the Carmelites, Fathers Caton, Hartigan, Fay, and Hoey.

IN THE CONGREGATION.

In the congregation were the widow of Henry George, with her son, Richard F., and daughter, Annie; W. D. McCracken, President of the Single Tax League, and Lawson Purdy, Secretary of the Tax Reform Association.

The chanters were the Rev. Thomas P. McLaughlin of the Church of the Transfiguration and the Rev. Thomas F. O'Connor of St. Stephen's.

The lessons were read by Bishop Farley, the Rev. Michael J. Henry, rector of the Mission of Our Lady of the Rosary, and the Rev. Dr. James T. Curran of Peekskill.

Then low mass of requiem was celebrated by the Rev. Charles McCready, the quartet and chorus rendering the following selections:

"Ave Verum".....Gounod
"Alma Redemptoris".....Weber
"O Salutaris".....Wells

MGR. MOONEY'S EULOGY.

The Right Rev. Mgr. J. F. Mooney delivered the oration. He said in part:

"Brethren, it is no new thing for you to be told that the priest is a being set apart from others by the Divine call for high and holy purposes. True it is that while his earthly pilgrimage lasts he will never know how far short he has fallen of a true realization of the Divine ideal, but apart from that consideration the supernatural stamp that has been thus imposed by the Divine hand on his soul lifts him up before the eyes of Catholic faith, gives him his power over Catholic hearts, and his unshared place in Catholic life.

"When, therefore, one who has been so prominent and so forceful a factor in the concerns of Catholic life, one of that chosen priesthood, has gone out from among us, is it any wonder that Catholic hearts should be touched and the wellsprings of Catholic sympathy burst forth? This is why you crowd to-day in this magnificent temple in which there is so much to remind you of him who is gone, why you kneel around his bier to whisper the deep, fervent, touching prayer Holy Mother Church herself puts upon your lips and with which she has already speeded him. Father Edward McGlynn, on to his heavenly home. 'Eternal rest give unto him, O Lord, and let perpetual light shine upon him.'"

THE ABSOLUTION SERVICE.

At the conclusion of the oration the organ played Chopin's "Funeral March," while lighted tapers were passed around to the priests in and about the chancel. Archbishop Corrigan then performed the absolution service at the bier, the choir meanwhile singing "Libera Me Domine."

A striking scene followed. As the priestly procession was returning to the vestry the choir began to sing "Nearer, My God, to Thee." The hymn was taken up by the people, and a thrill seemed to pass over the vast assembly. One priest broke down, and covering his face, wept aloud. The eyes of other priests were streaming with tears, and sobbing was heard all over the church.

The way being clear, the letter carriers filed past the bier and out of the church. Then the coffin was borne to the hearse.

The pall bearers were selected from the Holy Name and Knights of Columbus Societies. They were Arthur A. McLean, John Flannagan, Benjamin McDonald, Sylvester Malone, Patrick Hart, James J. Dougherty, John Fogarty, Patrick McGuire, Cornelius Mulligan, Hugh Clark, John Garner, and Peter McGuire.

THE WAITING CROWD.

During the entire services and up to the time the coffin was placed in the hearse a crowd that must have numbered fully 1,500 stood in front of the edifice. Many more came and tried to obtain entrance to the church, though informed that it was full. They were met by an adamant wall of police. Of these guardians there were 275, under command of Capt. Delaney of the Twenty-first Precinct.

From about 9 until 1 the faithful guard of 1,500 held its position undismayed by the keen wind, only tarrying for the opportunity of seeing the coffin placed in the hearse and the procession go by. Then when finally it did appear, the people spread themselves along Third Avenue to Thirty-fourth Street and the ferry to Long Island City, gathering the accretions in every block of the chance passers-by until their number swelled to more than thrice 1,500.

As on all like occasions, women, young and old, predominated. They were in large part orderly and quiet, waiting patiently, but there were many who openly defied the police when told to "move on."

Powers of persuasion to get in the church prevailed in at least two cases. One woman—a Mrs. McCaffery, with white hair and plainly clad, approached the police near the big steps. She had no ticket and was requested to step back.

"Please," she pleaded, "I want to see the old father once more."

The policemen were kindly obdurate. Then, catching a glimpse of the legend "Captain" on Delaney's cap and the double row of gilt buttons, the woman approached him and went down on her knees on the cobblestones.

"Oh, Captain," she said, "won't you let me in? I knew Father McGlynn for years. I am one of his oldest parishioners. Please let me see him before he goes away forever."

CAPT. DELANEY'S GOOD DEED.

It was an appeal that Capt. Delaney could not withstand.

"I'll take you in myself," said he. And, reaching down, he took the woman by the hand and, gently raising her up, walked with her up the steps and into the church.

Soon afterward another woman came up to the Captain, accompanied by a detective. The detective whispered a few words and the woman passed in. She is the wife of a policeman for whom Father McGlynn performed the marriage ceremony many years ago.

The funeral procession left the church a few minutes after 1 o'clock. After a carriage containing flowers and two carriages with the officiating priests came a platoon of police. These were followed by about 100 representatives of the Holy Name Society, the Anti-Poverty Society, labor organizations, and fully 150 men on foot. Then 15 carriages containing priests, friends, and relatives of Father McGlynn; the letter carriers, and after these nearly 50 other carriages.

At Calvary Cemetery a large awning had been reared over the spot where the dead priest was to be buried beside his brother, George W. McGlynn, who died fifteen years ago. Father Colton directed the absolution at the graveside. He was assisted by Dr. Burtsell, Fathers McCready, McLaughlin, and O'Connor, and many other of the senior fathers.

SCENE AT THE GRAVE.

Then followed a remarkable scene. The grave was surrounded by a crowd of women numbering fully 200, who pressed up to the low iron railing surrounding it. Many were well dressed; others were scantily clad and shivered from the cutting wind. Rain was then falling, but no one seemed to heed it. Their eyes were riveted upon the then fast-filling grave, and not a few were in tears. Some were hysterical. No sooner had the priests left the grave than a clamoring for the flowers began. Two men within the inclosure began to strip the pieces, in response to the entreaties and the eager hands stretched forth. Soon the women began to push and became more importunate.

"Only one little flower to remember the good man by?" pleaded one little woman. A rose from a wreath was thrown to her, but this was not enough. She wanted more, and in the shower that followed as the two men tore, piece by piece, from the wreaths and crosses she gained a handful.

A young woman clad in a costly fur jacket climbed upon a gravestone and, reaching far over to the head of the grave, plucked a string of smilax.

"Just a leaf to press in a book, please?" came from a little old woman with tear-bedimmed eyes and a torn shawl. She got her leaf and a train of smilax with it, and departed satisfied.

Numbers of the women went away with variegated collections, and not until every flower and every bit of green had disappeared did the clamoring cease. Even then some hung around the grave, loath to depart.

ON FATHER McGLYNN'S LIFE.

Henry George's Son Says He Sacrificed His Comfort—Mr. Crosby on the Pope's Attitude.

A well-attended meeting in memory of Dr. Edward McGlynn, under the auspices of the Manhattan Single Tax Club, was held last night in Cooper Union.

Prof. Charles Sprague Smith, the first speaker, said Dr. McGlynn had a great and tender heart. No man had ever been more welcome to Cooper Union's platform, the forum of the people. He was recognized by men of every creed and religion as a father who could see the coming of the day that will end poverty and misery.

Richard S. George and Henry George spoke. The latter said the Catholic Church lost one of her grandest priests when Dr. McGlynn passed away. He had labored for the rights of the people. He had literally followed Christ's injunction to give his coat to his needy brother. His carpet in his study was patched and worn. Rather than spend money for a new one he contented himself with a bed so small and cramped that he could not sleep in it with anything like comfort.

He had suffered excommunication for the truth and had died never swerving from the principles for which he made such magnificent sacrifices. In the brighter ages that are to come, Mr. George said, the dead priest's merits will be better appreciated because men will be large enough in their souls to realize all his grandeur.

The Rev. Father Ducey was the next speaker. He said he came not to eulogize Dr. McGlynn. Dr. McGlynn had been a true priest. He sought to get nearer the heart of man. He suggested that for a year to come on the day of the month that Dr. McGlynn died a sacrificial mass be offered for the repose of his soul.

Tom L. Johnson spoke and then John S. Crosby. Mr. Crosby said the cause for which Dr. McGlynn had braved criticism and the protests of his Church is to-day a political cause, just as it was when Christ spoke in its favor. There were those who criticised the Catholic Church for its opposition to Dr. McGlynn's teachings, but he wanted to ask what rich Protestant Church would permit Dr. McGlynn to make such utterances?

Mr. Crosby said that he did not lay blame upon any one for the excommunication of Dr. McGlynn. The Pope, in his grand old age, had, he believed, been converted to the views held by the man whose memory they had assembled to honor. He had not before understood the philosophy of the movement, as a predecessor of his had failed to understand astronomy.

FOREIGN TRADE OF BOSTON.

In 1899 123,487 More Tons of Freight Shipped than in 1898.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 11.—Figures compiled at the Chamber of Commerce show that the Port of Boston is gaining fast in its foreign trade.

In spite of the absence of many of the largest freight carriers, 1899 broke the record, 123,487 tons more of export freight having been delivered by the railroads to the ships last year than in 1898. The total for last year was 1,877,776 tons, against 1,754,289 tons for the year previous. This was in the face of the loss of many tens of thousands of tons in October, November, and December. The receipts of flour showed a slight falling off, but there was a big increase in grain. Last year 1,018,068 barrels and 1,862,161 sacks were received, against the 1898 totals of 1,052,820 barrels and 2,147,750 sacks.

The coming year will, it is expected, be the best yet. The new docks are approaching completion. That between the Hoosac Tunnel docks and the navy yard, which is to be used jointly by the Fitchburg Railroad and the Navy Department, will be completed by June, in time to accommodate the new monsters of the Dominion Line. It will be 660 feet long, 160 feet across, and will give 33 feet of water at mean low tide.

For a Home for Mrs. Anthony.

At a meeting of the "Bill" Anthony Memorial Building Fund held last night at 68 East Forty-ninth Street plans were perfected for holding a musical and dramatic entertainment Jan. 25 at Chickering Hall for the benefit of the fund. A number of well-known professionals have volunteered their services. Tickets can be had at 68 East Forty-ninth Street. The purpose of the fund is the erection of a comfortable home for Anthony's widow and child on a lot at Oakwood, Staten Island, given by Mrs. M. S. Roome.

Gunner's Mate Dies Suddenly.

The Oberammergau Passion Play.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—A new setting will be provided for the production of the Passion Play next April at Oberammergau, and a number of the older actors will retire.

Want to Keep Out Our Automobiles.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—Considerable fear is expressed in the German press that American automobiles will invade Germany, and a higher duty is demanded.

Malietoa Protests Against Treaty.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The Times prints this morning the text of a protest by Malietoa Tanu to the tripartite powers against the Samoan treaties.

PANAMA CANAL COMPLETION.

London Times Says Britain Would Not Be Jealous of America.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The Times, commenting editorially upon the possibility of the United States building the Panama Canal, says:

"Since the Venezuela boundary dispute has been settled and Anglo-American friendship has been sealed, the Panama scheme is more likely to be carried out than the plan for a Nicaragua Canal. England would certainly not be jealous of America, should the latter complete the Panama Canal, being confident that the United States would treat British shipping in a liberal spirit."

FRENCH COMMERCIAL TREATY.

Officials of French Foreign Office Expect It to be Ratified.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—It is stated at the Foreign Office here that, so far as is known, there is absolutely no truth in the dispatches from Washington, published in London, to the effect that strong opposition in the United States Senate and in the French Chamber of Deputies will be made against the ratification of the commercial treaty between France and the United States.

It is probable, the Foreign Office officials say, that they would have heard of it had such been the case, yet nothing whatever had been received from the French Embassy at Washington casting doubts on the ratification, and they utterly discredited the cabled reports, pointing out that, so far as the Chamber of Deputies is concerned, there is not the slightest reason to suppose that the ratification is in jeopardy.

The Foreign Office officials are confident that there will be no hitch on either side, and that the treaty will shortly be an accomplished fact.

WANTS FRENCH PARTY TRUCE.

Deschanel Urges It Be Continued in the Chamber Indefinitely.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—The Chamber of Deputies reassembled to-day. M. Deschanel, on his re-election to the Presidency of the House, made a speech strenuously urging that the truce in party warfare which was to prevail during the coming year of the exposition should be continued indefinitely. His remarks were warmly applauded.

M. Collard, Socialist, moved a vote of 300,000 francs to relieve the strikers of the Loire coal basin. The Premier, M. Waldeck-Rousseau, asked for a postponement of the motion, pointing out that the lace-makers were still on strike, and that Parliament and the Government could not intervene. But, he added afterward, when there might be need for help, the Government would consider the matter.

The motion was then postponed, and the House adjourned.

KAISER'S SPEECH ON SOCIALISM.

German Newspapers Cannot Understand His Alleged Remarks.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—Emperor William's remarks when receiving the rectors of the Technical Schools the other day—especially his statement that the phenomena of social democracy were transitory—are attracting much discussion in the press. Some of the Conservative organs refuse to believe that his Majesty was correctly reported. The Kreuz Zeitung says:

"We cannot deny that the Emperor's words conflict with his former utterances, and we must admit that further legislative action against the Socialists is inexpedient, since it would result in a renewed defeat of the Government."

The Vossische Zeitung observes: "The Kaiser apparently does not see in Socialism a danger to the State and to society. Nevertheless, we do not believe he is yet willing to give the Socialists complete freedom of action."

NEED FOR GERMAN NAVY.

Berlin Papers Comment Sympathetically on von Buelow's Speech.

BERLIN, Jan 11.—Count von Bülow's speech at the launching of the Deutschland is commented upon to-day sympathetically by almost all the papers except the Socialist organs. The Berliner Post says:

"This warm-hearted appeal will find the liveliest response in all German hearts. It will help to remove the spirit of petty fault finding, and will unite the German people in a recognition of the necessity for the empire of a navy corresponding with its position otherwise as a great power."

The Vossische Zeitung says: "Count von Bülow follows Bismarckian traditions in asserting that Germany will strive to preserve the world's peace through unvarying and peace-loving prudence."

The National Zeitung attributes additional importance to the Foreign Secretary's remarks in view of the fact that he was also expressing the Emperor's views.

PRUSSIAN MINISTRY ACCUSED.

It "Disciplined" Magistrates Who Voted Against the Canal Bill.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—At to-day's session of the Prussian Diet Herr von Koeller interpellated the Government regarding the disciplinary measures enforced against members holding positions as Provincial Magistrates, who had voted against the Canal bill. He claimed for every member of the House, whatever his status outside, a Constitutional right to vote as he desired in the Chamber.

Prince Hohenlohe, replying, declared that the Government in disciplining the Landrathe had no intention of violating the Constitution, but held that officials who voted with the Opposition could not represent the Government as Magistrates.

The Imperial Chancellor also defended the disciplinary measures on the ground that these were taken in the interest of the service; and he repudiated the suggestion of unconstitutionality.

Dr. von Miquel, Minister of Finance, asserted that the Ministry accepted full responsibility for the measures taken.

Count von Kardorff said he hoped a vote of censure upon the Government would be proposed.

All parties joined in the attack upon the Ministry, the substance of the speeches being that the step was unwise and unconstitutional.

Herr Richter humorously congratulated the Conservatives upon having become constitutionalists, and the debate then closed.

Altogether the discussion was a severe moral defeat for the Ministry.

Prince Buys a Famous Vineyard.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—Prince Albert of Prussia has bought the celebrated Wilhelm Vineyard, at Markobrunn, for $5,600 an acre.

Prince Friederich Wilhelm Nicolas Albert of Prussia has been Regent of the Grand Duchy of Brunswick since 1885. He is Grand Master of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem. He married, in 1873, Princess Marie of Saxe-Altenbourg. The vineyard which he has purchased produces one of the most celebrated brands of Rhine wine.

Congo State Troops Rout Rebels.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 11.—The Soir to-day says a detachment of Congo Free State troops had two battles with the rebellious Batatolas in the neighborhood of Baraka early last October. The paper adds that ninety of the Batatolas were killed, but that the Congo Free State troops suffered no casualties. Among the killed were three Chiefs. The Congo troops were under the immediate command of Lieut. Hecq, though Baron Dhanis, the Belgian commander, directed the operations.

American Hurt in Italian Collision.

ROME, Jan. 11.—The Calais express train due here at 11:50 o'clock this morning collided last night at Corneto, Italy, with the through train from Rome. Mrs. Alexander Herninger, an American, who was on the train with her maid, was injured. She has arrived at the Grand Hotel here, and is progressing favorably. Her injuries are not serious.

Railway Accident in Brussels.

BRUSSELS, Jan. 11.—The Northern express from St. Petersburg to Ostend was derailed this morning near the railroad station at this city. Several persons were injured.

Oceanic Sails for New York.

QUEENSTOWN, Jan. 11.—The White Star liner Oceanic sailed from this port at 10 o'clock A. M. to-day for New York with 1,331 sacks of mail on board.

Parliament to Meet Jan. 30.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The Queen has proclaimed the meeting of Parliament for Jan. 30.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The gloomy skies and chill airs of yesterday morning, to which were added in the afternoon rain and sleet, prevented much social movement and life outdoors yesterday and had a deterrent effect upon general gayety. The day brought more of incident than its predecessors of the week, but still was not particularly lively. There were the usual number of "at homes"; receptions were given by Mrs. George F. Shrady, Sr., at 8 East Sixty-sixth Street, and Mrs. Frances Burrall Hoffman at 58 East Seventy-ninth Street; a luncheon given by Mrs. John Clarkson Jay for Miss Edith Clarkson Jay, a dinner at Mrs. George S. Scott's, another at Mr. John D. Rockefeller's, and two dances at evening, the second of the Cinderella cotillions at Dodworth's, and a dance given by Mrs. Adolph De Bary at Sherry's.

To-day will bring "at homes" at the residences of Mrs. Charles H. Stebbins and the Misses Stebbins, 32 West Ninth Street; Mrs. Jules S. Bache, 8 East Sixty-seventh Street; Mrs. Clarence W. Bowen, 3 East Tenth Street; Mrs. Charles R. Coster's, 27 West Eleventh Street; Mrs. Peter Jay's and Miss Mary Rutherford Jay's, 29 Waverley Place; Mrs. Adolphus Smedberg's, 51 West Eleventh Street, and at Mrs. James A. A. Benedict's and the Misses Benedict, 325 Fifth Avenue. Mrs. Whitelaw Reid will give a dance at her residence for her niece, Miss Mary Crocker; Mrs. Church's class will hold its third meeting at Sherry's this evening, and the sixth meeting of Mrs. Pratt's afternoon class will also take place at Sherry's.

Mr. Woodbury Kane is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock, Jr., at Aiken, and among other New York and Philadelphia visitors there of late have been Mr. J. S. Tooker, who is visiting Mr. H. H. Hunnewell, Jr., of Boston, and the Messrs. Jay. The first run of the hounds under Mr. Thomas Hitchcock will be held on the morning of Jan. 17, when a hunt breakfast will precede the hunt and run. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert F. Robbins have arrived at their cottage, and Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Dolan of Philadelphia are expected soon. Mr. and Mrs. Almeric Paget and other members of the Whitney family are shortly expected, and will occupy the Whitney cottage, which has been considerably enlarged since last year. The season at Thomasville, Ga., has opened earlier than usual. Among the Northerners at the hotels are Mrs. C. E. Newbold and Miss Newbold of Tuxedo, Mrs. J. O. Donner, Col. De Lancey Floyd-Jones, Dr. Frederick Humphreys and Mrs. Humphreys of Morristown, N. J., and Messrs. George H. Stone, S. R. Van Duzer, and O. H. Keep are in their cottages. At St. Augustine, among early arrivals from the North are G. Nostrand Smith, George E. Bacon, W. M. Corwin, and Charles M. Robb, Dr. B. M. Cammann, and Mr. and Mrs. Chandler Smith of New York are in Jacksonville, and among late arrivals at Jekyl Island are Frederick Baker, Robert C. Pruin, and Joseph Stickney. Mr. Joseph Jefferson is at Palm Beach, Fla., where are also Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Untermeyer and Mr. C. W. Bingham. The hotels at Miami have not yet opened, owing to the yellow fever at Key West, from which place a few cases were imported into Miami.

Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, who spent the Christmas and New Year's holidays with Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt at Biltmore, have returned to their home in this city. Mr. and Mrs. Ernesto Fabbri (Miss Shepard) have taken the River Cliff cottage, one of Mr. Vanderbilt's favorite cottages on his Biltmore estate, for the Winter, and Mrs. Fabbri's mother, Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, still remains as a guest at Biltmore house. Mr. Vanderbilt continues to interest himself in developing his Biltmore estate, and a schoolhouse, hospital, and a score of cottages are soon to be built there.

Philadelphia is going in for music even more than New York this Winter. Miss Balch, Miss Hutchinson, and Mrs. W. H. H. Robinson have organized a series of four concerts for the benefit of the permanent orchestra fund in the galleries of the Art Club on Broad Street. The first of these was held on Wednesday morning. Master Graboff played and Mme. Gadski sang. There was a representative audience present.

***

Mr. and Mrs. James A. Burden, Jr., who were members of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney's party on their recent visit to Hickory Hollow, Tenn., will sail for Europe on the Oceanic on her next trip from this port, Jan. 24. They will at once go to Paris, where they have leased a house for the Winter. Mrs. William A. Burden will sail on the same ship. Mrs. Potter Palmer will probably sail for France in March, to take up her duties there as a Commissioner of the Paris Exposition.

The First Assembly ball in Philadelphia will be the social event of interest in the Quaker City to-night, and so close—thanks to the Van Rensselaers and Drexels—are the relations of fashionable society in both cities that it is as well an event of interest here. The Philadelphia Assemblies continue to be the most beautiful balls of the country. They are still given in the foyer of the old Academy of Music, and the débutantes and younger society women still sit on the large circular staircases leading up to the foyer from the entrance hall, which is used as the supper room, as their mothers and grandmothers did before them. Terrapin, canvasback ducks, the most toothsome chicken croquettes known in the world, and champagne served in magnums continue to be the features of the supper, as they have for a century past.

Mr. Pembroke-Jones of this city was made much of on a recent visit which he paid to New Orleans. He was present at the balls given by "Les Mysterieuses" and the "Twelfth Night Revelers," and was "taken out" in both, which, to those familiar with New Orleans society, means that he was especially honored. Mrs. Pembroke-Jones will attend the Carnival in New Orleans, with a number of New York guests. Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Hennen Morris have arrived at their plantation, The Retreat, near Hammond, La., for the Winter. The handsomest reception given this Winter in New Orleans was that at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Chapman Hyams in honor of Miss Florence Todd. Mr. "Rat" Irby recently gave a large musicale at his handsome bachelor apartments on Canal Street, New Orleans, at which several of the artists from the French opera troupe singing with such success this Winter in New Orleans appeared.

***

Mrs. George F. Shrady, Sr., gave a large reception at her residence, 8 East Sixty-sixth Street, yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Shrady was assisted in receiving by her daughter, Mrs. Edwin Gould, and her daughters-in-law, Mrs. George F. Shrady, Jr., and Mrs. Henry M. Shrady. There was a Kipling afternoon at the residence of Mrs. Henry Holt, 711 Madison Avenue, where Mr. Stahlschmidt recited and Mr. Francis Rogers, the baritone, sang. The former is not only a reciter, but a musical composer and a Kipling enthusiast. Mr. Rogers sang with much effect "Route Marchin'," "Back to the Army," and "Fuzzy-Wuzzy," and also an arrangement for the "Recessional."

***

Mr. Adrian Iselin, Jr., will sail shortly for this country. He has left the Engadine, but Mrs. Iselin and her daughters will remain at St. Moritz for the Winter. Capt. Whitehouse, United States Army, is one of the new arrivals at the Kulm. Miss Alice Smith and Miss Gladys Whiting of this city are at the Palace. Miss Whiting has taken part in several of the golf contests.

Mr. Ernest Rudolph Gunther has cards out for a musicale for next Friday afternoon at his residence, 1 East Forty-first Street. Mr. Gunther will go later, as is his custom, to Egypt. Mrs. Sanford Bissell has cards out for two large dinners next week. Mrs. Bissell will also have an opera party on Monday evening.

Mrs. Adolphe De Bary gave last evening in Sherry's small ballroom a dance for her daughters, Miss Leonie and Miss Anita De Bary. The ballroom was decorated with palms, ferns, and roses, and there were bunches of roses on the supper tables. There was no cotillion, simply general dancing. Mrs. De Bary wore a gown of white panne velvet, embroidered and appliqued with green velvet and ornaments of diamonds. Miss De Bary's dress was of white point d'esprit over white silk, and Miss Anita De Bary was gowned in pale yellow crepe de chine over liberty satin of the same shade. There were about 135 guests, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Francis, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Von Ingen, Mr. and Mrs. McLean Von Ingen, Mr. and Mrs. Jules J. Vatable, Mr. and Mrs. George Hollister, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Beadleston, Mr. and Mrs. Parker W. Page, the Misses Dominick, Miss Beadleston, Miss Louise Robinson, Miss Plummer, Miss Josephine Williams, the Misses Stanton, Miss Louise Fiske, Miss Cox, Miss Clark, Miss Bowers, and the Messrs. Lawrence Atterbury, Plummer, John Tallmadge, Beadleston, Sanford Barnes, Dominick, Joseph Lee, George Cross, Hugh Toler, Augustus Shepard, Otto Toussaint, Gavin, Slade, Thomas H. Pierson, W. A. Learned, Louis Keller, Scheffer, Howland, and Harry Batcheller.

The second Cinderella cotillion was danced last evening at Dodworth's. The patronesses of this series of dances are Mesdames Horace Ely, Arthur L. Root, Charles Welsh, George Pryor Johnson, William A. Parke, and James Sherwood. The dance began at 9 o'clock, and there was informal dancing until 11, when supper was served. The cotillion began about 11:30, and ended about 1 o'clock. Among the dancers were Miss Grace Ballard, Miss Blanche Spadone, Miss Ethel Shrady, Miss Florence Strong, Miss Madeline Shrady, Miss Ethel C. Baker, Miss Thurber, Miss Westcott, Miss True, Miss Helen Irvine, and the Messrs. P. H. Chapman, S. Dillingham, W. E. Gary, Legg, W. D. Moore, Reginald Starr, H. E. Avery, H. A. L. Sand, R. Cromwell, Charles A. Skidmore, J. Renwick Dimond, and Philip K. Walcott.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward J. King, Jr., of this city have registered in the Tyrol. They will pass part of the Winter in the Engadine, at St. Moritz. The Baron and Baroness von Hugel, who are well known in New York society, will be at Davos for a greater part of the Winter.

***

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught have determined to pass the Winter at Cairo, and to make that Egyptian capital the centre of a little English Court. Mrs. O'Hagan of Nice, who has lived in the former city for quite a number of seasons, has left the Riviera and taken a house at Cairo. Mme. Antonio de Navarro, however, is this Winter at San Rafael, where there are now a few English people. The Americans are slow in coming to the Riviera. Those who are abroad seem to be stopping in Paris, where it is a bit gayer than London, although the fashionable season in Paris does not begin until the Spring. Mrs. Kernochan, who went abroad some weeks ago, had not joined, up to late advices, Mrs. Van Rensselaer Cruger. Mrs. Cruger passed the holidays in Florence, where she is busy in literary work, and will not go to Russia for the present.

***

Mrs. Richard P. Lounsbery of 12 East Thirty-fifth Street gave a reception yesterday afternoon. She was assisted in receiving by her niece, the Countess Festetics; Mrs. J. B. Haggin, Miss Daly, and Mrs. George Hubbell. Mr. Ellis of May Irwin's company played the piano, and there were recitations and songs by several clever artists. Mrs. Lounsbery is at home every Thursday in January.

A Liederkranz Ball.

The Bachelor Circle of the Liederkranz Club gave a large and beautiful ball at the clubhouse, Park Avenue and Fifty-eighth Street, last evening. There were over 500 guests present. The ballroom was decorated with palms, ferns, and flowers, including roses in great profusion. An elaborate supper was served. The attendance comprised the best known members of German society in New York.

Lewis—Kernan.

UTICA, Jan. 11.—At noon to-day, at the residence of the bride's parents in this city, the marriage of Clifford Lewis, Jr., and Miss Isabel M. Kernan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas E. Kernan, took place. The ceremony was performed by Cardinal Gibbons, who came here from Baltimore for the purpose. Mrs. Lewis is not of the same religious faith as her husband, and therefore the ceremony took place at the bride's home.

The bride's gown was rose point lace over liberty satin. She wore a veil of Irish point lace that was worn by her grandmother on the occasion of her marriage in 1843. Her maid of honor and only attendant was her sister Margaret. The bridegroom was attended by his brother, David Lewis, of Philadelphia.

Mr. Lewis is a civil engineer, who is now Superintendent of Bridges on the Mohawk Division of the New York Central, and the entire Mohawk and Malone Railroad. He was formerly city surveyor of this city.

SUICIDE MADE HIS WEAPON.

Bernard Wolfart Used Scraps to Fashion a Pistol, Then Shot Himself —A Child's Grief.

Bernard Wolfart, a German, sixty-one years old, killed himself at his home, 345 Seventh Avenue, yesterday afternoon. Wolfart lived with his wife, a married daughter, and a three-year-old granddaughter. The man up to nine months ago had been employed as a machinist in a West Twenty-ninth Street shop. He lost his position and his employers, as he alleged, held back several weeks' wages, of which he was greatly in need. Since that time Wolfart had divided his efforts between looking for work and attempting to collect the money said to be due him from his old employers. He was unsuccessful in both attempts and seemed to grow more and more despondent.

Wolfort three weeks ago began to amuse himself by making a crude pistol. He bored a hole in an old casting, from which he formed the barrel. From a scrap of steel he hammered out a rude sort of trigger, and the butt he made of wood bound in brass. The pistol was about seven inches long. Two days ago the weapon was finished, and the old man seemed to take a great delight in it.

Returning home yesterday after an unfruitful hunt for work and a futile effort to get some of the money he had already earned, he went to his room and blew out his brains with his home-made revolver. The body was discovered by his little grandchild, who crept to the old man's room about 3 o'clock to call her grandfather "to play with her," as she had done daily since he lost his work.

When the old man's wife and daughter returned a few minutes later the child was sobbing bitterly. Her dress was smeared with blood, her hands and face were stained where in her caresses she had tried to arouse the dead man.

The police were notified.

STATEN ISLAND MAN MISSING.

Moses Van Name Believed to Have Wandered Away and Perished.

Moses Van Name, eighty-two years old, of Port Richmond, disappeared from the home of his daughter, Mrs. William A. Sloane, last Monday. A searching party headed by Mr. Sloane has been out almost constantly since Tuesday morning, but has not been able to find any trace of Mr. Van Name. It is feared that he wandered into the swamps in the lower part of the island and perished, or was drowned in the creek near his home.

When Mr. Van Name left home he said he was going for a short walk. He declined to wear an overcoat, and, as he was feeble, it is regarded as possible that he became benumbed beyond reach of help and eventually succumbed to exhaustion.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Alexander Williams.

Alexander Williams, Boston's famous pioneer bookseller and publisher, died at his home in that city yesterday. He was eighty-one years of age, and for many years his place of business was at the "Old Corner Bookstore" on School and Washington Streets.

Mr. Williams was born in Boston. In 1832 he was employed by Bliss & Wadsworth, in this city, but he soon after returned to Boston, and in 1841 was the active head of the firm of Redding & Co. Under his guidance the periodical and newspaper trade received its first systematic treatment. He made his store the centre of attraction for all who sought the latest English newspapers and the newest American periodicals, books, and newspapers. On the arrival of a steamer from England, the British flag was displayed at the doorway to indicate that the foreign newspapers were on the counter, and the signal was invariably followed by a rush. Mr. Williams subsequently bought out Fetridge & Co., Washington Street, and in 1869 he became the proprietor of the "Old Corner Bookstore." The place soon became a resort of leading authors and distinguished persons. Mr. Williams at one time supplied all the dealers in the Eastern States with English newspapers and periodicals. He retired from active business in 1883.

John Henry Lester.

John Henry Lester, an inventor and a pioneer manufacturer of sewing machines, died at his home, at 451 Gates Avenue, Brooklyn, Wednesday. Death was due to old age. Mr. Lester was born in Montville, Conn., in 1815, and came to Brooklyn in 1835. He made a fortune in building machinery.

He opened a machine shop in Richmond, Va., just before the civil war. He sold the property to the Confederate Government for an armory and obtained an assignment as a purchasing agent, which enabled him to get through the lines and to Washington, where he surrendered his documents to Gen. B. F. Butler, after an interview with President Lincoln.

The Government, however, was not satisfied of his loyalty, and he was sentenced to ten years' imprisonment at Cape Hatteras, but was pardoned after serving twenty months. He brought suit against Gen. Butler and the Government, but after pending for twenty years it was dismissed. Mr. Lester leaves a son and a daughter.

Obituary Notes.

GEORGE W. KINNEY, at one time a well-known coal dealer at Rome, N. Y., died yesterday at his home, in Buffalo, aged sixty-five years.

JOHN DALE, a retired tailor, died Wednesday at his home at Ridgefield Park, N. J., from a stroke of paralysis. Mr. Dale lost five sons in the civil war. A daughter survives him.

JOHN B. GOODRICH, for the past thirty years a prominent and well-known member of the bar of Boston, died at his home there yesterday of paralysis. He was sixty-four years of age.

HENRY C. HOWELL of the leather firm of T. P. Howell & Co. died yesterday at his home at Normandie Heights, N. J. Pneumonia was the cause of death. Mr. Howell was fifty-four years old. He leaves a widow and two children.

Mrs. DEMMIS DEWEY KELLOGG died yesterday at her home in Brooklyn from peritonitis. She was the widow of Charles W. Kellogg, late

STATE TAX ON MORTGAGES

Legislative Committee to Recommend a Levy of Five Mills.

PROCEEDS WILL BE $10,000,000

Tax of 1 Per Cent. on Stocks of Banks and Trust Companies Included in the Plan.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—The legislative committee to investigate the tax question will report to the Legislature that it recommends:

First—A State tax of 5 mills upon indebtedness secured by mortgage upon corporate and individual real property, which the committee believes would produce not less than $10,000,000.

Second—That if the proposed mortgage tax for State purposes is adopted, mortgages ought to be exempted altogether from local taxation, and that the tax should cover all mortgages on real estate situated within this State, whether made by corporations or persons, or whether owned by residents or non-residents, and without exemptions, except in the single case of mortgages made to the Commissioners of United States Deposit Fund. No owner of a mortgage debt ought to be allowed to deduct his indebtedness, because the rate is low, as compared with the rate which the owner of real estate must pay, and which the owner of other personalty is liable to pay.

Third—A tax of 1 per cent. upon the stock of National and State banks and trust companies, the value of the share to be ascertained by adding together the capital stock, surplus and undivided profits of such institutions and deducting therefrom the assessed value of their real estate, which is to continue to be assessed locally.

Fourth—The 1 per cent. tax upon the institutions named will realize $5,000,000, and, taken together with the mortgage tax, will furnish to the State, together with its present revenue, about $23,000,000, which sum is adequate for the support of the State Government. The shareholders in State and National banks and trust companies should not be taxed for local purposes, nor should there be allowed any deduction from the value thereof because of the debts of the individual owner. The withdrawal of the State and National banks from local taxation will embarrass no locality.

THE COMMITTEE'S REASONS.

The committee believes its recommendations will be of benefit to the general community for these reasons:

First—There will be no necessity for the equalization of assessments between counties.

Second—the burden of taxation upon the owners of real estate will be reduced to the extent of about $10,000,000.

Third—The new taxes will be uniform throughout the classes and certain and unvarying in their application. Payment will be enforced, if need be, as in the case of the real estate tax, by divesting the owner of his title. No mortgages will escape. There will be no deduction of debts and no exemptions. Consequently, there will be no opportunity for tax dodging, and no occasion for the discontent which the tax-paying owners of personalty now so generally and so rightly feel, because others, as well or better able to pay, manage in one way or another to avoid their just share of the burden.

Fourth—The new taxes will be collected without any mischievous inquisitorial processes. Mortgages are now generally spread upon the public records, and the policy of other laws has already opened the affairs of banks and trust companies to the supervision of public officials.

Fifth—Counties, cities, towns, and other local subdivisions will raise no taxes, except for their own purposes exclusively, and, consequently, the entire responsibility will be centred upon the local officials.

The report will say that the committee could evolve no way of reaching personal property for more equitable taxation except by the listing system, and that system they believe to be inquisitorial and repugnant to the American spirit.

OTHER PLANS CONSIDERED.

The committee first considered a proposition to withdraw from local taxation steam and surface railroads, telegraph, telephone, electric light and power companies, gas, water, and pipe line companies, and banks and trust companies, and to levy upon such corporations a definite fixed rate of taxation for State purposes.

Before determining the advisability of such a plan it became necessary to ascertain what proportion of the total tax of the State was paid by such corporations, and the committee with very great labor caused to be gathered the entire sums paid by the corporations named, in three of the counties of the State, to wit: Oswego, Cattaraugus, and Chenango. The result was startling in some respects.

It was found that in the County of Oswego during the year 1897 the sum of $627,759.82 was received by taxation for all purposes, and that of this amount the steam railroads alone paid 9.03 per cent. In the County of Cattaraugus in the year 1898 $484,358.22 was received by taxation for all purposes, and of this sum the steam railroads paid 11.89 per cent. In the County of Chenango in the year 1897 $317,837.69 was received by taxation for all purposes, and that of this sum the steam railroads paid 7.97 per cent. In some school districts in the counties named the steam railroads alone paid 50 per cent. of the taxes. The conditions in other parts of the State are similar to those in the counties named.

Annexed to the report of the committee there are tables of the figures referred to, given by towns, showing the taxes received for State, county, city, town, school, and highway purposes in the counties named. The committee believe that it is the first time the entire annual taxes paid in any county in the State have been collated, except in the City of New York, where there is but one tax. Upon the showing made it can be seen that the plan of withdrawing from the locality the corporations named for the purpose of State taxation had to be speedily abandoned.

Another proposition was to tax the entire stock of all corporations in the hands of companies and individuals. It was proposed also to tax the entire deposits and surplus of savings banks amounting to about $1,000,000,000, now exempt from taxation. Another proposition was to place a license tax upon various forms of business, according to the amount of business done each year, which would be in effect an income tax, but which the committee regarded as undesirable for the reasons above given for rejecting a listing system.

NEW YORK CITY'S PART.

Speaking of New York City's large part of the taxes of the State, the report will say:

"The large concentration of wealth in the County of New York and in other great urban counties has impelled the State Board of Equalization, from year to year, to reduce the assessed valuation of the rural counties, and increase that of the richer and more populous ones. This course has seemed just to the rural communities, but has been borne with great reluctance by the others, and it is safe to say that there is scarcely a taxpayer in the City of New York who does not feel that as a result of this equalization he has most grossly suffered. This feature of our system has been most aptly described by one of the great economists of the State as productive of mutual suspicion of rural and urban communities,' and intolerable friction between counties."

Speaking of the proposition to tax mortgages, the report says: "It has been shown to our satisfaction that mortgage indebtedness, while legally taxable, is not actually productive of much revenue, because of the exemptions enjoyed by particular classes of mortgagees and the apparent inability of assessors to find this particular class of property, and for other reasons. The fact is that owners of mortgage debts, as a class, don't contribute to the public revenue. In the few cases in which property in mortgages goes upon the assessment roll the local rates operate with great and undue severity. Sometimes more than 50 per cent. of the income has to be turned over as a tax.

"These cases of extreme hardship are usually those where a trustee or executor is taxed for the property of widows and orphans held by them. A body of our citizens who are least able to support themselves depend upon their slight income for their subsistence. The property is usually brought to light in the Surrogate's Court and is easily placed on the roll. That these classes of persons should be assessed at the rate of 50 per cent. of their income, while the great masses of mortgages escape, is a glaring injustice, and one in which the appeal for relief at the hands of the Legislature, as shown by the correspondence of the committee, must not be denied or delayed.

"In fixing the rate to be paid on mortgage debts we have been controlled mainly by the amount of revenue which the State needs, but we have not been unmindful of the fact that if the rate is made too high the tax will operate as a burden to borrowers, or, in other words, it will be an additional real estate tax."

ANOTHER CORPORATION TAX.

Mr. Rodenbeck Introduces a Measure to Extend the Scope of the Franchise Tax Law.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Assemblyman Rodenbeck to-day introduced a bill to amend the law in relation to the taxation of corporations. The bill provides that in fixing the value of all wharves, piers, bridges, telegraph lines, wires, poles and appurtenances, supports and inclosures for electrical conductors and other appurtenances, surface, underground, or elevated railroads, railroad structures, substructures and superstructures, tracks and the iron thereon, branches, switches, and other fixtures, mains, pipes, and tanks, the Assessors may take into consideration any franchises, rights, authority, permission, and easement to construct, operate, or maintain the same, owned or controlled by any person, copartnership, association, or corporation, but this shall not apply to real property subject to a special franchise tax.

Mr. Rodenbeck introduced also a bill to amend the tax law providing that the franchises, rights, authority, or permission to construct, maintain, or operate any railroad, mains, pipes, tanks, conduits, or wires, except special franchises of corporations shall be assessed.

In speaking of his tax bills Mr. Rodenbeck said: "These bills seek to subject to taxation franchises not covered by the special franchise tax act of last year. At the time of the enactment of that law, no franchises were taxable for local purposes either as realty or personalty. The proposed bill covers the right to do business, and easements of light, air, and access, which, under the decisions of the court, are not taxable as personalty. They are not taxable as realty and are not even to be considered as affecting the value of real estate beyond the cost of reproducing the real estate.

"The proposed amendment to Section 12 of the tax law allows them to be taxed as part of the capital stock. This tax would be levied at the home office of the person, copartnership, association, or corporation coming within its scope. The proposed Section 15 does not tax them again, but merely allows the Assessors to take them into account with other tests and measures of value which men ordinarily adopt for business purposes, in fixing the value of the real estate.

"The bills apply to every tax district where the real estate of the person, copartnership, association, or corporation subject to the tax exists. The special tax franchise act affects chiefly cities. The proposed bills affect chiefly rural tax districts but apply also to municipalities.

"The tax law was not intended to exempt any property from taxation except such as was expressly exempted. The property covered by the proposed bills is not expressly exempted by the present tax. The taxation of the property covered by the proposed bills and its consideration in fixing the value of real estate is practicable through local Assessors."

FIGHT ON EDUCATIONAL BILL.

Opposition by Republicans and Democrats Will Probably Kill the Unification Plan.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Organization Republicans who are familiar with the situation in the Legislature express the opinion to-night that any bill seeking to reorganize the school system of the State along lines suggested by the Unification Commission, which plan has met with the approval of Gov. Roosevelt, cannot be passed at the present session. Senator Horace White of Syracuse is drafting a bill, which will embody the views of the Governor and practically contain the recommendations of the Unification Commission, although it is said that the Senator may reject some of the suggestions made by the commission.

The principal opposition from such organization Republicans as have declared against the report of the Unification Commission is directed against the plan of giving the Governor the right to name a Chancellor of the State Board of Regents who would have supervisory control over the schools throughout the State. The prediction was made to-night that if an education measure is passed by the present Legislature it will differ radically from the plan suggested by the Unification Commission, which has also met with the disapproval of the Regents. It is understood here that the Democrats are preparing to fight the Governor's educational plan, and the enemies of the measure claim they will have enough votes to defeat it.

NEEDS OF THE SCHOOL SYSTEM

Radical Reforms Urged by J. Edward Swanstrom in a Letter to Gov. Roosevelt.

J. Edward Swanstrom, ex-President of the School Board of Brooklyn, and of the Board of Education of the City of New York, has sent a letter to Gov. Roosevelt setting forth the necessity of a radical reform of the public school organization and administration of the greater city, and recommending certain specific changes. Most of the bills brought forward for this purpose, he declares, "appear to be crude and unscientific, and show upon their face that their authors have only a limited conception of the school needs of the City of New York." Emergency legislation, he says, may be necessary to remedy the more crying evils, but a thorough reconstruction on a scientific basis is required for permanent relief.

Mr. Swanstrom suggests the appointment of a special educational commission to frame a new measure for the public school system. Such a commission could consider the various bills proposed, and invite plans and suggestions from teachers, School Superintendents, and other educational experts.

"In my judgment," says Mr. Swanstrom, "no measure for relief will be of permanent value which does not include some change in the method of making School Board appointments. Under the charter the duty of making these appointments devolves upon the Mayor. He makes them nominally. In point of fact, they are made by the political machines. There is no disguising this fact, and here we have the root of the whole difficulty. Members of School Boards should be representative professional and business men, accustomed to deal with large interests, capable of understanding and reflecting public sentiment, and subservient to no political machine."

Mr. Swanstrom suggests that the appointing power be lodged in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the First and Second Judicial Departments, or in the Chancellor of the University, assuming that the latter is to be appointed under the unification system, which is to be presented to the Legislature. He also insists that the educational functions of the board should be separated from mere business and legislative functions, so that professional duties may be intrusted solely to professional men and women.

FOR A STATE REFERENDUM.

Bill Introduced in Assembly Provides Also for One Applicable to Municipalities.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Mr. Sanders introduced in the Assemly to-day an amendment to the Constitution providing for a public initiative and referendum. The bill provides that the legislative power of this State shall be vested in the Senate and the Assembly, and, in addition thereto, shall be vested in the electors qualified to vote for Governor. Its principal provisions are as follows:

The right to propose amendments to this Constitution and measures for the government of the whole State shall (in addition to being exercised by members of the Legislature) be vested in any 5 per centum of the voters of the State qualified to vote for Governor; and the right to propose measures for the government of any municipal division of the State (such as county, city, town, township, borough, village, and so forth,) shall in like manner (in addition to being exercised by members of the legislative body or bodies thereof) be vested in any 5 per centum of the voters of any such municipal division qualified to vote for the chief executive or executives of such division.

The right to reject or to approve any measure for the government of the whole State, which shall have been passed by the Legislature, or proposed and submitted by either house thereof, or by the required number of voters under the provisions of this article, shall be vested in the voters qualified to vote for Governor. The right to reject or to approve any measure for the government of any municipal division passed by the Legislature, or by the legislative or other bodies of any such division, or proposed by the voters of such division, shall be vested in the voters of the municipal division affected thereby qualified to vote for chief executive or executives of such division.

The legal designation of the exercise of the right of proposal under the provisions of this article shall be "the initiative"; and the legal designation of the exercise of the right of rejection or approval thereunder shall be "the referendum."

Bills passed by the Legislature other than those declared to be urgent, and which shall become law with or without the approval of the Governor shall go into effect at 12 o'clock noon of the ninetieth day after the final adjournment of the Legislature passing the same, excluding the day of adjournment, or at such later date as may be expressly stated in the bill; but, if a demand for the referendum upon any such bill shall, prior to such hour, be filed with the Secretary of State, the same shall not take effect until approved by the voters.

POWER FOR SCHOOL INSPECTORS.

May Be Allowed to Determine Number of Pupils at Each School.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Assemblyman Maurice M. Minton of New York introduced a bill by which Inspectors of common schools shall be empowered to determine the number of pupils who shall be permitted to attend each school in the school district, and to direct the transfer of pupils from one school to another in the same school district.

Assemblyman Minton said: "My object in introducing this bill is to afford relief if possible in many of the school districts in large cities to schools which are overcrowded while others in the same district are less well attended. It is desirable that children should attend the schools nearest to their homes, and Inspectors do not now have the power to so regulate the attendance of pupils with this object in view. If the bill becomes a law children may be kept off the streets and mothers will be made happier. In large cities this is very desirable."

A NEW CIGARETTE BILL.

Dealers Made Responsible for Purity —Heavy License Fixed.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Assemblyman T. P. Sullivan to-day introduced a bill providing for the better protection of the public health in relation to the manufacture and sale of cigarettes. Dealers must obtain a tax certificate and must make oath that the cigarettes to be sold contain no injurious drugs or narcotics.

The special Deputy Excise Commissioner of Cities of the first class, or his subordinates, may issue certificates, the application for which must be signed by no less than five reputable citizens of the city, county, or town where the applicant resides. The fee is $50. No cigarettes shall be sold to persons under eighteen years of age. A penalty of $50 fine or sixty days' imprisonment is provided.

ANOTHER RECREATION PIER.

Bill Introduced for One at Foot of East Thirteenth Street.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Assemblyman Meister of New York has introduced a bill empowering the Board of Docks to set apart one pier in the Borough of Manhattan at the foot of East Thirteenth Street, New York City, to afford the inhabitants greater opportunity for healthful recreation than they now possess.

The board is authorized to construct or rebuild the pier set apart so as to provide a platform or upper story, and the approaches shall be constructed under the direction of a skilled architect, the intention being to permit the upper story of the pier to be set apart for private use without interference to business occupations, and the lower story open to use of boats and vessels.

BILL TO BENEFIT FIREMEN.

Tammany Will Support the Measure—Republican Opposition.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Senator George W. Plunkitt of New York to-day introduced a bill to give the Fire Commissioner of New York City the right to promote members of the uniformed force of the Fire Department who have saved life at the risk of their own, to the grade next highest to the one held by them, without competitive examination, as is required by the civil service laws. Fire Commissioner Scannell favors the bill, which will have the support of the members of the Tammany delegations in both houses. Senator Plunkitt attempted to get the bill passed to the third reading to-day, but he was unable to do so by reason of an objection raised by Senator John Ford, and the bill was referred to the Cities Committee.

Senator Plunkitt says that Commissioner Scannell wants the bill passed in order to reward the firemen who were mentioned for valor at the time of the Windsor Hotel fire last Spring. Some of the Republican leaders profess to see in the bill an attempt by Tammany to suspend the civil service regulations regarding competitive examinations for promotions, and to reward favorites. For this reason, it is expected that the measure will meet with Republican opposition. A similar bill was introduced last year by Senator Plunkitt, but it was never reported out of committee.

To Abolish Common Law Marriages.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Assemblyman Weekes to-day introduced a bill abolishing common-law marriages. The bill provides that no marriage shall be legal except where there is a written contract signed by both. The bill does not affect common-law marriages already contracted. The provision in the present law providing that "this article does not require any marriage to be solemnized in the manner herein specified" is stricken from the statute.

Building Association Commission.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Senator Marshall today introduced a bill taking building, savings and loan associations from the jurisdiction of the State Banking Department and placing them under a single-headed commission, the commission to be appointed by the Governor, to serve a term of six years, and receive an annual salary of $5,000.

Election Bill to be Passed at Once.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Mr. Henry of New York City to-day introduced a bill in the Assembly which is to legalize, ratify, and confirm nominations of candidates for Assembly to be voted for at a special election in the Thirty-first Assembly District, New York County, on Jan. 23, 1900. The Governor to-morrow morning will send in an emergency message, and the bill will be passed in both houses.

Revision of Surrogate's Code.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Assemblyman James T. Rogers of Binghamton to-day introduced the Surrogate's Code bill as drafted by the Statutory Revision Commission. This bill calls for a general revision of that part of the code governing Surrogate Courts, the most radical change being the abolition of the present dual system of probating wills.

Title Guarantee Companies.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Senator Ellsberg has introduced a bill providing that no title guarantee corporation shall have a smaller capital than $150,000 or a larger capital than $2,000,000. This increases the maximum capital which may be employed by $1,000,000.

Extension of Time for Railways.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—In the Assembly today a bill was introduced by Mr. Sage, amending the railroad law and extending the time from eighteen to twenty-three years in which a railroad corporation, which was incorporated since 1888, shall begin the construction of its road.

To Aid Men-Servants.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Mr. Sanders has introduced a bill providing that male servants and employes as well as female shall be entitled to body executions for wages due.

Civil Service Commissioners' Pay.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Senator Wilcox has introduced a bill increasing the salaries of the Civil Service Commissioners from $2,000 to $3,000 each.

Brief Legislative Sessions.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—Despite the number of bills already introduced in the Senate there was none on the calendar for debate this morning. Senator Ellsworth, President pro tem, presided in the absence of Lieut. Gov. Woodruff. After the introduction of several bills the Senate adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

After the reading of bills introduced the Assembly adjourned at 11:30 A. M. until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning without transacting any business.

Other Assembly Bills.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—The following bills were introduced in the Assembly to-day:

Mr. HILL—Providing that the stenographer to the County Judge of Erie County shall receive a salary of $2,100, together with necessary expenses for stationery.

Mr. A. Z. HYMAN—Providing for the establishment of a public park in the City of Syracuse, in the Seventeenth Ward.

Mr. S. F. HYMAN—Amending the Code of Criminal Procedure so as to provide that the county shall pay for the expense of printing the case and points of appeal of an accused person under trial who is unable to pay for the same.

Mr. HILL—Amending code so as to exclude the jury from the trial room upon motion for a non-suit, or the direction of a verdict during the trial of a cause.

Mr. KNIPP—To authorize the construction of a dike along the Chemung River and appropriating $10,000 therefor.

Mr. MASON—Appropriating $1,500 for repairs to the monument on the Oriskany battlefield and for the Steuben Monument.

Mr. T. P. SULLIVAN—That eight hours shall constitute a legal day's work for members of the police force in cities of the first class, and that they shall not be required to wear uniforms when not on actual duty.

Mr. McMILLAN—Appropriating $14,000 to complete the armory at Schenectady.

Mr. BEDELL—Permitting surface railroad companies in the Counties of Herkimer and Hamilton, located wholly outside the limits of an incorporated city or village, to operate by steam, with the approval of the State Board of Railroad Commissioners.

Mr. WILSON—Allowing Commissioners of Deeds in New York City to take acknowledgments of deeds and administer oaths without filing a certificate of appointment with the County Clerk.

Mr. RODENBECK—Providing that the granting of a certificate of competency by an examining board of any city shall entitle any person holding the same to registration and the right and privilege to engage in the business of employing or master plumber in all the cities of the State.

Mr. COHEN—Providing for the equipment of hacks, cabs, hansoms, automobiles, and all other public carriages or vehicles with cyclometers.

Mr. APGAR—Exempting the towns of Cortland from the provisions of the post-road law.

Mr. J. SULLIVAN—Authorizing electric light companies in cities having a contract with the city to acquire real estate.

The City Pays the State $283,159.41.

ALBANY, Jan. 11.—State Treasurer Jaeckel to-day received from Controller Coler of New York City a check on the City Trust Company of New York City for $283,159.41. This check was for the money collected in New York City during the three months ended Dec. 31 under the taxable transfer act.

TO DISCUSS MISSIONS.

Plan and Scope of the Ecumenical Conference to be Held in April.

Seth Low, President of Columbia University, presided at a meeting held in the assembly hall of the Presbyterian Building last evening for the purpose of setting forth the plan and scope of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions which will be held in this city April 21 to May 1 in the interest of the Protestant missionary societies and missions of the world. The coming conference is designed to be the direct successor of the similar conferences held in London in 1888 and in Mildmay in 1878.

About 2,000 delegates from the United States and Canada are expected to come to this conference, as well as 400 delegates from abroad, including missionaries from Japan, China, India, Korea, Turkey, Palestine, Africa, Brazil, Mexico, Siam, and Syria.

President Low said in part: "At this time of such abounding prosperity, surely there is nothing that Christian people can do that is more timely than to bear witness that only the things that are unseen are eternal. I trust the time is coming when all Christendom—the Eastern Church, our Roman Catholic brethren, and Protestants—may recognize the common purpose for which we all exist and mingle their many colored lights into one white light."

The Rev. Dr. J. T. Gracey of Rochester, President of the International Missionary Union, declared that the Protestants are too much immersed in their denominationalism. "Without sacrificing any of the ideals back of that denominationalism," he said, "we want to get an increased solidarity of the Christian world. The Peace Conference at The Hague was a sort of a convulsive wriggle, but the trend of all internationalism is toward the principles of Jesus Christ."

The Rev. Dr. A. J. Brown said that on Jan. 23, in company with ex-Secretary of State John W. Foster, Col. J. J. McCook and Morris K. Jesup, he will go to Washington to ask President McKinley to attend the conference, of which ex-President Benjamin Harrison will be the honorary President. Charles M. Jesup explained the financial needs of the conference.

The Rev. Dr. W. R. Huntington read a paper on "The Power of a World's Conference on Christian Missions to Beget Higher Ideals, Closer Fellowship, and Better Work."

President J. H. Barrows of Oberlin College said: "I am glad Admiral Dewey anchored Asia off our Western shores, and we are now the dominant nation in the Pacific and hence an Asiastic power. Men who have been opposed to foreign missions heretofore now say that the Gospel must follow the flag."

The committees in charge of the plans held a conference yesterday, which was attended by President Barrows, Dr. Gracey, Dr. G. W. Chamberlain of Brazil, Miss Patrick of the American College for Girls at Constantinople, Miss Gullick of the Girls' College at San Sebastian, Spain, and others.

CITY DELUGED IN RAIN.

Heaviest Downpour of the Winter—Skating on the Sidewalks.

The Weather Bureau people were somewhat startled yesterday afternoon, upon looking out of the window of the local headquarters, to observe that it was raining.

It was an official rain, because the weather man had predicted a week or more ago that New York would have rain "soon." It, furthermore, developed into the heaviest downpour that has occurred in this vicinity this Winter, and was blessed accordingly by the Water Bureau officials and the thousands of New York families who have been haunted for weeks by the fear of a water famine.

It did not look in the morning as if there was going to be anything but sunshine during the day. The sky was clear and bright and the atmosphere was cold and bracing. It seemed to grow gradually colder until noon, when a haze began to gather and thicken until the sky became overcast with a dun-colored blanket.

"Snow," said the oldest inhabitant. The remark was echoed by the unnumbered thousands of amateur weather sharps throughout the city, whereupon a heavy fall of sleet began. The air grew slightly warmer, but not very warm, and by the time the streets had become thickly peppered with the tiny ice pellets there was a slight flurry of snowflakes, extremely modest in size. With this preliminary the rain began about 3 o'clock.

The fall was light at first, just sufficient to transform the entire street area of the city into an ice field upon which pedestrians scrambled, slipped, and skated throughout the remainder of the afternoon. Persons not thoroughly accustomed to the pastime of skating took their lives in their hand, so to speak, when they ventured on the street. The small boy promptly got out his skates and enjoyed the sport until the rain washed the ice off.

By 5 o'clock it was raining heavily, and an hour later a perfect deluge was descending. The downpour continued hour after hour, varied by frequent heavy gusts of wind. At 2 o'clock this morning the rainfall had in nowise abated.

OWNER OF "EXCHANGE" HELD.

C. E. Newberry of New Haven Charged with Embezzlement.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 11.—Charles E. Newberry, who has been doing business under the firm name of the New England Mercantile Exchange, with headquarters in this city, is locked up at the police station, charged with embezzlement. Newberry has branch offices in Hartford and other places, and was first taken into custody in the former city this afternoon, charged with embezzlement on six counts. Other charges have been preferred against him by New Haven parties, and he will have to face twelve counts.

Newberry "boomed" his exchange extensively, and sent out circulars broadcast, advertising for "silent" partners. It is alleged that he secured several dupes. His arrest was brought about by a Hartford man who had subscribed $25 to the business and also paid $25 for office furniture.

It is also alleged that Newberry made collections and failed to turn over the money.

TO HELP GOV. TAYLOR.

Republican Leaders Expect Aid from Washington If Goebel Is Seated —Bryan's Attitude.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 11.—The Republican leaders, while not abandoning the fight against Goebel in the Legislature, are eagerly awaiting news from Washington as to what aid the Federal Government would give the Taylor administration in the event that Goebel is seated by the Legislature. They are advising Gov. Taylor to resist in case the Legislature decides in favor of Goebel, and are promising him support.

George A. Tweed, whom Gov. Bradley appointed Senator in 1896, but who was not seated, said to-night: "Taylor has been elected, and if he is turned out by an arbitrary board we should not countenance its action. We should fight, if it be necessary."

There was a conference to-night of Republican leaders from all over the State, among whom were several prominent Federal office holders, and it is said stronger pressure is to be brought to bear at Washington in favor of Taylor than has been exercised heretofore.

The sentiment of all those attending the conference was decidedly bellicose, and the feeling is somewhat heightened by the fact that at least three of the legislative contests are so near completion to-night as to assure a vote on them next week, and that a majority of them are nearly certain to be disposed of before the contests for Governor and Lieutenant Governor are voted on.

The silver Democrats who are opposing Goebel claim to have direct information that Mr. Bryan does not approve of the contests which are being prosecuted by Goebel and the other Democratic candidates. They went so far to-day as to say that Bryan had written a letter to Blackburn discouraging the contests. National Committeeman Urey Woodson, who was in conference with Bryan in Chicago last Sunday, gave emphatic and positive denial to these claims to-night. He said:

"I discussed the Kentucky political situation with Mr. Bryan thoroughly, and I know there is no foundation for these stories."

It is said Mr. Bryan feels that the Democratic leaders are capable of settling their own affairs and that he will have no advice to offer them on the subject of the contests when he comes here to attend the banquet on the occasion of Blackburn's election next Tuesday.

Gov. Taylor to-day filed with the Election Contest Committee a motion to require the Democratic members now serving on the committee to vacate. The motion was in the nature of a formal protest. It is supported by an affidavit charging that the names were fraudulently drawn by the clerk, and the Democratic members now serving are all disqualified by reason of partiality for the contestant, alleged evidence of which is mentioned specifically as to each.

The protest refers to the rules of the committee, which, he says, were so framed as to exclude the greater part of his testimony and charges in general terms that the trial of the contest is about to be made throughout on partisan lines and without regard to the merits of the case.

ACCUSES SOLDIER HUSBAND.

Leslie V. Mockridge, a member of the Seventy-first Regiment, was arrested by Deputy Sheriff Kelly yesterday on an order issued by Justice Andrews of the Supreme Court as the result of an action brought against him by his wife, Irene, who lives at 293 Amsterdam Avenue. Some time ago Mockridge brought suit for absolute divorce from his wife. She has since filed a cross-complaint, in which she denies all the allegations of her husband, and charges him with improprieties.

Mrs. Mockridge charges her husband with having shirked his duty to his country while he was serving with the Seventy-first Regiment in Cuba. Mrs. Mockridge does not specify in what manner her husband shirked his duty, leaving that for proof on the trial.

TANNER ATTACKS CULLOM.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—The Tribune to-morrow will print a long interview with Gov. Tanner, in which the Governor makes a bitter personal attack upon Senator Shelby M. Cullom. Gov. Tanner declares at the outset that he is not a candidate for the Senate or any other political office, but that he is strongly opposed to the return of Senator Cullom to the Senate.

He declares the Senator has never been known to do anything of advantage to the Republican Party and that he has betrayed all those who ever befriended him. Gov. Tanner then goes on to say that Senator Cullom has never kept faith politically with anybody when it was to his interest to do otherwise. The interview is bitter throughout.

DEWEY FUND INCREASING.

Charles Nicoll, Secretary of the Dewey Arch Committee, was surprised yesterday when he was told of rumors that it was possibly the Dewey arch project would have to be abandoned owing to the lack of subscriptions. Mr. Nicoll said the rumor was not true and that it has never been thought possible that there would be failure. It is now the intention of the Executive Committee to publish a complete list of subscribers within a week or so, which, it is thought, will give added impetus to the project.

The total amount so far received, estimated, is $210,000. Almost $7,000 was received yesterday. The largest subscription was from J. Pierpont Morgan, who has sent a check for $5,000 to the committee. Another check for $1,000 was received from another Wall Street banker.

COTTON MEN ELECT OFFICERS.

Protest from Memphis as to Present Form of Contracts.

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 11.—The Cotton States Association of Commissioners of Agriculture to-day re-elected all its old officers to serve for another year.

The following telegram from Memphis was read: "We, the undersigned, interested in the prosperity of the cotton producers of the South, respectfully suggest that your association by resolution request the Cotton Exchanges of New Orleans and New York to change their contracts for future delivery of cotton; to clearly define in each and every one the grade of cotton to be delivered, so that the buyer may know what he is buying, and be placed on an equal footing with the seller. We do this because under the present basis of contract middling is a lever being used to depreciate the value of our great staple and, instead, we want the contract to be a mercantile transaction."

The telegram was signed by George Arnold, T. M. Norfleet, McNeal Bond, S. Lundee, Robert Wilkerson, and H. S. Spinning.

FOUR INDICTMENTS DISMISSED.

Four indictments on charges of keeping bucket shops, which had been hanging fire for a long time, were dismissed yesterday by Judge McMahon in General Sessions.

The first indictment to come up was against Francis A. Eggleston, whose place at 53 New Street was raided on May 14, 1899. Assistant District Attorney Townsend admitted that he had no positive proof against Eggleston, and said that the charges made in the three other indictments he was about to try were based on similar statements to those made in the indictments against Eggleston.

Judge McMahon then dismissed all of the indictments. The defendants in the other cases were Conrad Fischer and Clara Phillips of 51 New Street; Patrick F. O'Connor, Edgar S. Bootay, and John Harris, who represented the Knickerbocker Stock Company of 40 Broadway, and Joseph Gray of 46 New Street.

Many Appeal for Pardon of Convict.

CHICAGO, Jan. 11.—Twenty-seven petitions bearing the signatures of 2,500 citizens pleading for executive clemency in favor of Edward Curtis Cole were sent to Gov. McMillin of Tennessee to-day. Cole is incarcerated in the convict coal mines, completing a sentence of thirty years for a burglary committed in Memphis more than eleven years ago. After serving sixteen months of his sentence he escaped and came to Chicago, where he secured a position with the Pullman Palace Car Company, married, and joined a church. Last September an old acquaintance met Cole on the street and betrayed him to the Tennessee officers for a reward of $25.

Driven to Suicide by Melancholia.

Michael Biderman, fifty-three years old, who lived with his wife and two daughters at 229 East Fourth Street, committed suicide yesterday morning by jumping from the fire escape on the third story of his home. He was instantly killed. Biderman was a furrier. For several months he has been afflicted with melancholia, superinduced by the fear that he was going blind.

MANILA RAILWAY LOSES.

Its Application for Payment by the United States of Interest Guaranteed by Spain Denied.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—Acting Secretary Meiklejohn of the War Department has denied the application of the Manila Railway Company, Limited, for payment by the United States of interest on the capital invested in the railway and operated by the company pursuant to the guarantee of the interest by the Spanish Government.

The company, a corporation organized under the laws of Great Britain, obtained a concession from the Spanish Government for a railroad from Manila to Dagupan, in the Island of Luzon, a distance of about 130 miles. By the terms of the concession the Spanish Government guaranteed a return of 8 per cent. a year upon the capital invested in the railroad. The claimants represent that the amount originally so invested was $4,964,400, but that the amount was subsequently increased, with the concurrence of the Spanish authorities, to $5,353,700.89.

The Spanish Government, up to the time of the Spanish-American war, fulfilled its obligations under this contract by paying quarterly installments of the interest as they became due, the amount varying with the earnings of the railway.

The railway company contends that the United States, by assuming sovereignty over the Philippines in accordance with the terms of the treaty of peace with Spain, became bound to make good the obligations of the Spanish Government under the concession, and should pay the amounts due since the date of the treaty of peace, which aggregate $237,088.

BULLARD DEFEATS INSURGENTS.

Many Filipinos Killed and Sixty Taken Prisoners Near Calamba.

MANILA, Jan. 11.—Col. Bullard, with the Thirty-ninth Infantry, moving in three columns from Calamba, with two guns, attacked ten companies of insurgents strongly intrenched on the Santa Tomas Road. They resisted stubbornly, making three stands.

Twenty-four of the rebels were killed and sixty prisoners were taken. The Filipinos retreated, carrying their wounded, toward Lake Taal. One American was killed and two officers were slightly wounded.

Albany's Endurance Trial Successful.

NEWCASTLE, England, Jan. 11.—The new United States cruiser Albany, which received an official trial off this port on Jan. 9, completed her endurance trial to-day. It consisted of a continuous run of six hours under natural draught. The test was very successful. The ship behaved well in a heavy sea. The result of the trial was as follows: Average speed, per hour, 19.54 knots; revolutions, 149; horsepower, 5,624; coal consumed, 144 tons per 24 hours.

Puerto Rican Delegations Sail.

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico, Jan. 11.—The three delegations recently appointed to lay before the Government at Washington the special needs of Puerto Rico sailed to-day for the United States on the Philadelphia. Señors Finlay, Luce, and Juncos go on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce; Señors Gonzales and Amadeo will represent the agricultural interests, and Señors Ames and Larriniga the Federal Party. Señors Morales and Latimer, the republican delegates, will probably sail on Saturday.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

ERIE & WESTERN'S BOOKS REMOVED

Taken to the Road's New Offices in the Grand Central Station.

The books of the Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company, which on Wednesday passed into the control of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway Company, were yesterday removed from 80 Broadway to the offices of the "Big Four" and "Nickel Plate," on the fourth floor of the Vanderbilt Avenue offices at the Grand Central Station. Here will be the offices of Erie and Western, whose financial affairs will be looked after by the new Vice President, Treasurer, and Secretary, Charles F. Cox. Erie and Western making the twenty-seventh Vanderbilt corporation of which he is an officer. The offices of the company at 80 Broadway will be abandoned and the clerical staff there will be left to look after the railroad and other interests in which Gen. Thomas and his associates have control.

President W. H. Newman left for Cleveland, Ohio, the Lake Shore headquarters, Wednesday evening, where in a few days he will be joined by Vice President Cox. Next week they will inspect the entire Erie and Western system and make plans for changes in its operating force in the direction both of economy and efficiency. At Indianapolis there is a large office force which it is planned to greatly reduce

IN THE BOWLING ALLEYS.

The Hooker, Swiss American, and Gotham teams each won and lost a game in the North Side National League last night. The final game of the night, between the Gothams and the Hookers, furnished some excellent sport. The teams were almost even until the final frame, when the Gothams, by good strike bowling, drew away, and won by twenty-nine pins. Morris of the Gothams made the best individual showing. He made an average of 169 for two games. Scores:

FIRST GAME.

Hooper—Junge, 163; Bunderzwagg, 191; Diercks, 159; Ronner, 159; Pump, 173. Total, 837.

Swiss American—Schmidt, 152; Bennett, 158; Schock, 172; Du Bois, 165; Steadli, 175. Total, 822.

SECOND GAME.

Swiss American—Schmidt, 175; Bennett, 169; Schock, 137; Du Bois, 155; Steadli, 160. Total, 796.

JOCKEY CLUB MEETING.

Rule Governing Dead Heats Amended—Proposal to Limit Two-Year-Old Races Rejected.

Frank R. Hitchcock submitted yesterday to The Jockey Club a number of amendments to the rules of racing, all of which are of vital importance. The amendments related especially to the racing of two-year-olds, and when copies of them were sent out in the racing calendar some weeks ago they were read and approved by almost every turfman who has at heart the best interests of the sport. Mr. Hitchcock attempted first to limit in a measure the too early racing of the two-year-old, but this measure was promptly voted down yesterday at the annual meeting of The Jockey Club. One of the amendments that will also be valuable as part of the rules was adopted. The amendment that was voted down was, to the minds of many turfmen, the one the passage of which would mean much to the future of the thoroughbred. Mr. Hitchcock's idea in framing it was to do away in a measure with the premature racing of the good two-year-olds. He presumed that the owner of a two-year-old that promised to be of stake class would save the animal for richer events later rather than race him in mediocre company before June 1 for small purses. In case the animal won in the cheap purses, he would incur a penalty which would handicap him in a struggle for a rich prize, and the amendment would, if it had been adopted, have been the means of saving some of the best of the two-year-olds until they were properly matured.

The veterinary surgeons maintain, and a great many owners and trainers have found it out by experience, to their cost, that a two-year-old's bones are soft until the animal is at least sixteen or seventeen months old. The thoroughbred, although he may be only thirteen months old on Jan. 1, becomes a two-year-old that day and is eligible to compete in two-year-old races. When raced much before the bones have hardened, the thoroughbred develops all sorts of troubles, and this early racing is responsible for the spavins, ringbones, and other ailments that make cripples of some of the most highly bred horses ever foaled.

Paragraph 1 of Part 17 of the racing rules was amended to read as follows:

"In races not of heats, a dead heat for the first place is to be run off on the same day, at the time the Stewards appoint, but at an interval of not less than twenty minutes, unless the race admits of division and the owners agree to divide; but if the horses running a dead heat be two years old the dead heat shall not be run off and owners shall divide."

The adoption of this amendment will be welcomed by those who protest against the abuse of the horse. One such case came up last season, with the result that neither Frelinghuysen nor Keenan, the horses engaged, was ever afterward fit to race in good company.

The Secretary's and Treasurer's reports for the year were read. August Belmont, J. H. Bradford, James R. Keene, and F. K. Sturgis were re-elected Stewards for two years.

TROTTING MEN'S CONFERENCE.

The National and American Associations to Work in Harmony.

The representatives of the National Trotting Association and the American Trotting Association were in conference all day yesterday at the Murray Hill Hotel. They adopted a resolution providing that all fines or other penalties imposed by either parent association shall be recognized and enforced by the other parent association, through its members and otherwise, the same as though imposed by itself. The resolution also provides that neither association will receive in its membership a member of the other association after leaving that body.

The rules of both associations are being revised, with a view to making them uniform. All of the proceedings are subject to the approval of the congresses of the associations.

KNICKERBOCKER LADIES' DAY.

A Good Programme and a Large Attendance, Despite the Rain.

Despite the rain yesterday a large number of ladies were present at the monthly ladies' day of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club. In the afternoon a musicale was held in the theatre, in which Miss Martha Miner, Florence Adele Mulford, G. Leon Moore, and Gwilym Miles appeared as soloists. The members of the New York University gymnastic team gave an exhibition in the gymnasium in the evening, under the direction of F. H. Cann. After this the basket ball teams of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club and St. Joseph Young Men's Christian Association of Paterson, N. J., played a game, which was won by the home team, which scored 18 goals to his opponent's 2. G. A. Hering finished first in the potatoe race, with J. Edwards second.

In the natatorium an exhibition water polo game was played between two teams of Knickerbocker Athletic Club members, called the Reds and Blacks. H. H. Reeder, Captain of last year's water polo team, who had been in Canada, took part in this match. Neither side was able to obtain an advantage, and the score at the finish was a tie, each making two goals. Between the halves G. W. Miller gave an exhibition, swimming 100 yards in 1:06 2-5. Diving exhibitions by H. H. Wotherspoon, F. Clarke, and A. Roosevelt brought the programme to a close.

Mr. Odell and Prisefights.

Chairman B. B. Odell, Jr., of the Republican State Committee returned from Albany last night and when seen by a TIMES reporter at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, said:

"What I said about the McGovern-Dixon fight and the Horton law was wildly exaggerated in some of the newspapers. It should not have been noticed, for my remarks were purely in a jocular vein. I have nothing more to say about it."

Hockey at St. Nicholas Rink.

The Hockey Club of New York defeated the Naval Reserve team at hockey last night at the St. Nicholas Skating Rink in an interesting game by a score of 5 to nothing. De Casanova and B. Phillips made the goals in the first half. In the second half Russell scored twice and De Casanova once.

Harvard to Play Pennsylvania.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 11.—C. D. Daly, Captain of the Harvard football team, has made a statement to the Harvard Crimson that Harvard will play Pennsylvania at football next season.

AS TO TYPEWRITTEN LETTERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Apropos of some discussion in THE TIMES as to the expediency of using the typewriter for "personal" correspondence, let me say that a recent experience of my own ourned into my intelligence a realizing sense of the situation there indicated.

I had occasion to bring to the attention of a busy man of affairs a matter that concerned my own interests in far greater degree than his, and one which would have seemed to receive courteous and adequate response in just such a formal "dictated" letter as would be a matter of course from an attorney or banker or busy editor. But the man of large responsibilities did more than this. Not only did he go out of his way to investigate and adjust, but he finally epitomized the whole matter in an autograph letter, which seemed per se to admit of a turn of phrase and a clear enlightenment that increased the value of its advice twofold—thereby awakening in the recipient a sense of the liveliest appreciation.

Here let me say, in the same generous and logical spirit which animated Adam in the garden, that what now followed was really all the fault of Mr. Brander Matthews. We all know that whenever that writer puts his pen to paper to tell a story or otherwise to hold forth at any length, he sharpens said pen into a scalpel and manages somewhere to give an unexpected stab at some one whom we care for or admire, and whose foibles or characteristics we resent having impaled and held up to derision; or else he bunches up a fine posy, which seems just an attractive arrangement of flowers of rhetoric, which you eagerly grasp—and get stung yourself! There is a nettle in it! I never saw his beat.

There is no need to particualrize; verily each set of victims knoweth its own bitterness. But to link this deplorable habit with my own experience, I must instance, for once.

Now, if charming Mrs. Sherwood, out of the abundance of her knowledge, should wish to enlighten us on a point of social usage, she would simply say, sweetly and explicitly: "My dear friends, thus and so is bad form; avoid it." But not so Mr. Matthews. By no means. He proceeds to write a book and works it in. He hunts around that section of the Middle West which is making rapid strides toward becoming a literary centre, finds an able young journalist, rapidly rising in literature, brings him on to Greater New York, and then adroitly causes said able, rapidly rising young victim to receive a dinner invitation from a "littérateur of prominence"; to which he sends his acceptance—on a postal card!

Having reached this episode in Mr. Matthew's latest, I stopped! Before my mind's eye arose a vision of other readers, rising young literary men all over the country, and able young journalists here in New York, already well up the ladder, as laying down the book with a sick look at this point and striving to recall whether they had ever accepted a dinner invitation from Mr. Matthews, and if so—? But after all, there is a certain horrid fascination about the thing. Immediately conjecture was busy as to future situations, trying to fix the point on which our author's next plot would hinge. Very likely—was the conclusion reached—since most other effective copy for characters had had each his own dig, a shortage in rival subjects would necessitate that the next lesson in conventional ethics be the portrayal of some railroad magnate or trust company's President, who had utilized a typewritten letter in semi-social correspondence and forthwith was silhouetted for a prize puzzle.

At this climacteric moment arrived my letter with its kind features of supererogation. Now this busy man of affairs is a man of culture. That is to say, at least to the extent that he could appreciate his Matthewsiana and doubtless keeps well acquainted with its issues "as it is written." Let me ask you, Sir, could a happier thought have occurred to one who was casting about for a brief, yet fit acknowledgment of a valued favor, than to send thanks that said esteemed service rendered had not been summarily dismissed with a formal type-written letter, thus forestalling in the mind of my good genius any reminiscent wonder that might occur to him—when he should peruse my favorite author's inevitable next forthcoming—as to whether a certain wide margin of courtesy on his part had ever been truly appreciated? If it could, it did not. For such was the assurance sent in the guileless belief that thus the matter was happily closed with a wise provision for a "confident to-morrow."

But it was not thus to be. As time elapsed new contingencies arose, and conditions changed. Our friend of kind heart and many cares wrote once again. And this was the first sentence that met my eye: "I must ask pardon for a 'type-written' letter, but not otherwise under present stress of correspondence could I advise you and yours in time of events which are important to your interests."

So then, what had I done? Simply presumed to establish a ruling that would bar as unacceptable a convenient form by which valuable aid could be rendered with the least embarrassment to the benefactor. A condition which might be vital. I suppose there is a moral in all this, but I did not seek its point. I merely took to heart the lesson it held for me; wherefore this expression of sympathy with the timely suggestions in your valuable paper.

CYNTHIA.

New York, Jan. 7, 1900.

ANTITOXIN IN DIPHTHERIA.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter published in yeaterday's (Sunday's) TIMES, over the signature of James J. Russell of 1,123 Broadway, entitled "Treating Diphtheria," I read with both interest and regret. I say with interest, because I know Mr. Russell very well indeed, and regret, because his letter amounts to a serious attack on the New York Board of Health, in the integrity and honesty of whose members I have unlimited confidence.

In this controversy it occurs to me that one of two things must be true—either that Mr. Russell is a misguided and misinformed enthusiast or the New York Board of Health is dead to every sense of duty, and, I might add, guilty of a criminal dereliction of duty. My own sense of reason and observation prompts me to believe that no intelligent body of men would, knowingly, withhold from suffering and dying children a remedy which would, if used, save their lives. Yet the statements made by the writer of the letter referred to clearly imply that such is the case. In view of these charges, it seems to me that an explanation is at once called for on the part of the Board of Health or a prompt retraction of his statements on the part of Mr. Russell. In the absence of either of these, my notion is that a legislative inquiry should be had.

It is barely possible that the present system under which the Board of Health is now operating with reference to the sale of its own manufacture of a remedy for this disease may be the underlying cause.

I am now and for many years past have been a member of the Legislature of this State. I am greatly in favor of progress in all branches of human endeavor. If some remedy is known to-day which has, or is reasonably believed to have, great merit, humanity is entitled to the benefit of it. If, under our present system of management of the Health Department, there exists any cause for unfairly and unfairly discriminating in favor of the use of one remedy to the exclusion of another, and which possibly may be better, such cause should be promptly removed. I am not unfamiliar with this whole controversy, because the matter was up for consideration, indirectly, before the Assembly last Winter, and was there pending for at least five or six weeks. It arose in this way: Some five years ago the Assembly authorized the New York Board of Health to sell its surplus antitoxin, and provided that the proceeds of such sales should constitute a special fund known as "The Antitoxin Fund." This fund, I believe, it was provided, should be subject to requisition by the Board of Health for the purpose of carrying on scientific investigations. Mr. Collier, a Republican member from Brooklyn, introduced a bill to repeal that provision of the law which authorized the Board of Health to sell its surplus serums. There were many supporters of this bill, and none more strongly in evidence than Mr. Russell. He appeared before every meeting of the Committee on the Affairs of Cities when the bill was under consideration and buttonholed many, if not all, of the members to support the bill. The bill was twice favorably reported from the committee to the House, and was finally beaten by a large vote. I opposed the measure very strongly and spoke against it on the floor of the House. With the light I then had upon the subject, I believed I was right, but since that time so many things have transpired that a doubt has arisen in my mind whether I should have done as I did. Among those who opposed the bill, and who made more than one trip to Albany for that purpose, were Dr. A. H. Doty and Dr. Herman M. Biggs. Mr. Russell openly charged before the committee and in the lobby that these gentlemen were personally interested in sacredly guarding this fund, which came from the sales of antitoxin disposed of by the board in Chicago, Kansas City, San Francisco, and throughout the United States. He charged that Dr. Biggs was President of the New York Veterinary College and that his cousin, George P. Biggs, was its Treasurer; that this Veterinary College had the care of all the horses owned by the city, which were being bled in the production of antitoxin, and that several thousand dollars per year were being received from that source. He further charged that antitoxin treatment was the pet remedy of Dr. Biggs, who is the city bacteriologist and pathologist, and that the said Biggs was so prejudiced in favor of this remedy that he would not permit even the trial of the corrected chlorine method, discovered by Dr. P. M. Bracelin. Whether these charges be true or not true, I am of the opinion that an investigation of all the facts and circumstances surrounding this matter should be promptly had. If the system is to blame, rather than the man, it would be an easy matter to change the system and have the testing of the value of remedies for those serious contagious and infectious diseases looked into by a commission composed of men who could have no possible interest, directly or indirectly, other than the benefit of humanity.

I am not now criticising the New York Board of Health, nor am I opposed to the building of more diphtheria hospitals, but, if the inhalation of a modified chlorine preparation will prevent diphtheria, or in any way aid in lessening the death rate from this awful disease, then I for one feel that I cannot do my duty to myself and the constituency which I represent without exerting myself, as far as lies within my ability, to bring about its use.

THE TIMES is to be congratulated on taking up this important matter, because in this way only can the truth eventually be arrived at. If the remedy have no value, this fact can be quickly discovered by putting it to the test. If the board has already, as stated by Mr. Russell in the letter which you published, tested it in thirty-five cases of genuine diphtheria without a single failure; if Dr. Feeney, whom I know personally, and who is a Health officer of the Borough of Richmond, tested it successfully in fifty cases, then it seems to me that its use should be continued uninterruptedly in the diphtheria hospitals of the city until such time as a series of failures arises which would equal at least the death rate now shown under the antitoxin treatment. The most important statement found in the letter referred to, and the one which has perhaps the greatest weight with me in giving this subject any attention at this time, is the fact that the Bracelin solutions or inhalant is not a patent medicine nor has the doctor kept his remedy a secret, but, on the other hand, has furnished to our Board of Health his complete formula. I know how slow the medical profession are to adopt or even to experiment with new methods. I know, too, that a conservative course is always commendable, yet, at the same time, this conservatism should not be carried so far as to completely tie the wheels of progress.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

OFFICE OF THE TREASURER.
GENERAL OFFICE, PHILADELPHIA,
DECEMBER 13, 1899.

To the Stockholders of the Pennsylvania R. R. Co.

At a meeting of the board held this day the following resolution was, on motion, adopted:

"Resolved, That, for the purpose of providing a portion of the necessary capital for construction and equipment expenditures, during the year 1900, on the main and leased lines and branches, and for other corporate purposes, the privilege be given to stockholders of the Company to subscribe, at par, between December 27th, 1899, and January 20th, 1900, ON WHICH LATTER DATE THE PRIVILEGE WILL CEASE, for ten per cent. of their respective holdings as they stand registered at three o'clock P. M. on December 26, 1899. The privilege of subscribing may be sold by any stockholder. Payment in full for such stock may be made after January 14th, and must be made not later than January 20th, 1900. Receipts, which will also be negotiable, will be given bearing interest at the rate of five per cent. from January 20th to May 1st, 1900, (being 70 cents per share,) at which time said receipts will cease to bear interest.

"Certificates for the new Stock will be delivered on and after May 1st, 1900, on surrender of the receipts. Receipts covering fractions of shares will be converted into Stock when presented in multiples of Fifty dollars. All receipts must be presented for conversion before January 1st, 1901, on and after which date they will only be redeemed, at par, in cash."

Blank forms, giving the particulars of the payments as above recited, forms of subscription, and allotment of privilege, etc., can be obtained on application at this office after December 20, 1899.

Stockholders desiring their new Certificates for full shares by May 1st must deposit their receipts with the Transfer Department of the Company on or before March 15th, 1900. For all receipts for full shares deposited after that date, and for all fractional receipts, Certificates will be ready for delivery as soon after May 1st as practicable, of which notice will be given.

The Colorado Coal and Iron Company,

6% MORTGAGE BONDS.

The Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, successor, by consolidation, to The Colorado Coal & Iron Company, proposes to extend above bonds at the rate of 6% per annum until February 1, 1902, the present security and lien to remain in full force, the principal and interest of the extended bonds to be payable in gold.

Arrangements have been made to purchase the bonds not extended by the holders, and to extend the same. Bondholders who wish to avail themselves of the privilege of extending the bonds may notify the Knickerbocker Trust Company at once of their intention so to do, and must present their bonds at the office of the Knickerbocker Trust Company, No. 66 Broadway, New York, between January 15th and January 27th, 1900, to have the contract of extension and new coupon sheets attached.

Bonds not extended by present holders should be presented to the Knickerbocker Trust Company on February 1, 1900, when par and the last coupon will be paid on the same.

JOHN L. JEROME, Treasurer.

TO THE HOLDERS OF Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway Co.

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS.

Default having been made in the principal of the above bonds, which became due on the first day of January, 1900, and foreclosure proceedings having been begun in pursuance of a plan of reorganization, formulated by the Company, under which plan the security of the bonds is seriously impaired:

At the request of a large number of holders of these bonds, resident in England, who have deposited their bonds under the Bondholders' Protective Agreement, dated December 21, 1899, the undersigned have agreed to represent the interests of the bondholders.

Holders of bonds in the United States can become parties to this agreement by depositing their bonds with the Central Trust Company of New York City, under said Protective Agreement, copies of which may be obtained from the Trust Company or at our office. Prompt deposit of the bonds is advisable.

SOME EXCITEMENT IN COFFEE.

The Coffee Exchange experienced an unusual flurry yesterday, as a result of report that bubonic plague had broken out in Rio Janeiro. The market made a net advance of from 15 to 25 points in various deliveries, after another erratic course, as the result of this report, and the day's transactions aggregated nearly 77,000 bags.

The basis of the report was a cablegram from Rio Janeiro to a coffee house in this city, saying that there was a case or cases there in which bubonic plague was suspected. This report was given to a broker, who saw fit to circulate it as being to the effect that bubonic plague had broken out at Rio. In response to questions as to whether the cable so stated, he said that he had understood it that way. Although the various cables which a number of New York coffee houses would have naturally expected if the plague were undoubtedly present in Rio Janeiro did not put in any appearance, and although European interests were apparently disposed to sell, in spite of the fact that bubonic plague at Rio Janeiro would be likely to be known in Europe as quickly as here, the market developed a bullish tendency rapidly. Shorts made a scramble to cover, and the price of all deliveries advanced quickly amid considerable excitement.

When prices averaging 35 or 40 points ahead of Wednesday's closing were reached, the impression prevailed that the cable news had been distorted in the first place—apparently to suit long interests—and furthermore that confirmatory news was lacking. A reaction commenced to set in. It was helped along by the profit-taking of those who had bought early in the day, and as a result coffee went off from the high prices some 20 points on the average before the close.

Another announcement made early on the Exchange, from cable advices received on Wednesday, was that a certain large coffee firm of Rio Janeiro, Santos, Rio Grande, and Hamburg had suspended payments. This concern did not owe a bag of coffee here, however, so that the news of its misfortune had hardly any appreciable effect in increasing the bullish tendency of the market. The trade is now awaiting with some interest news of the possible case of bubonic plague at Rio Janeiro.

TAXATON OF TRUST COMPANIES.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the news columns of to-day's issue you have an article headed "War on Trust Companies." It is descriptive of proposed changes in the tax laws to be made by the Legislature.

Those who have examined the taxation question, with reference to banks and trust companies, have generally concluded that the method of taxation of the latter represents the better thought on the subject. The only reason for the continued attack on this method seems to lie in the theory that the larger number being taxed in a way different from that applied to the smaller number, it necessarily follows that the former must be correct. In this, as in other practical affairs, quality rather than quantity should govern.

The aim of all taxation should be to levy the burdens of the cost of government equitably on all taxpayers. The present method of taxing trust companies reaches all their assets that are taxable—a most troublesome matter in most cases for the Assessor. It has the advantage of the checks afforded by the system of department examinations and sworn reports published to the Assessor, as well as any one else. It takes out of the question anything like arbitrary decision by the Assessor such as may (or will) creep in when estimating the value of a stock. It levies the tax directly upon the corporation, rather than on the individual, and falls pro rata on all the stock.

You aptly say "War on Trust Companies." It is as useless as war usually is. The proposals are retrograde, because the method attacked is better than the one proposed when viewed from the standpoint of proper taxation. It were better the banks should be taxed in the same manner as are the trust companies. In the case of the National banks, if that course be found impossible, under present circumstances, the struggle should be directed so as to permit them to be taxed in the same equable way the trust companies are taxed, for the old rule applies—"Two wrongs do not make one right." THE OTHER SIDE.

Middletown, N. Y., Jan. 10, 1900.

Some Gold from Cuba.

The North American Trust Company recently received another $1,000,000 in Spanish gold of insular receipts from Cuba, as it is acting as the Government's fiscal agent in this matter. The gold, which included Spanish doubloons of as early a date as 1770, and of great interest to collectors, came up in the transport Sedgwick, and was deposited in the United States Assay Office, to be melted up. Some of these coins were rescued, however, by enthusiastic numismatists who learned of their being at the Assay Office, and were enabled to get them by paying their assay value.

general that the common stock dividend would be either reduced or passed; and evidence of this was offered in the fact that certain interests were offering the dividend at a large reduction from the regular price.

A story was put out on the street that, in spite of President Havemeyer's statement, the sugar war was nearing an end; but at the office of B. H. Howell, Son & Co., who represent the Mollenhouer and National Companies, it was said there was nothing in the report of which they knew.

In this connection the Street recalls that it was James B. Post, a member of B. H. Howell, Son & Co., who some time ago declared not only that the Sugar Trust was losing money but that its dividends were being paid out of its surplus.

TRACTION STOCKS DECLINE.

After Sugar, the local traction stocks were easily the most conspicuous on the list. Starting out with apparently no special news concerning them, it was not long before a great batch of stories were in circulation in reference to them all. Some of these stories were so absurd that they were dignified with little or no notice; others were apparently regarded as of more consequence, and the result was that when the day closed each of the stocks marked a net decline—in the case of Brooklyn Rapid Transit of 2⅜ points, of Third Avenue of 6¼ points, of Metropolitan of 5½ points, and of Manhattan of 1¾ points. But, severe as these losses were, they were not as heavy as they would have been had the low prices of the day reigned, for in all the stocks, except Third Avenue, profit taking toward the end of the day carried the prices up several points.

Chief of the factors contributing to the decline of the stocks was the report on the Street that important interests not hitherto mentioned purposed to bid on the underground railway, and that these interests would be found to be opposed to those in control of the local traction roads.

In Manhattan a speculative clique, which is said to have borrowed 100,000 shares recently, is understood to have sought to further the weakness. The decline brought out from original holders a considerable number of puts, running for various dates, which are said to have been sold by Russell Sage.

As for Metropolitan and Third Avenue, there was nothing new, though in respect to these, as to the others, much talk of diminished profits, &c., in the future was heard. Philadelphia liquidation, referred to elsewhere, also affected Metropolitan.

FEDERAL STEEL'S LOSS.

Federal Steel common was sold yesterday, it is alleged, in order to allow some certain interests to get in at a low figure in order to take advantage of the coming 2¼ per cent. dividend. The net loss for the day was 1¼ points, though at one time the decline was a full point greater.

Boston interests were among the buyers, a Wall Street bulletin announcing that interests in that city had been officially informed "that during the second week in February, probably Feb. 13, the Directors of the Federal Steel Company will meet and declare dividends aggregating 2¼ per cent. on the common stock, which, with the 1¼ per cent. declared this week, will make 3½ per cent., and will place Federal Steel common stock upon a 5 per cent. dividend basis."

The checks for the recently declared dividend are now being sent out.

STOCK STRONGLY HELD.

The strong interests who are holders of Southern Pacific were in evidence yesterday, and, though efforts were made to break the stock below 36, the quotation not only held firmly, but—all the more remarkable in a market which for the most part showed declines—actually appreciated three-eighths of a point.

TOBACCO GOES DOWN.

American Tobacco was conspicuously weak yesterday, at one time falling as low as 95⅜, on outside selling, and also on further talk of aggressive and effective competition on the part of other tobacco companies. Continental Tobacco's weakness was due to the report that its factories in Louisville are now running only half time.

GOOD EARNINGS IGNORED.

The declines of St. Paul and Chicago Great Western were specially noticeable yesterday, in view of the fact that statements were issued by both roads showing continuing increased earnings. For the first week in January St. Paul earned $688,490, as compared with $681,020 a year ago, while in the same time Chicago Great Western's earnings amounted to $106,080, as compared with $92,710 in the first week of last year.

SELLING BY BOSTON.

The selling of Burlington yesterday came largely from Boston, which was a heavy seller of the same stock in the December panic. Nothing could be learned for the reasons of the selling.

DISAPPOINTING STATEMENT.

While Missouri Pacific's weakness yesterday was no doubt in part due to the generally weak tone of the market, it was also contributed to by the report of earnings of the road for the first week of the new year, which showed a decline of $5,000, as compared with the same week last year.

TALK OF CONSOLIDATION.

In connection with the annual meeting of the National Starch Manufacturing Company which is announced to be held in Covington, Ky., Feb. 7, the Street hears that a consolidation of all starch interests is shortly to be effected.

DEALINGS IN FEW STOCKS.

As an evidence of the one-sidedness of yesterday's market it may be said that the dealings in Sugar Trust stocks amounted to fully one-third of the entire transactions for the day, while the local traction stocks, American Tobacco, Federal Steel, and People's Gas took up another third.

STOCK EXCHANGE MEMBERS.

Louis W. Wormser was yesterday elected a member of the Stock Exchange, and John W. McCartney, a broker who failed on July 29, 1898, was reinstated, having settled all his obligations.

When Mr. Wormser appeared on the floor of the Exchange he got an old-time hazing.

LARGE DEBIT BALANCES.

The Sub-Treasury has had large debit balances at the Clearing House every day this week, yesterday's amounting to over $1,800,000, and making a total thus far of about $7,500,000. Yesterday's balance was partly due, as was the previous day's, to moneys paid in for postal receipts.

MUTILATED NOTES RETURNED.

Twenty-nine bundles of mutilated silver certificates, legal tender notes, and Treasury notes, aggregating over $1,100,000, were returned to Washington yesterday by the Sub-Treasury in this city. This is "holiday money," received by local banks, and also money returned from the interior. It is the largest lot of mutilated notes sent to Washington this season. Notes of the smaller denominations were most mutilated.

COTTON FACTS.

"Cotton Facts" is the title of a book dealing with cotton, just issued by Alfred B. Shepperson, author of "The Standard Telegraphic Cipher Code for the Cotton Trade." The book contains much information on cotton that is at once valuable and interesting. These include compilations of cotton crops, receipts, exports, stocks, home and foreign consumption, visible supply, prices, and acreage in the United States and other countries for a series of years. There are also given cotton mill statistics of the United States and other countries, and the reports of the condition of growing cotton crops issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Increase of 17.58 per cent. in the net earnings of the Grand Rapids Light Company for December and increase of 18.12 per cent. for the year.

Expectation that the meeting of the transcontinental lines, to be held in Chicago today, will result in a settlement of the whole California passenger rate question.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Trading in the market for outside securities was somewhat more active yesterday than on Wednesday, but the total was much below recent averages, and the bulk of the business was supplied by a single stock. In the absence of demand for stocks, prices naturally went off a little, but there was not much urgent selling, and dullness rather than weakness was the result of the poor demand. Advances were recorded in a few issues, but in the majority of stocks final figures were below these of Wednesday. Apart from the trading in General Carriage, the market showed no life at all, and in a number of prominent issues trading was restricted to 100 or 200 shares.

GENERAL CARRIAGE was traded in to the extent of probably 2,000 shares. Most of the sales were made at 7¼, which was Wednesday's closing bid. The stock was somewhat heavy in the afternoon, and closed with a quarter of a point loss, at 7 bid. Traders made no effort to either advance or depress the price of the stock, and such manipulation as was employed served merely to keep the price about steady. It was reported that the company will very shortly put in operation a number of vehicles, which will be run at very low rates.

ELECTRIC AXLE sold from 4⅜ to 5, fluctuating between these figures, on very light transactions. It is proposed to make the second payment of $5 due on the stock Feb. 15 the final call, so that thereafter the stock will be of the par value of $10, full paid and non-assessable. This change is approved by the officers of the company, and will, it is said, in all probability be ratified by the stockholders. Friends of the company say that it was generally understood among the original subscribers that the $10, the dates for the payment of which were fixed at the time of subscription, would probably be all that would ever be called upon the stock. The nominal capital was fixed at so high figure in order to allow of the absorption of other companies should it be deemed necessary or advisable to take in other concerns. Officers of the company say that it is no longer necessary to maintain this large nominal capital, as the smaller capitalization represented by the cash payments, including that to be made Feb. 15, will be sufficient to meet the demands of the company's business and allow of such enlargement as may become necessary.

CAST IRON PIPE was the most active of the industrial stocks, transactions in the two issues amounting probably to 1,000 shares. Sales in the preferred stock were made as high as 44, the opening sale having been 43, and as low as 40½, the final sale for the day. The market for the stock was not very wide, and it fluctuated a good deal between sales, a sale at 41½ following immediately on one at 43. This issue closed at 42½ bid, showing a decline of half a point. Trading in the common stock advanced it to 8, but it fell back fractionally, and closed at 7⅞ bid, showing an advance of three-eighths of a point.

AMERICAN BICYCLE.—As a result of the issuing of the stocks of the American Bicycle Company, the prices for the stock have fallen off a good deal within the last few days. Trades were made yesterday in the preferred stock at 43½ and 42⅝, and on Wednesday private sales were made considerably below these figures. Fairly good demand for the stock appeared at the opening, but the bids were soon supplied, and at the close stock was offered at 43⅞ without a bid. There was practically no trading in the common stock.

AMALGAMATED COPPER sold to the extent of several hundred shares around 83½, and closed at 83½ bid, a net gain of a quarter of a point.

NATIONAL SALT preferred sold at 78, and closed at 77 bid.

NEWS OF THE EXCHANGES.

The Cotton Exchange enjoyed active trading yesterday, and cotton made an advance of 5 or 6 points on good Liverpool prices and small receipts. Trading was active on the Consolidated Exchange, Sugar getting a large share of attention. The Produce Exchange market was dull and narrow. Wheat was not very firm, but corn and oats held their own well.

PRODUCE EXCHANGE TRUST.

"We have done an average day's business," said last evening an officer of the Produce Exchange Trust Company, which reopened its doors on Wednesday. "Our customers, it is true, have taken out a little more than they are depositing, but only a little."

The company's exhibit of conditions at the close of business Jan. 10 included these items: Cash, $4,511,384.68; New York City bonds, $2,514,172.50; other bonds and stocks, $825,251.05; collections outstanding, $121,690.81; demand and time loans and bills purchased, $1,035,562.80; syndicate demand loans, $4,141,649.23. Items of liabilities: Capital and surplus, $5,000,000; deposits, $4,859,186.56; bills payable, $800,079; certificates of indebtedness—Gould and Thomas advances—$2,500,000.

The question of having a Clearing House agent for the company will be considered at the organization meeting next Wednesday. The policy of the present officers of the company is understood to be against the free collection of out-of-town items.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Money on call was 3@5 per cent., closing at 3 per cent.

Time money, 5½@6 per cent. for sixty days to four months, and 6 per cent. for longer dates. Mercantile paper, 5½@6 per cent. for sixty to ninety days' indorsements, 6 per cent. for choice four to six months' single names, and 7@8 per cent. for others.

Clearing House statements: Exchanges, $201,507,726; balances, $12,176,030; Sub-Treasury debit balance, $1,892,827.

Money on call in London at 4½ per cent. Rate of discount in open market, 3⅝@3¾ per cent. for short and 3⅞@4 per cent. for three months' bills.

Foreign exchange easier. Nominal rates were $4.84½ for sixty days and $4.88 for demand. Rates for actual business closed as follows: Sixty days, $4.83⅛; demand, $4.87; cables, $4.87⅝; commercial bills, $4.82½@$4.83.

Continental exchange was quoted as follows: Francs, 5.21⅞ and 5.17½@5.17⅜ less 1-16; reichsmarks, 95½@94 5-16 and 95 1-16; guilders, 40 and 40⅜@40 7-16.

Exchange on New York at domestic centres: Boston—5@15c discount. Chicago—30c discount; New Orleans—Commercial, 75c discount; bank, par. San Francisco—Sight, 12½c premium; telegraphic, 15c premium. Charleston—Buying, par; selling, ⅛c premium. Savannah—Buying, ⅛c off; selling, par. St. Louis—50c discount. Cincinnati—Between banks, 10c premium; over counter, 50c premium.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The market for American securities opened rather better in response to firmer overnight prices from New York and was well maintained, with business light. The closing tone was firm.

Consols for money, 98⅞; consols for the account, 99; Canadian, 94¼; Erie, 11½; Erie first preferred, 33½; Illinois Central, 114½; Union Pacific preferred, 75⅝; St. Paul, 119⅝; New York Central, 138; Pennsylvania, 67⅝; Reading, 9⅝; Northern Pacific preferred, 75½; Atchison, 19¾; Louisville, 80⅝; Grand Trunk, 6⅞; Anaconda, 8.

Bar silver steady at 27d per ounce.

Money, 4½ per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short bills, 3⅝@3¾ per cent., and for three months' bills, 3⅝@4 per cent.

Spanish 4s closed at 66⅝.

Gold to the amount of £63,000 was taken into the Bank of England to-day and the sum of £100,000 was transferred to the Indian currency account. Gold premiums: Buenos Ayres, 129.80; Madrid, 28.20; Lisbon, 44; Rome, 7.15.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—Prices were strong on the Bourse to-day, being influenced by the reduction in the bank rate here and in London. Foreign securities were firm. Rentes were continually purchased and Spanish 4s were in good demand. Brazilian securities further hardened, owing to the rise in the price of coffee and the improvement in the rate of exchange. Rio Tintos advanced, but the upward movement was not maintained. Kaffirs were fairly steady. Three per cent. rentes, 100 francs for the account. Exchange on London, 25 francs 23 centimes for checks. Spanish 4s closed at 67.17½.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—Prices were firmer on the Boerse to-day in consequence of easier money and encouraging advices from Western Bourses. Industrials were animated as a result of the speech made by the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Count von Buelow, at the launching, yesterday, of the new Hamburg-American Line steamer Deutschland. Exchange on London, 20 marks 49½ pfennigs for checks. Private rate of discount, 4¼ per cent.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 11.—On the Boerse today business was active and prices were firm as a consequence of the favorable money situation and the strength shown by foreign markets. Spanish 4s were the principal feature of the day's transactions. American securities hardened and locals were in demand.

Discount Rate in India.

CALCUTTA, Jan. 11.—The rate of discount of the Bank of Bengal was to-day raised from 7 to 8 per cent.

BOMBAY, Jan. 11.—The rate of discount of the Bank of Bombay has been increased from 7 to 8 per cent.

upon which the Directors of these institutions have decided. A good deal of interest is taken in banking circles in the important factor the Mutual Life Insurance Company will be in the future Bank of Commerce. It is well understood that this concern holds a large interest in the National Union, and also controls a good-sized block in the Bank of Commerce. When the capital stock of the National Union is increased, prior to the merger, from $1,200,000 to $5,000,000, the shareholders being allowed to subscribe to three and one-sixth shares of the new stock for each share of their holdings, the Mutual Life interests in the National Union will of course increase in that proportion. This being the case, it is estimated that it will hold the controlling interest in the consolidated bank.

COAL FOUND IN CUBA.

Test Shows That Recently Discovered in the Mayari District Developes a Good Degree of Heat.

SANTIAGO, Cuba, Jan. 11.—Business men, especially those interested in mining, were greatly interested in a test made today of coal recently discovered in the Mayari district. A coal mine in Cuba would be of the greatest possible value. At present the price of coal is $8 a ton for ships and steam plants, and there is virtually no domestic consumption owing to the prohibitive price. Scientists have held that it was impossible that coal should exist in Cuba, and all tests of reputed discoveries heretofore have resulted in failure.

In to-day's test the fire was kept burning continuously for ten hours. The coal appears to be a product between bituminous and cannel. With a strong draught it developed a remarkable degree of heat, and the experts declared it equal to the best steam coal in the Southern States.

The mining possibilities of Cuba would be enormous if cheaper coal could be secured. Many iron and manganese mines would be developed. Julian Cendoyoa is the owner of the coal claims, and there are indications of a deposit practically unlimited.

BANK OF ENGLAND STATEMENT.

Discount Rate Reduced from 6 to 5 Per Cent.

LONDON, Jan. 11.—The rate of discount of the Bank of England was to-day reduced from 6 to 5 per cent.

The weekly statement of the bank shows the following changes: Total reserve increased £1,234,000, circulation decreased £2,000, bullion increased £1,231,735, other securities decreased £2,227,000; other deposits increased £333,000, public deposits increased £1,193,000; notes reserve increased £1,169,000, Government securities increased £2,000,000.

The proportion of the Bank of England's reserve to liability is 39.47 per cent., as compared with 38.58 per cent. last week.

French Discount Rate Lowered.

PARIS, Jan. 11.—The rate of discount of the Bank of France was reduced from 4½ to 4 per cent. to-day.

The weekly statement of the Bank of France shows the following changes: Notes in circulation, decreased, 60,450,000 francs; Treasury accounts current, decreased, 14,000,000 francs; gold in hand, increased, 12,175,000 francs; bills discounted, decreased, 54,500,000 francs; silver in hand, decreased, 2,750,000 francs.

German Rate to be Lower.

BERLIN, Jan. 11.—The Reichsbank will reduce its discount rate to-morrow.

EXPORTS IN DECEMBER.

Breadstuffs, Provisions, and Cotton Show Decreases—Oil Increases.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 11.—The monthly statement of the export of domestic breadstuffs, provisions, cotton, and mineral oils from the United States, issued by the Bureau of Statistics, shows the following: Breadstuffs, $19,148,230; decrease as compared with December, 1898, about $12,500,000; cattle and hogs, $2,011,776; decrease about $233,000; provisions, $15,316,357; decrease about $214,000; cotton, $12,831,110; decrease about $14,000,000; mineral oils, $5,476,027; increase $1,300,000; total, $67,783,500, as against $93,494,868 for December, 1898. For the twelve months the exports amounted to $712,031,925, as against $789,995,103 for the twelve months of 1898.

Linseed Oil Advance.

The American Linseed Oil Company has advanced the price of its product to 53 cents a gallon, 3 cents more than it has been charging hitherto. This change was the basis for a story printed yesterday to the effect that the Standard Oil Company, needing money for large financial operations in Wall Street, had raised the price of refined oil 3 cents a gallon. As a matter of fact this company has not raised its price since Nov. 23, when there was an advance of ¼ of a cent a gallon.

Sims-Dudley Defense Company.

The stockholders of the Sims-Dudley Defense Company held their annual meeting at 120 Liberty Street yesterday, and re-elected as Directors for the following year G. W. Stockly, President; W. Scott Sims, Vice President; Everett Frazar, C. C. Curtiss, Secretary and Treasurer; Wallace Peck, and Dr. F. W. Merriam.

Exchange Membership Values.

A seat on the Consolidated Exchange was sold for $600 yesterday. A seat on the Cotton Exchange has been offered for $1,250, the only bid for it being $1,100.

The Advance in Astor Ground Rents.

An effort has been made to make it appear that in renewing ground leases on lots in the neighborhood of Avenue A and Fifth Street the Astor estates are making exorbitant advances in the rentals. One of the trustees for John Jacob Astor said yesterday that it was true that the rentals had been raised, but that the dissatisfaction, if there is any, among the tenants comes from their expecting to have their leases renewed on the same terms as they were twenty years ago. Since the previous leases were made the ground has increased greatly in value, and the present ground rents represent only a fair percentage of income on a valuation lower than the price for which the lots could be sold for cash to-day.

BIDS FOR RAPID TRANSIT

Commissioners May Have But One Offer for the Contract.

TO SHUT OUT COMPETITION

Engineer Parsons on Current Rumors—City May Build Tunnel If No Bidders Appear.

A report is current that when, next Monday afternoon, the Board of Rapid Transit Commissioners proceeds to examine the bids for the construction of the tunnel it will find only one, or perhaps two offers. It is stated that within the last few days a great deal of quiet negotiating has been going on; that interests which at first seemed irreconcilable have been made to harmonize by mutual concessions, with the result that there will be no competition for the contract, unless from parties who have been making their arrangements entirely sub rosa.

This view of the condition of affairs is borne out to some extent by a statement made yesterday afternoon to a reporter of THE NEW YORK TIMES by William Barclay Parsons, the Engineer of the Rapid Transit Commission. Mr. Parsons said that no bids had yet been put in, and that of course it was impossible to tell certainly how many, if any, would be received. "But," added Mr. Parsons, "I think it certain that there will be one bid at least from responsible persons, which it will be possible to accept." Some weeks ago Mr. Parsons declared that he expected to receive half a dozen bids.

"You may be certain," Mr. Parsons continued, "that none of the bids will be put in until within a few minutes of the time limit. You must remember that each bid is to be accompanied by a certified check for $150,000. Money is not so cheap now that people are willing to sacrifice the interest on such an amount as that for even a day. Therefore, you can gather absolutely nothing from the circumstance that we have received no bids at present. We did not expect any. As for myself, I feel confident that the work of constructing the tunnel will soon be begun. Of course I am continually hearing all sorts of rumors. I have heard enough to-day to fill THE NEW YORK TIMES. Applications for particulars and directions as to how to make bids are also still being received here, but one can gather nothing from them. I do not, however, expect that there will be any freak bids this time. The necessity for a $150,000 certified check is sufficient to prevent that."

It is stated that the Commissioners will devote themselves at present only to the carrying out of the plans for a tunnel which have already been made, and will not attempt to extend the scope and power of the commission to building a tunnel under the East River. President Alexander E. Orr said yesterday that there is now sufficient money available to proceed simultaneously with the sections of the underground road. The tunnel under the East River to South Brooklyn proposed by Controller Coler would involve new and unknown financial responsibilities. Therefore, although the Controller's resolution for a connecting tunnel is in the hands of the attorneys for the commission, and it may be found that the latter has the power to undertake such a work, it is very unlikely that it will do so, at present at any rate.

Corporation Counsel Whalen believes that there will be two bidders for the underground road contract. When asked yesterday whether he knew of any individuals or firms that would bid, he replied:

"I have been told that there will be at least two responsible bidders, and I would not be at all surprised if there should be more.

"One of the leading men in the Rapid Transit Commission told me the other day that the contract for the entire system would be given out on Tuesday, and that the road would be completed in three years.

"If, by any chance, and I do not think there is any, there should be no bidders, the road will be built by the city and operated by the city."

A delegation of residents of Washington Heights and the Borough of the Bronx will call on Mayor Van Wyck this afternoon to urge him to use his influence to have both sections of the underground road, from the City Hall to the city terminus, built at the same time. It is expected that the delegation will consist of between 200 and 300 persons.

Date for Tunnel Franchise Hearing.

Mayor Van Wyck yesterday approved the resolution adopted by the Municipal Assembly setting Jan. 29 as the date for a hearing on the application of the New York and Long Island Terminal Company for a franchise to construct a tunnel from Flatbush and Atlantic Avenues, Brooklyn, under the East River to a point in this borough south of Fulton Street and west of Broadway. After the hearing the Municipal Assembly will fix the remuneration. Thereafter the Board of Estimate will pass upon this rate. Then the Assembly must concur in or reject the Board of Estimate's action.

Fireman Gleason Wins His Suit.

The suit brought by Mortimer P. Gleason against the city to be reinstated as a member of the Long Island City Fire Department and to recover back salary, ended yesterday afternoon in the Queens County Court by Justice Garretson directing the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff. The suit of Gleason was a test case and one of about sixty-six similar suits. The back salaries of the plaintiffs amount to about $125,000. The men who were appointed by Mayor Gleason were dismissed after consolidation on the ground that there was not sufficient money in the Long Island City Department to pay their salaries.

GOOD PRICES FOR RARE STAMPS.

One New York Carriers' Brings $261 at the Hunter Sale.

Rare carriers' stamps of the F. W. Hunter collection brought good prices at the sale last evening in the United Charities Building. The bidding was chiefly by dealers representing customers. The largest buyers were H. L. Calman and J. C. Bidwell.

Mr. Bidwell bought a New York carriers' stamp, 2 cent on 3 cent, on original cover, the only copy known to be in existence, for $261, the highest price paid during the sale. H. L. Calman paid the next highest price, $125, for a New York carriers' stamp of 1846-49, Type C25; 2 cent red, cut close at left and pen canceled.

THE CHEAP CAB SERVICE.

General Carriage Company Will Introduce It in a Few Days.

Plans formed last Summer by the promoters of the General Carriage Company for the introduction of cheap cab service in this city are about to be carried out, and the company will within a few days put in operation a number of vehicles. The charge for cabs will be 25 cents a mile, but a rate lower than this may be fixed by the company when its plans go into full operation.

Negotiations are now under way looking to the purchase of the New York Cab Company by the General Carriage Company and other important developments in the plans of the latter company are also said to be under way. It is intended to operate a large number of cabs and vehicles of various kinds and to make the fares as low as possible, all of which is in pursuance of the plans announced when the General Carriage Company was incorporated last Summer.

An order for 200 vehicles has been placed with the Woods Motor Vehicle Company, and delivery of the full order within a reasonably short time has been promised, but officers of the General Carriage Company say that they cannot say just how soon this number of vehicles will be in operation. The service will be increased as rapidly as possible.

Proposed Library Law Discussed.

The members of the New York Library Club, at their regular monthly meeting last evening, at 40 Lafayette Place, discussed the proposed library law. The members believe the new law will be favored by library clubs throughout the State and will urge that it be passed. Among those who spoke were J. H. Wing, who discussed the laws of Massachusetts; R. E. Helbig, the laws of New Hampshire and Wisconsin; Miss Hasse, the laws of California, Illinois, and Iowa, and Miss Pineo, the law of Connecticut.

HUNGRY, STOLE BARS OF SOAP.

Brooklyn Man Thought He Was Getting Dog Cakes.

John Ryan, a middle-aged man living at 336 South Third Street, Brooklyn, was arrested last night on complaint of Henry Kroncke, a grocer at Grand and Berry Streets, charged with stealing seven bars of soap displayed in front of the store. Ryan was taken into custody after an exciting chase for several blocks.

When the prisoner heard Grocer Kroncke tell the Sergeant at the desk in the station house that the bundle stolen contained soap he exclaimed: "Soap! Why I thought I was stealing food, not soap."

The prisoner said he was under the impression he was stealing dog cakes and was driven to desperation by hunger.

$30,000 FIRE IN GRAND STREET.

The New Steam Power Searchlights Used with Good Effect.

Two alarms were sent in late yesterday afternoon for a fire on the fifth floor of the five-story brick building 215 and 217 Grand Street and 97 Elizabeth Street.

The blaze originated in the establishment of Julius Schwartz, manufacturer of women's waistbands. The fire made its way to the fourth floor, where it was soon controlled. Much damage was done on the floors below by water.

The damage is estimated at about $30,000, divided as follows: Julius Schwartz, fifth floor, $10,000; J. Bloomberg, fourth floor, $1,500; K. Jackson, third floor, $1,500; De Julio Mandolin Company, third floor, $3,000; American Carbon Company, third floor, $3,000; Henry Smith, stamp works, third floor, $2,000; Lion Easel Company, Fulton Stamp Works, second floor, $1,500; Rosa Seydel, second floor, printing; Manhattan Chemical Company, first floor, $2,000, and Schlesinger, Lowenthal & Co., candies, first floor, $2,000. The losses are all covered by insurance.

Chief Croker used the recently acquired portable steam-power searchlights on the fire with effectiveness. The smoke completely filled the building, but the shafts of intense white light readily penetrated it and the firemen easily found their way through the building.

A. A. GRIFFING SUES FOR $10,000.

Was Placed Under Arrest When He Tried to Examine Company's Books.

Another suit has been added to the long list of those to be defended by the A. A. Griffing Iron Company of Jersey City. The latest is in the nature of a complaint made by Abner A. Griffing, the founder of the company, who demands $10,000 damages, and involves the question of the right of a stockholder to examine the books and papers of a corporation in which he is financially interested.

Mr. Griffing in November last went to the main office, at 449 Communipaw Avenue, Jersey City, and two days later visited the New York office, at 66 Centre Street, and sought to examine the books. In each instance he was ejected, placed under arrest, and promptly discharged by the Sergeant on duty at the police station to which he was taken. Now he has begun suit in the United States Court for $10,000 damages for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution. With members of his family he owns 536 of the 3,000 shares of the capital stock of the company.

Thomas H. Williams was the President and General Manager, but was summarily removed on Nov. 23, 1898, when charges were made against him. A suit, which is still pending in New Jersey, was brought against him to recover $25,000, which, it is alleged, he wrongfully procured from the company. In May, 1899, Williams, who was the owner of about 40 per cent. of all the stock, secured the aid of other stockholders and an election was had.

Edward F. C. Young, who was receiver of the Dixon Crucible Company and President of the Consolidated Traction Company of Jersey City, was elected President. Mr. Williams was made Vice President and General Manager, and Isaac C. Ogden Secretary and Treasurer. While it is said the company is doing a profitable business no dividends have been paid since 1894, although the annual report for 1898 shows a surplus of more than $203,000.

LEGAL NOTES.

STATEMENTS BY MERCHANTS TO COMMERCIAL AGENCIES.—Crippen, Lawrence & Co., who were doing business in September, 1893, at Denver, Col., made an assignment in insolvency under the laws of that State to Stepheh H. Stannard, who demanded from the Seaboard National Bank the amount which stood on its books to the firm's credit. The demand having been refused, Daniel Bradley, as assignee of the claim from Stannard, sued the bank for the money. The bank asserted it was misled and defrauded by a statement of the company's condition made through a commercial agency in 1891, into making a loan of $7,500 to Crippen, Lawrence & Co., and claimed the right to retain the deposit as an offset to the loan, and rescind the contract for the loan, which had not then matured. A judgment given in favor of the defendant on the trial has been reversed by the First Appellate Division. In reference to the plaintiff's claim that there could be no legitimate relation between the statement to the commercial agency of the company's condition, Justice Patterson, giving the opinion, says the bank was authorized at the beginning of its transactions with the firm to rely upon the truth of the statement, and to base its transactions upon it, and adds: "Commercial agency reports relating to the financial standing and condition of those in business have become part of the ordinary business methods of the country. Reports of such agencies are in general use for the purpose of establishing credit. Where a dealer makes to such an agency for the purpose of effecting credit, a false or fraudulent representation respecting his property, and the reports become known to and are relied upon by persons giving credit on the face thereof, the representations contained in the agency's statement have the same effect as if they were made directly by the person accredited to the person who acts upon the faith of them." Justice Patterson holds, however, that the statement referred to was not successfully impeached in any of the respects in which it had been attacked, and that from all that appeared it was a fair and honest statement of the condition of the firm at that time.

ATTORNEY'S LIEN.—John D. Schriever, in his suit in Kings County against the Brooklyn Heights Railroad, to recover damages for personal injuries, agreed to pay his attorney for the latter's compensation 40 per cent. of the amount that should be realized. Schriever, who is irresponsible, then settled with the company for $350, without the knowledge of the attorney, and spent the money. Justice Gaynor has denied the attorney's motion for leave to continue the action and prosecute it to judgment, holding that the atternoy's lien was subject to the right of the parties to compromise and settle, and was determined by the amount agreed to be paid in settlement, the same as it would be by obtaining a judgment. The money having been all paid over to the client without the attorney's consent, the party paying it would nevertheless be required to pay to the atorney the amount he was entitled to by his lien, the same as if the judgment was paid to the client. The attorney, the Court held, could not repudiate a settlement by the parties, and prosecute the action for the purpose of trying to get a judgment for more than the amount of the settlement, so as to realize more out of his lien.

Delta Upsilon Society Dinner.

The Delta Upsilon Society held its annual dinner last night at the Arena café. About 100 persons were present. Rufus Hughes presided. The toasts and speakers were: "Honor versus Wealth," Dr. Henry Randall Waite, President of the American Institute of Civics; "Brooklyn Politics," Edward P. Horwitt; "Reformation," Dr. Ralph L. Parsons, Sing Sing, N. Y.; "The Real War," Frederick M. Crossett of the Seventh Regiment.

Rope Factory Again Working.

The Standard Rope and Twine Company of Brooklyn, which was forced to shut down its mill in Waterbury Street two weeks ago on account of scarcity of manila hemp, has resumed work in the mill. The company employs nearly 700 hands, who were in idleness during the holidays.

Annual Dinner of Maryland Society.

The first annual dinner of the Maryland Society was held last evening at Flouret's café. Seventy-five members of the society and guests were present. Addresses were made by the guests of the evening, Messrs. James A. B. Dilworth, President of the Delaware Society, and Henry R. Towne, President of the Pennsylvania Society.

EXCISE JURY REBUKED

Judge Cowing Abruptly Adjourns Court After an Acquittal.

A Juror Who Protested Was Promptly Silenced by the Judge—A New Panel Ordered.

Judge Cowing, who has been trying excise cases for a week or more, lost his temper yesterday in Part II. of the General Sessions, and after a severe rebuke to the jury, which almost resulted in an altercation, he abruptly adjourned the court.

Sixty of the excise cases had been disposed of, and only one conviction had been secured, when the case of Samuel Semachowitz of 50 Delancey Street was taken up yesterday morning. Semachowitz was charged with selling liquor on Sunday, Sept. 10, 1898. Policeman Higgins, who was the chief complaining witness, said he had gone into Semachowitz's place on that day and found a crowd of men and women sitting around the tables drinking beer and other liquors. He said that as one of the bartenders was passing him with a tray containing two dozen glasses of beer, he picked up one of the glasses, and, tasting its contents, found that it was filled with beer. According to the policeman's story, he then ordered a glass of beer, which he was served with, and which he paid for.

Semachowitz was put on the stand in his own defense, and admitted having sold the beer to Higgins. He said, however, that he had served a sandwich with the beer.

After listening to this testimony the jury, without leaving the box, returned a verdict of not guilty.

When Judge Cowing heard this he grew red in the face and half rose from his chair.

"Mr. District Attorney," he said in a loud voice, "I want to stop right here. There is no use trying these cases with this kind of a jury. This was as clear a case of guilt as ever was tried in court. There was no more question of the defendant's being guilty than there is of my being seated in this chair. It is a farce to take this great Court of General Sessions, bring these cases before us, and then try to make a farce of the administration of criminal justice. I see no use, therefore, in trying any more of these excise cases before this panel of jurors. Get another panel of jurors, and see if you can get any jury in the City of New York to say that a man is guilty when he is proved so. Let it be put upon record that the reason the Court refuses to proceed with these cases is that a case has been tried here this morning without any contradiction in the evidence, which closely established the defendant's guilt; that the party violated the law, and yet the jury acquitted him. Let that go on record. The man himself went on the stand; there was no conflict in the evidence; it was clearly proved that he sold lager beer on a Sunday, and that he was carrying it on a tray."

At the conclusion of the Judge's speech Mr. O'Hare, the defendant's counsel, arose and said that the case depended on the credibility of the officer. "If you will look at the complaint he swore to in the Police Court and compare it with his evidence today you will—"

"We had better get other policemen, then," interrupted the Judge. "Have you any doubts as to the defendant's guilt?"

"I have," said the lawyer.

"Well, I haven't," said the Judge.

No. 7 of the jury, Julius Rosenthal, of 114 Wooster Street, who had been shifting uneasily in his seat during the Judge's address, arose at this point and said: "I think, Judge, that you have insulted all of us, we—"

"Sit down!" commanded the Judge. "I don't want to hear from you. I don't want to have anything to do with a jury which disregards evidence and fails to conscientiously do its duty. I don't want to hear anything more from you."

The juror appeared very angry, and started to speak, but what he said was rendered inaudible by the noise the spectators made in their efforts to get a look at him, and the cries of "Order!" from the court officers. A court officer went around to Rosenthal, and, placing his hands on his shoulders, forced him into his seat. As soon as order was secured in the courtroom the jury was dismissed and the court adjourned.

CREVICES IN NO. 3 DRY DOCK.

Navy Yard Officials Fear the Structure Will Collapse.

Considerable anxiety is felt at the Brooklyn Navy Yard for the safety of Timber Dry Dock No. 3 the largest owned by the United States Navy. Large crevices appeared in one side of the dock during the heavy rains of last Summer, and within the last few days sand and water have been oozing through the weakened sides in quantities sufficient to cause alarm. Although $600,000 was spent in repairs on the dock about a year ago it has never been considered to be in first class condition.

Work will be hurried on Timber Dry Dock No. 2, which is being rebuilt in stone, as a collapse in No. 3 dock would leave the yard with only the smallest dry dock available.

The battleship Texas left No. 3 dock a few days ago, and it is hoped that the Massachusetts can be taken in next Monday for repairs.

Large Coal Pockets for Cob Dock.

Capt. Frank Wildes, Commander H. M. Manney, and Ernest P. Goodrich, United States Navy, as a special board are considering plans for building coal pockets on the Cob Dock at the Brooklyn Navy Yard with a storage capacity of not less than 60,000 tons. It is estimated that by storing this amount of coal, which would be equal to a year's demands upon the stock both for warships and for use in the yard, the Government could save at least $30,000 a year. The pockets, if built, will be connected with the coaling pier to be built during the coming year. Manual labor on the new pier will be practically abolished, as the coal will be transferred from the cars to the bunkers of the warships by machinery.

FLOODED LOT MAKES TROUBLE.

Woman Asks $10,000 Damages for Alleged Ruined Health and Business.

Mrs. Eliza J. Mitchell, who keeps a boarding house at 58 East Eighty-sixth Street, has brought suit for $10,000 damages against George Schreiner, a builder living at 104 West One Hundred and Twenty-first Street. Mrs. Mitchell is an invalid, suffering with rheumatism, and her business has almost vanished, as the result, so she alleges, of the flow of water from the adjoining vacant lot into her cellar and the consequent trouble from dampness and extinguished furnace fires.

Mr. Schreiner owns the vacant lot. It abuts on the East Eighty-fifth Street Public School. In November, 1897, Mr. Schreiner took out a building permit and started excavation. In purchasing the lot, Mr. Schreiner had, it is alleged, a full appreciation of its desirableness to the Board of Education as a recreation ground. Excavation had not gone on more than three or four days before Mr. Schreiner was notified that the Board of Education had instituted condemnation proceedings to acquire the lot.

Shortly afterward a rainstorm came, which, Mrs. Mitchell says, filled the depression in the excavated lot to such an extent that it finally broke through her foundation wall and flooded the cellar. The servants generally refused to go down and repair the damage. One left her service on account of the alleged unsanitary conditions. Finally, Mrs. Mitchell went down and attended to it herself, and thereby incurred the rheumatism she says. Some of the boarders became sick, and many left her house. She is now practically helpless as a result of rheumatic trouble, and her patronage has become very much cut down, she declares, as a result of her helplessness and inability to conduct her housework properly.

Mr. Schreiner, in his answer, denies any knowledge of such damage or that it can be proved to have followed from gathering of water on his property.

Cross-Eyed Point Baffles Second Jury.

Richard Johnson, four years old, was run over in front of his home, on Summit Avenue, West Hoboken, a year ago by a trolley car and seriously injured. The lad's parents brought suit to recover $5,000 damages. One of the allegations made on behalf of the plaintiff was that as a result of the accident he was suffering from strabismus. The company produced two medical experts, who testified that strabismus was a trait of the Johnson family, after which the company's counsel called the boy's father and aunt to show that both were cross-eyed. The jury was unable to agree, and was yesterday discharged. The case was first tried in May last, the jury being unable to agree at that time.

TROUBLE IN NINTH REGIMENT.

Capt. Willcocks in Military Arrest for Alleged Disobedience of Orders of the Colonel.

Capt. Washington Willcocks, Company G, Ninth Regiment, Senior Captain in the regiment, has been placed under military arrest by Col. William F. Morris, for an alleged disobedience of orders, and it is said a court-martial is likely to follow.

There was a regimental drill at the armory on Wednesday night of this week, in preparation for a review to be tendered Major Gen. Charles F. Roe. The Colonel desired a rehearsal of the movements to be executed on that evening. This entails an equalization, and companies which have more than enough men to make up the required strength assign their surplus men to other companies not so strong in membership. Company G is one of the strong companies, and is also well drilled. When the time came to form the regiment word was sent to Capt. Willcocks to send a detail of men to the Adjutant to help fill up another company short of men.

Then, according to the statement of those present, Capt. Willcocks got very angry, and declared that it was a shame to build up a fine company and then see it robbed of men to fill up others. The Captain, it is said, further declared practically that he would not furnish the required detail.

Col. Morris is a strict disciplinarian, and upon learning of the alleged disobedience of his orders at once placed Capt. Willcocks in military arrest, relieving him from duty on the spot, and assigning Lieut. Abraham L. Willcocks, a brother of the Captain, to the command.

Col. Morris, when seen yesterday, said:

"It is true that I have placed Capt. Willcocks in military arrest, but I decline to state the reason, and I do not think it of any public interest to say anything about the matter."

Capt. Willcocks first entered the Ninth as a private in July, 1876. He served during the Spanish war in the volunteer regiment. In the election row for a Colonel last Winter he was a very active supporter of Goodman J. Greene, who was defeated.

BROKERS' CLERK ACCUSED.

W. B. Filer Charged with Taking $12,000 from Kohn & Co.

The Sheriff has received an attachment for $12,000 against William B. Filer, in favor of Kohn & Co., stock brokers, at 46 Broadway, where he was employed as margin clerk. The affidavit of David Kohn states that Mr. Filer had been employed as a clerk for two years up to Dec. 11, when he disappeared, and has not been heard from since.

He is accused of taking $3,000 on Aug. 2, $4,000 on Aug. 30, and $5,000 on Sept. 21. He was intrusted with blank checks which he filled out, and it is alleged that he concealed the defalcation by charging the amounts in the ledger of the firm to I. Metzger and E. Loeb, both of whom said that they did not receive the money and knew nothing whatever about the transaction.

Mr. Kohn said that on the morning of Dec. 11 there was a sharp break in stocks, and he was examining customers' accounts to see if they were properly margined. He found the accounts of Messrs. Metzger and Loeb insufficiently margined and showed heavy losses. He asked Mr. Filer for an explanation. The latter appeared greatly agitated, and said the accounts would be made good. Mr. Kohn kept on investigating, whereupon Mr. Filer seized his hat and darted from the office, and nothing has been heard of him since.

Mr. Filer lived with his wife and children at Madison Avenue and Ninety-fifth Street. The Sheriff served the attachment on a bank where Mr. Filer is supposed to have a balance of $900, and also on a safe deposit company, where it is said he has a box.

Committee to Obtain Endowment for Institutions Founded by Him.

Preliminary steps toward insuring the continuance by adequate endowment of the three educational institutions founded by the late Dwight L. Moody, the Northfield Seminary and Training School for Young Women, the Mount Hermon School for Young Men, and the Bible Institute of Chicago, were taken yesterday at a joint meeting of the Trustees of the three schools, held in the committee room of the Mutual Life Insurance Building.

It is the desire of the Trustees to raise an endowment fund of at least $2,000,000, which will place the institutions on a self-supporting basis and insure their perpetuation as a memorial to the evangelist. To this end a committee to be known as the Moody Memorial Advisory Committee was elected. The committee will direct the soliciting of the endowment fund, which will be divided among the three institutions. Its members include William E. Dodge, James Talcott, Anson Phelps Stokes, Jr., Morris K. Jesup, D. Willis James, and John S. Kennedy of New York; D. W. McWilliams and Ira D. Sankey of Brooklyn, E. G. Keith, Cyrus McCormick, and Victor Lawson of Chicago, John H. Converse and John Wanamaker of Philadelphia, C. A. Hopkins of Boston, and Francis White of Baltimore.

"Some misapprehension has existed as to the purpose of our meeting," said one of the Trustees yesterday. "It was not for the purpose of effecting a union in the management of the three institutions. They had always worked together in harmony when Mr. Moody was alive, and will continue to do so, but each will retain its distinct Board of Trustees. Our meeting was merely for union in the work of obtaining an endowment fund."

The Northfield and Mount Hermon Schools now have buildings and 1,200 acres of land near Northfield, Mass., valued at $1,250,000. Each has about 400 students. The Bible Institute, at Chicago, with 300 or more students, has property worth $250,000.

Lineman Killed by Live Wire.

Michael Clark, a lineman employed by the Manhattan Electric Light Company, was killed by a live wire yesterday morning while making repairs on one of the company's wires at Ninth Avenue and Fourteenth Street. Clark's hand touched the wire, and the shock threw him from the pole on which he was working. He was dead when the New York Hospital ambulance arrived. He was a single man, thirty-six years old, and lived at 346 East Seventy-eighth Street.

Cornelius Vanderbilt Pays His Fine.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was fined $100 for failing to serve on a jury, paid his fine yesterday to Assistant Corporation Counsel Kiernan. The fine was paid by check, and as a result of its receipt, Mr. Vanderbilt will stand as discharged.

BROOKLYN'S WATER SHORTAGE.

Pumping from Ponds to be Resorted To to Avert a Famine.

So serious are the prospects of a water famine in Brooklyn that the department authorities have arranged to pump from Baisley's and Springfield ponds near Jamaica. The use of the water of these ponds was once condemned by the State Board of Health on the ground that it was polluted and unfit for human use by the numerous nuisances existing along the streams which supply it.

Before the pond water is turned into the mains public notice will be served to boil all drinking water so as to insure the destruction of disease germs. It is estimated that about 6,000,000 gallons a day will be obtained from the ponds.

Brooklyn has a contract to supply the Federal Government with 600,000 gallons of water a day for use at the navy yard, Governors Island, and Fort Hamilton. This contract is terminable by either party upon thirty days' notice, but the city officials, it is said, will probably content themselves with urging upon the local Federal authorities the need for strict economy.

RETIRED MERCHANT A SUICIDE.

Weber Declared Life Worthless After His Second Wife's Death.

Charles A. Weber, a retired commission merchant, fifty-six years old, committed suicide yesterday in the cellar of his home, 58 Hannan Street, Brooklyn, by hanging. His body was found by Mrs. Emily Larke, a tenant, who had gone to the cellar for wood.

Weber was twice married, his second wife dying two months ago. He grieved greatly over her death and told friends that life was not worth living any longer. His son tried to comfort him, but his task seemed hopeless. Weber a week ago began to act queerly. He declared that many men who were penniless were happier than he, though he had riches.

After his breakfast yesterday morning Weber made arrangements for his death. He secured a piece of clothesline and, taking a chair from the kitchen, went to the cellar. One end of the rope was fastened around a beam and the other around his neck. While hanging the rope broke and the body of the suicide fell to the floor.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

Francis P. Burke succeeds Marshall S. Driggs on the Executive Committee of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange, and George W. Jones succeeds S. P. Blagden on the Arbitration Committee.

The insurance on the residence of George McKibbin, at 172 McDonough Street, Brooklyn, which was considerably damaged by fire Wednesday night, was distributed as follows: On building, Germania, $8,000; on household furniture, German-American, $5,000. Miller & Maltbie will adjust the loss.

The insurance on the property of Ernst Kaufmann, at 205 William Street, which was considerably damaged by fire and water early yesterday morning, was distributed as follows: Scottish Union and National, $15,500; Continental, $6,250; American of New York, $4,750; Providence-Washington, $2,500; Atlanta Home, $2,500; Northern of London, $1,500; Reliance, $1,250; Mechanics', $1,250, and Fireman's Fund, $1,250. Miller & Maltbie will adjust the loss.

Manager Hess of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange has called the attention of the companies to the policies written on the risk of R. Hoe & Co. at an average rate. The companies are required to recall the policies for indorsement, in order to determine the exact rate received for each part of the risk. No violation appears in the policies, which were placed through Weed & Kennedy, because the aggregate premium paid conforms to the aggregate of the tariff rates, but the manager objects to the use of average rates without his authority, on the ground that such practices would open the door to violations of the rules.

The insurance on the property of Louis Frank, at 10 Division Street, which was considerably damaged by fire early yesterday morning, was distributed as follows: Home, $2,000; Fire Association, $1,000; Phoenix of Hartford, $1,000; Hamilton, $1,000; Palatine $1,000; Security, $1,000; New York Underwriters', $1,000; American of Philadelphia, $1,000; Western of Toronto, $750; British American, $750; Western of Pittsburg, $500; Imperial, $500; Fidelity, $500; Niagara, $500; North American of Boston, $500; German of Pittsburg, $500; Agricultural, $500; Phoenix of London, $500; Mechanics', $500; Citizens' of Pittsburg, $500; Boston, $500; Delaware, $500; National, $500; Milwaukee Mechanics', $250; New Hampshire, $250; Michigan, $250; Grand Rapids, $250. C. R. Young & Co. will adjust the loss.

It was reported yesterday that, before the news of the action of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange in advancing rates on Wednesday had reached the agency offices in Brooklyn, brokers, by means of telephone messages, had placed at the old rates much Brooklyn business expiring the last of this month and the first part of February. It is doubtful whether the policies will be delivered on that basis, owing to the Exchange rule forbidding the dating of policies more than 10 days in advance of their acceptance. The brokers were completely surprised by the advance in rates, and on Wednesday and yesterday directed their efforts toward getting their policies on risks bound previous to the meeting at the old rates. On Wednesday the Committee on Form reported a clause exempting companies from liability for the failure of the cold-air supply in cold-storage buildings caused by adjoining fires. The clause was favorably received, but was referred back to the committee with instructions to print, because it was not deemed sufficiently explicit to be effective. Regular monthly meetings of the Exchange will be held hereafter on the second Wednesday of each month.

Scholarships Secured by Mortgage.

A mortgage was filed yesterday which was executed in 1882, in which the General Theological Seminary of the Protestant Episcopal Church as security for a fund for scholarships in the seminary, amounting to $63,079, given by divers persons, pledges the block bounded by Eleventh Avenue, Hudson River, and Twentieth and Twenty-first Streets, to Eugene A. Hoffman, Chairman of the Finance Committee, and Woodbury G. Langdon, the Treasurer. The money given was used by the seminary officials for the improvement of the property, and the mortgage is made to insure the proper application of the sum for the purposes intended—the endowment of scholarships.

VIOLATED HARBOR RULES.

Captain and Master Convicted of Throwing Waste Into the River.

Albert Randall, Captain of the tugboat F. N. Brown, and Cornelius Nelson, master of the Self-Dumping Scow No. 39, owned by the firm of Brown & Fleming, were found guilty yesterday by Judge Thomas in the Criminal Branch of the United States Circuit Court of having dumped waste into the East River off Fortieth Street on Aug. 29. Lieut. Commander John C. Frémont, United States Navy, Supervisor of the Harbor, was the chief prosecuting witness. In finding the men guilty the jury commended them to the mercy of the court. Suit will be brought by the Government against the firm of Brown & Fleming.

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE.—After a very short session, during which both houses passed the bill legalizing the primaries for the special election to be held in the Thirty-first Assembly District, in this city, both houses adjourned until Monday night. Among the important bills introduced was a new school measure, prepared by the special committee of the Brooklyn Borough Board. It provides for the reorganization of the school system and the abolition of the Board of Education.—Page 3.

CONGRESS.—More witnesses testified yesterday as to the manner of the alleged payment of money in the Montana Senatorial contest. The House Committee on Inter-State and Foreign Commerce decided favorably to report the Isthmian Canal bill. The Senate Committee on Commerce yesterday gave a hearing to the advocates of the Frye Subsidy bill. Mr. Lloyd of Missouri introduced a bill in the House yesterday to abolish hazing at West Point. A resolution offered by Mr. Sulzer to investigate the office of the Secretary of the Treasury was objected to by the Republicans.

FOREIGN.—Gen. Buller reports that he has occupied Springfield, sixteen miles west of Frere camp. This is said, in London, to be in the rear of the Boer position, and only fourteen miles from Ladysmith. Gen. White's total losses in the recent fighting at Ladysmith aggregated 417. Lord Methuen's wife denied yesterday that the former was ill as reported. Prof. James Martineau, the eminent British theologian, died yesterday in his ninety-fifth year. The United States Consulate in Paris is seeking the heirs of an eccentric old American woman called Lady Livingstone, who died there. The committees who will select paintings and works of sculptors for exhibition in the American art section of the Paris Exposition were announced yesterday. The fisheries modus vivendi has been extended. The Japanese Prince Imperial will visit the United States next Summer. In the French Chamber yesterday it was moved to suspend the duties on coal, iron, and steel. It is gathered from Japanese newspapers received at Vancouver that Japan is drifting into a war with Russia. MAN TALKED, ROBBERS WORKED.

Chicagoan Ridiculed Fear of Pickpockets and Lost His Watch.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—Zina R. Carter, a Sanitary District Trustee, recently a candidate for Mayor, will appear at the Maxwell Street Police Court Wednesday to tell of his experience with highwaymen Monday night. Mr. Carter was robbed of a gold watch worth $100. The robbery occurred while Mr. Carter was riding on a street car and telling the conductor the folly of fearing light-fingered men.

While Mr. Carter was talking with the conductor the latter called his attention to two suspicious-looking fellows who were pushing their way through, telling him they looked like thieves. Mr. Carter laughed and made fun of the street car man, while the thieves took up a position directly in front of him. Reaching through the front of his overcoat, they abstracted the watch from his pocket and left, while Mr. Carter went on talking. The police were informed, and after three days the timepiece was recovered and the thieves arrested.

TRANS-SIBERIAN RAILWAY

Many Parts Must Be Rebuilt Because of Hasty Construction.

HIGH SPEED NOW IMPOSSIBLE

Cost of the System Now Reckoned at $180,250,000—Two Weeks from London to Port Arthur.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Rapid transit across Russia, by the Trans-Siberian Railway, is some distance away yet, but the prospect, according to Consul Commercial Agent R. T. Greener, at Vladivostock, is that when the line is opened and the improvements made in portions of the system that seem to be demanded the journey will be not only cheaper than by any other route to the Far East, but will be also more comfortable. He summarizes the condition of parts of the road as follows:

"In the haste of construction and the anxiety to get everything cheap on both the Siberian and the Trans-Baikal lines, a special kind of light rails, weighing twelve pounds to the foot, instead of the usual twenty-four pounds to the foot, were used. Wooden bridges were built wherever it was possible and crossings were made far apart. Under such conditions, quick traveling on the road is almost an impossibility, and more than twenty miles an hour cannot be made. Only one passenger and two freight trains a day are run. To add to the danger, they have put on the line one of the heaviest engines in existence—the compound system. The light weight of the rails, the steep inclines, and the high gradings combined make traveling risky. On steep inclines the compound runs at a rate of fifty versats (thirty-three miles) an hour, turning the rails out, and there is no way of stopping it. At the station of Polovinoy, eleven cars were thus destroyed.

"In such a condition do we find the Siberian Railroad at the present time. Fast traveling is impossible, as the rails are too light, while, on the other hand, slow traveling cannot be always controlled, as the heavy engines cannot be held back on the inclines. The committee of Michalovski have come to the conclusion that everything must be reconstructed. But this will cost a great sum of money—on the Trans-Baikal line alone there will have to be spent not less than 15,000,000 rubles, ($7,725,000) almost 50 per cent. of the entire cost of the line; on the whole Siberian Railroad there will have to be spent not less than 50,000,000 rubles, ($25,750,000.) The light-weight rails must be put aside and wooden bridges turned into firewood; everything must be rebuilt and the number of stations increased.

"The Dalny Vostok, a daily newspaper, discussing the faults of construction and the advantages in cost of passenger transportation over the sea route, says that on account of economy, the road was built very light, little ballast being used in many places; rails, on the western half of the road especially, weigh not more than 24 kilograms (52.9 pounds) to the meter, thus making it dangerous for speedy traveling.

"Further," it continues, "the engineers thought it advisable to lay the line on marshy ground instead of on the neighboring highlands, where the ground is solid and firm, and in the near future it will have to be relaid. In some districts, again, a mistake was committed in the choice of the direction of the line. Tomsk, the capital of Western Siberia, was left eighty versts (fifty-three miles) on the side, and connected with the railroad by a bad road. Further, in order to foster home trade, the movable supplies and rails were ordered principally from Russian iron works in the Ural districts, and they cost twice as much as if they had been obtained in England. A great deal of material was provided in advance and rotted before it was used.

"The general cost of the Great Siberian Railroad is estimated to be 350,000,000 rubles, ($180,250,000,) including 118,000,000 rubles ($60,770,000) for the construction of the Amur line from Stretinsk to Khabarofsk, which project has been changed by the building of the Manchurian line. The last will cost 100,000,000 rubles ($51,500,000.) It is true that the Manchurian Railroad is constructed by a joint stock company, but as most of the shares are in Government hands, the greater part of the money must come from the Government Treasury.

"The cost of one mile of railroad is calculated at about 35,000 rubles ($18,025) for the West Siberian division; 50,000 rubles ($25,750) for the Trans-Baikal and Ussurian line. The construction of the railroad in North America under similar circumstances cost a great deal less than the above-mentioned sums, and yet these are calculated for 1891. The real cost will be probably increased to about 40,000,000 rubles ($20,600,000) more, or 67,000 rubles ($34,505) per mile, for the Trans-Baikal line.

"It is asked, 'What international influence will the Siberian Railroad have?' When the Manchurian line, which is about 200 miles long, is finished, the distance from St. Petersburg to Port Arthur will be 8,778 versts, (5,819 miles;) from Berlin, 9,550 versts, (6,331 miles;) from Paris, 10,650 versts, (7,060 miles.) This distance could have been traversed in one week, but such speed is impossible on the Siberian line at the present time. At a speed of twenty-five miles an hour, it will take two weeks to traverse the distance between London, Paris, and Berlin to Port Arthur or Vladivostock. When the road is improved, this can be shortened to about eleven days. As soon as the road is finished, it will be the shortest route between Europe and the Far East; from Paris, one will be able to go to the capital of Japan—Yokohama—in seventeen days. At present there are two ways of communication between Europe and the Far East—west, by way of Canada; east, by the Suez Canal. The first takes twenty-five days, the last thirty-four days. The center of Oriental trade—Hongkong—will be reached in twenty days, while at present it takes twenty-five days by the way of Suez and thirty-four days by the way of America.

"Not only will traveling by way of Siberia be quicker, but it will also be cheaper. The fare now from London or Paris to the ports of the Far East is, first class, 1,800f. to 1,840f., ($367 to $375,) while in Russia, thanks to the lowered passenger tariff on great distances, one will be able to travel from the German frontier to Port Arthur or Vladivostock for 107 rubles, or 285f., ($57,) in first-class accommodations, and with a special train one will be enabled to travel from Russia to the Far East for 450f. ($86.) The total cost of traveling from the West to the furthest point in the East will not be more than 800f. or 950f. ($174 or $183)—less than half what it is at the present time.

"Some are of the opinion that it will be very uncomfortable to sit in the car for two whole weeks, but everything that can add to the comfort and welfare of the passenger will be provided in the special Siberian trains that will leave Paris weekly. These trains will be styled 'Extra Far East.' There will be library, dining, bathing, and gymnasium cars. Certainly, traveling with such comforts ought not to be more tedious than a long voyage by sea.

"As for the transportation of freight, the cost of transportation is more important than the time it takes. In this respect the Siberian Railroad will not be able to compete with the sea. In 1897 the cost of transporting freight from Shanghai to London was 47.3f ($9.12) per ton; in February, 1898, the understanding between the steamship companies was broken up, and the tariff fell to 28f. ($5.60.) Although such low rates for transportation cannot continue long, and even if it reaches the normal sum of 40f. ($7.72) per ton, the Siberian Railroad will not be able to attract to itself the freight-carrying trade, for in order to do so it will have to take not more than one four-hundredth of a copeck per pood for each verst, and with such a tariff no railroad can cover its running expenses.

"Thus we cannot expect to have the freight-carrying trade between China and Western Europe, but the trade the Siberian Railroad will develop between China and Russia is quite another thing. Of the total sum of Chinese foreign trade, amounting to 1,375,000,000f., ($265,375,000,) Russia has 5 per cent.; the Siberian Railroad will undoubtedly increase this proportion. For the rest of Europe the Siberian line will be of great importance as a means of quick and cheap passenger and mail communication between the different points of the Old and New World, which alone is sufficient to make it play a great rôle in international affairs."

BRYAN OPPOSES FREE WOOL?

Said to Have Given Assurances that in One Respect He Is a Protectionist.

BOSTON, Jan. 12.—In its weekly review of the wool market, The Boston Commercial Bulletin to-morrow will say:

"Utah correspondents of Boston wool houses say that they have received personal assurances from William Jennings Bryan that if elected President he will retain a protective duty on wool, having changed his mind on free wool."

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 12.—William J. Bryan passed through the city to-day on his way to St. Louis. His tour includes speeches in St. Louis, Frankfort, Ky.; Cincinnati, and the Atlantic and New England States, and will not be finished until Feb. 3.

Political intimates, when asked concerning his reported change of opinion on the question of free wool, said they could not speak with authority, but nothing Col. Bryan had said indicated that attitude, and they doubted the correctness of the report.

OMAHA, Jan. 12.—The general impression here is that W. J. Bryan is misquoted by the Utah correspondent of The Commercial Bulletin on the subject of free wool. At the Jacksonian banquet held here last Monday night, which was generally accepted as the real opening of Bryan's campaign for the Presidential nomination this year, he was very guarded in his statements, and gave out a brief extract of his speech to the press in which no mention whatever was made of protection. This speech dealt only with the money question, the trusts, and imperialism. If Mr. Bryan has changed his views on the tariff no one in Omaha can be found who knows it.

BRYAN ON KENTUCKY CONTESTS

Believes the Salvation of the Democratic Party Depends on the Abandonment of Proceedings.

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 12.—The Louisville Evening Post to-day confirms its story that William Jennings Bryan has advised the dropping of the contests for State offices. The Goebel Democrats continue their denials that Mr. Bryan made any such statement as alleged, but The Post prints the following as the concluding paragraph of Bryan's letter to Mr. Blackburn, who is now in Washington with the letter in his possession:

"It appears to me that the action of the Democrats in Kentucky is without precedent. The Republicans have been given the certificates and it would appear to an outsider that the best interests of the Democratic Party demand that the Republicans be allowed to serve out the full terms of the State offices. In fact, I believe the salvation of the party to a certain extent depends upon the abandonment by the Democrats of the contest proceedings."

HEARINGS WILL BEGIN MONDAY.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Jan. 12.—The Goebel-Taylor and Breckham-Marshall contest committees will each hold meetings to-morrow, at which they will arrange for the trial of the contests. The hearing of evidence will begin Monday. About 5,000 witnesses are expected. The arrival of about fifty men from Eastern Kentucky to-night created a big stir in Goebel circles, when it was charged that the new arrivals were militiamen in citizens' clothes. In Republican circles this was laughed at, and it is claimed they are a few of the hundreds of Taylor witnesses who have been summoned here to give testimony in behalf of the contestees.

The Republican leaders insist on the claim that the contestants for State offices must receive a majority in each branch of the Legislature instead of a majority of a joint assembly, as claimed by the Democrats, and this is another of the questions which may have to go to the courts. If the Republican contention is sustained it is admitted Goebel would be in exceedingly close lines in the Senate. The latest poll of that body by the Republicans is that it contains at least five anti-Goebel Democrats, and Senator Hill (Dem.) is ill at home, with little prospect of getting here during the session. With Hill and Goebel not voting the Goebel Senators under these circumstances would be in a minority.

The Goebel leaders late to-night claim telegraphic advices from counties in the eastern part of the State that military companies in that section are being equipped to come to Frankfort next week.

Both branches of the Legislature held quiet sessions to-day, and the House adjourned until Monday. The only thing done in either branch which had any bearing on the contests was in the Senate, where the resolution charging John H. Whallen and Charles Ryan with contempt, in offering to bribe Senator Harrel, was adopted as amended in the House. The amendment concurred in directs the Speakers of the two houses to name two Democrats and one Republican each on the joint committee which is to conduct the investigation. These committees have not been named.

The Franklin County Grand Jury, which has also been investigating the alleged bribery matter, continues to have before it as witnesses persons who were prominent in the late campaign, and as yet none of the matters which have been included in the wide scope of its investigation has been reported on.

HANNA IN PHILADELPHIA.

Comes with Other Republicans to Open National Headquarters.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 12.—United States Senator Hanna, Chairman of the Republican National Committee; Congressman Charles Dick, Secretary of the National Committee; Joseph H. Manley of Maine, Chairman of the National Sub-Committee on Preliminary Convention Arangements, and Senator Scott of West Virginia, Henry C. Payne of Wisconsin, Samuel Fessenden of Connecticut, and Richard Kerens of Missouri, members of the sub-committee, whose vote gave the convention of 1900 to Philadelphia, arrived to-night. Their coming marks the formal opening of the Presidential campaign.

The sub-committee will open National headquarters and the machinery will be started. The members of the committee will visit the export exposition grounds to-morrow and inspect the auditorium of the National Convention. They will confer upon the preliminary work with the Citizens' Republican National Convention Association, which brought the big political meeting here.

All of the National Committeemen refrained from any discussion of the National political situation, except in declaring that the renomination of President McKinley is assured. They will probably remain in Philadelphia over Sunday.

For Democratic National Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Jan. 12.—The citizens of this city who are endeavoring to secure the next National Democratic Convention have thus far subscribed $10,000 to the guarantee fund.

MIDNIGHT TENEMENT FIRE.

Alderman Burrell shortly before midnight last night discovered fire in the cellar of the five-story double tenement at 1,729 Second Avenue, which is occupied by twenty families. He quickly turned in an alarm, and then returned to the house.

The members of Truck Company No. 13 were at the scene in a few minutes, and while some fought the flames others entered the building and aroused the occupants. Many of the women became badly scared, and were carried to the street.

Soon after the arrival of Truck No. 13 other companies arrived and the flames were easily put out. The smoke made its way to every floor and made it difficult for the tenants to find the stairs.

MOB ST. LOUIS ALDERMEN

Enraged Citizens Threaten Officials with Violence.

ROW IS OVER CITY LIGHTING

Delay in Letting Contracts Calls Out the Protest, Which Ends in Securing the Desired Result.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Jan. 12.—When several hundred citizens demanded admittance to the House of Delegates to-day to protest against the action of that body in refusing to pass bills for lighting the city institutions, the delegates concluded it would not be wise to admit them. When the visitors insisted the delegates locked the doors.

The more hot-headed of the citizens attempted to force an entrance. Sergeant at Arms Weeke drew a revolver and threatened to shoot the first man who attempted to enter. He was seized and prevented from carrying out his threat, while delegates inside helped to keep the mob out.

The mob then made another onslaught. This time Weeke, Delegate Robertson, and Clerk Judy showed fight, while half a dozen other delegates back in the office, armed and ready for battle, were prepared to oust those who broke through the wedge. A third attempt was also repulsed.

Albert Life, the house page, who was sent on an errand, was knocked down. Enraged by this, Delegate Albright rushed out, exclaiming: "Give me a gun and I'll shoot the man who struck that boy!"

Some one in the crowd attempted to lasso Albright, while all shouted: "That's right! Lynch him! Hang him!"

Albright fled into the clerk's office, quickly dragging the rope after him, safe out of harm's way.

Edward Wyman was attacked by one of the delegates. Wyman thrashed his assailant, who succeeded in covering up his identity by fleeing into the chamber. By this time the mix-up in the corridor was general. Everybody seemed to be taking a hand in the fight. Some one telephoned a riot call to the Four Courts. Ex-Gov. Stanard elbowed his way through the crowd, and pleaded with them for the sake of the fair name of the city not to resort to mob violence. His counsel and the prompt arrival of the bluecoats calmed the crowd.

Meantime the delegates resolved themselves into a committee of the whole. After much insistence a select committee of the citizens' delegation was allowed on the floor, ex-Gov. Stanard being escorted in by a policeman, by whose side he sat during the proceedings. The resolutions demanding that the house pass the bills at once were read.

Awed by the demonstration, and realizing that a lynching probably would follow their further refusal to take action, the delegates showed the white feather and all voted to pass the bills on first reading. In further response to the committee's demands the House unanimously promised to rush the bills through finally Monday, the earliest date possible.

Major Ziegenhein was one of the frightened spectators of the proceedings. His office is on the second floor of the City Hall, while the house chamber is only a short distance away. He heard of threats of violence made on him, knew that he had been burned in effigy, and understood that it would not take much to arouse the indignation of the crowd to extreme measures, so he took no chances and engaged a bodyguard to escort him to the house chamber.

THE WRECK IN ST. MARY'S BAY.

Little Hope of Saving Unknown Steamer or Survivors, If Any Exist—Gale Is Raging.

ST. JOHN'S, N. F., Jan. 13.—The identity and character of the steamer wrecked on a reef in St. Mary's Bay are still matters of conjecture. The theory that she is an oil tanker is weakened by the fact that she is afire aft and has not exploded. The belief that she is a passenger steamer is strengthened by the fact there are a large number of ship's boats adrift in the bay.

The vessel is a two-master and a complete wreck. She is of nearly 3,000 tons, and probably carried a crew of sixty. She went ashore before daybreak on Thursday, striking a ledge at the foot of the cliff, where escape was hopeless. The crew launched the boats, but probably during the panic some were crushed against her sides, others being swamped, and all the occupants apparently perishing.

The ship was seen to be on fire by residents six miles away. Attracted to the scene, they found the after half of the wreck blazing fiercely and the fore part under water. Kerosene in the cargo helped the blaze.

At that time only three men were left on board. Two were on the bridge and one was in the rigging. Those on the bridge were safe until about 2 o'clock P. M., when they were washed overboard and drowned, the bridge being carried away. The survivor soon afterward left the rigging, swam to the rocks, and twice endeavored to get a footing. Failing in this, he made his way back to the rigging, where he died of exposure during the night.

Many dead bodies are visible tossing in the surf. Two of them were thrown up in a cove, but cannot be reached owing to the heavy sea. One is thought to be the body of a woman.

Boats and other wreckage are strewn among the rocks for miles. Yesterday (Friday) was more stormy than the day before, and it was impossible to reach the wreck, which has gone to pieces to such an extent that it has sunk beneath the waves. A severe gale is raging to-night, which is likely to reduce her to fragments.

The Wreck Commissioner hopes to be able to obtain her name to-day. Residents along the shore made every possible effort to rescue the survivor in the rigging, but, lacking proper outfits, they were unable to succeed.

There is not the slightest prospect that any soul on board escaped death, as the intense midwinter cold would kill any who escaped drowning.

A messenger who has just arrived from Peter's River reports that a trunk filled with women's clothing has been washed ashore there, as well as a garment which is either a waterproof cape, such as would be used by a woman, or a man's overcoat. Near-by was found some underwear, evidently a man's, marked with the initials "J. J." This seems to indicate that the ship had passengers.

The Colonial cruiser Fiona Bay and the steamer Kite will be sent as soon as possible to try to save the survivors, if any remain, but, even by leaving to-night, no steamer can reach St. Mary's Bay before late to-morrow.

It is presumed that the steamer took fire at sea, and that the Captain, in trying to run her to land, lost his bearings during a snowstorm.

LAWTON FUND EXCEEDS $80,000.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Gen. Corbin announced to-day that the subscriptions to the Lawton fund had reached the handsome figure of $80,101, being an increase of nearly $8,000 since the last report. This morning's subscriptions included one of $6,595 from the members of the Union League Club of New York, which is in addition to subscriptions sent to Washington direct by members of the club, amounting to $10,222.

New Jersey Centenarian Dead.

Special to The New York Times.

MATAWAN, N. J., Jan. 12.—Columbus Drake, the oldest resident of Monmouth County, died at his home in this township last night. He was 100 years and 11 days old. His death was caused by the breaking down of his system by old age. Mr. Drake was hale and hearty until a short time ago, and for several years had lived in hope that he would pass the century mark. He was born in Ireland Jan. 1, 1800. He has been a resident of this county since 1852. He was never married. He lived with his sister, who is herself nearing the century mark.

PROF. MORRISON IN JAIL

Charge of Murder Made Against Mount Vernon Wife Slayer.

Serving of Warrant a Fiasco from a Spectacular Standpoint—Prisoner a Disappointment.

Special to The New York Times.

MOUNT VERNON, Jan. 12.—Prof. Alfred Morrison, linguist, somnambulist and bigamist, who on the night of Dec. 28 shot and killed his wife in their room at 235 South Tenth Avenue while under the influence of an alleged attack of somnambulism and who was subsequently exonerated by the Coroner, is now a prisoner in the Westchester County Jail charged with deliberate murder. He was arrested at his boarding house, 7 Rich Avenue, shortly after 4 o'clock this afternoon on a warrant sworn out by Chief of Police Foley, the application made before City Judge Adam Schatz being based on information and belief.

The Chief of Police supported his application for a warrant with nine affidavits signed by the following witnesses: Mrs. A. W. Wells of 243 South Tenth Avenue, Michael Subitzky, Mrs. Michael Subitzky, Mrs. Stevens, Elias Reyman, Dr. Isaac W. Ferris, Dr. P. W. Shipman, all of Mount Vernon; Mrs. O'Neill of Port Jervis, and Mrs. Elmira Ellenberger of Middletown. The first four were near neighbors of the Morrisons on South Tenth Avenue.

Mrs. Wells was the first person to arrive at the Morrison home after Morrison had fired the fatal bullet. The Subitzkys followed her within a few minutes. Elias Reyman is the eleven-year-old boy who was the last person with the family before the shooting occurred. Mrs. O'Neill is the niece and Mrs. Ellenberger the sister of the victim of Morrison's shot.

Dr. Ferris arrived at the house within a half hour after the shooting, and was the first physician on the scene. Dr. Shipman arrived at the house two hours after the shooting. These witnesses are but a small proportion of the number whose affidavits have been secured by District Attorney Andrews of Westchester County, but on the testimony of these alone the District Attorney asserts with confidence that he can secure the conviction of the prisoner for murder. It is a fact much commented on in connection with this case that of these nine witnesses only one, Dr. Shipman, was called to testify in the Coroner's investigation.

MORRISON APPEARS COMPOSED.

Morrison, who since the county officials began a thorough investigation of the affair, has wept and raved in his room, guarded constantly by a policeman, until it became publicly understood that he was on the verge of insanity, submitted to arrest today with one final storm of nervousness, and then went through the ordeal of arraignment in court before a throng of curious spectators with almost perfect composure. Upon being led up the stairs to the City Court Building by two detectives, after having been brought from his home in a carriage, he bore himself with a surprising degree of nonchalance, even stopping to shake hands with several acquaintances.

When led to the bar he gave the appearance of an ordinary workingman of average intelligence such as have been led to the bar and charged with murder in thousands of cases. The hundreds of spectators who crowded the courtroom almost to suffocation and overflowed into the street were visibly disappointed in the appearance and deportment of the man. They saw a dull-eyed man of medium height and build with a dull countenance, Teutonic in its mold rather than Gaelic, and a shuffling, phlegmatic gait.

"Why, he looks like a man who would kill his wife with an axe and box the body in a trunk," was the comment of several Mount Vernon psychologists, and this was the general opinion.

The arrest and hearing which had been looked forward to with breathless interest by a large part of the male population of this city ever since the case was made public was a complete fiasco from a spectacular standpoint. District Attorney Andrews, who has been working on the case for three days, arrived here at 11 o'clock this morning and immediately resumed his labors, assisted by Chief of Police Foley and his entire force. The city was in a state of suppressed excitement and expectation all day over the prospective arrest.

It had been given out that the denouement of the drama would take place about 2 o'clock, and from that hour until 4 o'clock crowds were surging in and out of the City Court Building in expectation of seeing the strange dreamer they have been reading and hearing so much about for a week. At the house where Morrison has been staying since the tragedy there was another big crowd watching for Morrison to be brought out. It was believed every step in the proceedings after the warrant had once been served would be full of highly dramatic situations.

The authorities had arranged that the warrant charging Morrison with murder would be applied for by Mrs. Harry C. Ellenberger of Middletown, a sister of the dead woman. Notwithstanding a dream which Mrs. Ellenberger had, in which her dead sister appeared and told her that Morrison did not kill her intentionally, Mrs. Ellenberger had determined to prosecute her brother-in-law for murder and agreed to be here at 1 o'clock this afternoon to swear out the warrant for his arrest. Until that hour the District Attorney and Chief of Police were busy securing more witnesses in the case.

Everything was in readiness at 1 o'clock for Mrs. Ellenberger's arrival. City Judge Schatz was on the bench prepared to consider the application, which he had been notified would be made to him. The train which was to bring Mrs. Ellenberger arrived, but she was not on board. Another train arrived with the same result. The citizens were becoming impatient.

The District Attorney and Chief Foley put their heads together and decided that they would secure a warrant at all hazards. The Chief agreed to act as complainant in the case, basing his application on affidavits of witnesses. As many of these witnesses as possible were gathered together and the officials pushed their way through a surging mass of waiting spectators into the City Court building at 3 o'clock and submitted the affidavits to Judge Schatz.

Every seat in the courtroom had been filled long before this hour. Several women were in the expectant audience. A great crowd waited down below in the street at the entrance to the Court House, having chosen this spot as likely to afford the best view of Morrison when he should arrive. The city and county officials and as many witnesses as could be hastily summoned gathered in the Judge's private office. Then followed a tiresome wait of an hour. Although neither Mrs. Ellenberger nor Mrs. O'Neill arrived, their affidavits were on hand, having been sworn to at Middletown and Port Jervis, respectively. The other women witnesses named above arrived and served to stimulate the general interest and expectation.

At last the warrant was issued, and Detectives Grant and Lynch slipped out of the courtroom with it. Arriving at the Rich Avenue house in a carriage, the detectives were at once recognized by the crowds of the curious who had been waiting in the cold for hours, expecting to see some highly sensational developments. The detectives went at once to Morrison's room, where he was abruptly told what was wanted of him.

Morrison cried and raved for a moment, and, throwing his arms around Detective Grant's neck, begged his protection. The detective told him that there was no time to be wasted. The man then gathered himself together, put on his overcoat, bade good-bye to his aunt, Mrs. Cohen, and to his friend, Mrs. Allien, with whom he has been stopping, lit a fresh cigarette and walked quietly out to the carriage with the officers.

JAM ABOUT COURT HOUSE.

The approach of the carriage to the city Court House was the signal for a tremendous jam of spectators around the entrance to that building, which required nearly the entire police force to regulate and make a way through for the vehicle. Morrison alighted from the carriage without assistance, and making his way up the stairs, shook hands cordially with several acquaintances in the wall of spectators lining the way.

As much of Mount Vernon's population as had not squeezed into the little courtroom fell in behind the prisoner and struggled up the stairs as far as possible. Morrison was ushered into Judge Schatz's private room, where he was met by his counsel, ex-Judge George C. Appell. Shortly after 5 o'clock he was ushered into the courtroom and stood before the bar.

He held his hat in one hand and an unlighted cigarette in the other. He appeared the least concerned of any one and seemed not the least "broken up," as it was thought by the public that he would be. A casual spectator happening in might have taken him for a small delicatessen dealer being arraigned for violation of the Sunday law. He had something of the appearance of a man who had been up all night, but gave not the slightest evidence of insanity.

Court Clerk Collins read the warrant, which was in elongated phraseology, and in which Jeremiah C. Foley, Chief of Police, &c., deposed that upon information and belief Alfred Morrison, alias Frederick Gordon, did on Dec. 28 unlawfully, willfully, and with deliberate and premeditated design effect the death of one Alida Morrison.

Morrison paid but indifferent attention to the reading of the document, although occasionally he shook his head positively, then spoke to his counsel, Judge Appell. The latter waived the right to hear the public reading of the affidavits on which the warrant was based.

REFUSES PRISONER'S DISCHARGE.

Judge Appell, addressing the court, then said that the depositions and other papers in the case did not show that any crime had been committed, or if any crime had been committed, there was nothing to show that his client committed it. He therefore moved that the prisoner be discharged. Judge Schatz denied the motion.

Judge Appell then said he would waive examination. The prisoner was committed to the custody of the Sheriff to be held without bail awaiting the action of the Grand Jury. Morrison displayed no emotion of any kind during these proceedings, and quietly walked away with the detectives. He was taken in a carriage back to his rooms, where he secured some clothes, and left on the 6:45 o'clock train for White Plains. The trip was without incident, and he was committed to the county jail.

Judge Schatz refused to make public the affidavits upon which the warrant for Morrison's arrest was issued. It was learned from District Attorney Andrews and Chief Foley, however, that evidence considered almost absolutely conclusive of the man's guilt has been secured. In her affidavit, Mrs. Wells says among other things that when she arrived at the Morrison house after the shooting she overheard Morrison tell his wife that she should say that the shooting was accidental and that he had had a dream about burglars being in the house. According to Mrs. Wells, Mrs. Morrison admitted that her husband had concocted the theory of the accidental shooting.

Mrs. Wells also swears she observed powder stains on Mrs. Morrison's dress at the point where the bullet had entered. This completely upsets, it is said, the story of both Morrison and his victim that he fired the shot at imaginary burglars while he was lying in bed, and that she standing in the room received the bullet. Mrs. Wells's evidence makes it certain, it is declared, that the bullet was fired while the revolver was held close to her body.

This last part of Mrs. Wells's evidence was given late this afternoon in the form of a supplementary affidavit, and took the police completely by surprise. The dead woman's clothes will be secured at once and thoroughly examined. Michael Subitzky, another witness, swears that he also heard Morrison coach his wife to tell his story of the shooting.

LABOR'S DEMANDS IN BOSTON.

Mayor Hart Rebuffs a Delegation from the Central Union Which Asks Many Things.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 12.—Mayor Hart was waited upon to-day by J. J. Driscoll and a delegation from the Central Labor Union, who came to demand numerous things, and he gave them a decided set-back. Mr. Driscoll informed the Mayor at the outset that the committee represented 80,000 organized workers. He requested that the eight-hour law be enforced, and he also requested that mechanics in the employ of the city be required to work only between the hours of 8 A. M. and 5 P. M. He asked that all the municipal plants now in operation be continued, and especially the repairs division and the electrical construction division.

Mr. Driscoll also desired that when men employed by the city were to be laid off preference in retaining men should be given to members of labor unions. He asked that if members of organized labor were discharged for cause a hearing be given by the Mayor on the facts, and the discharged men restored to duty if the charges were not proved. An earnest protest was made against the laying off of union men and the retention of non-union men. Mr. Driscoll asked that in making contracts a stipulation be made that union men only be employed.

When he had finished he asked when he might expect a written reply.

Mayor Hart replied: "I shall not write to you at all."

"When shall we call on you for an answer?" Mr. Driscoll asked.

"You need not call," Mayor Hart responded. "I shall try to run the city in the best manner possible for all the citizens, and if anything I may do will be of any benefit to your organizations, so much the better for them. You need not call for any answer to the questions you have put today."

Mr. Driscoll started to say something else, but the Mayor declared that it was unnecessary to go into the matter any further.

The men were very angry when they went away, but they declined to be interviewed. "The public will hear from us," they said, "through the press after we report on Sunday to our organization."

COAL CONSPIRACY IS CHARGED.

Kentucky Railroad Commission Threatens to Punish Lines.

Special to The New York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Jan. 12.—The State Railroad Commission is threatening to punish the railroads for a combine to keep up the price of coal. General Freight Agent Bower of the Illinois Central and Traffic Manager Graham of the Louisville and Nashville, were before the board to-day. Both have heavy coal traffic.

Mr. Bower knew of no combine or discrimination against Kentucky coal. Mr. Graham said there was no combine. His company, he admitted, was the selling agent for certain companies. He said there was no rebate on Kentucky coal, but that a rebate of 30 per cent. was allowed on the product of Virginia and certain other foreign mines provided the fuel was used in Kentucky for manufacturing purposes.

Mr. Graham was excused till Friday next, when he will be prepared to give fuller information.

LIMIT FOR FLAT BUILDINGS.

Chicago Alderman's Proposition Is Favorably Received.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—Alderman Griffith's proposition to limit the height of flat buildings to four stories is received favorably by many other members of the Council. The representative of the Twenty-fifth Ward has come to the conclusion that the great apartment buildings have become a bane to the residence districts of the city, and will attack them in an ordinance which he will introduce next Monday night.

Alderman Alling, a member of the Judiciary Committee, which will be called upon to consider the Griffith ordinance, said today:

"There is no doub

British rule, which is an unpardonable sin in England.

He sharply criticised the manner in which the English obtained possession of the Kimberley diamond fields, and attributed all her interference in the Transvaal and Orange Free State affairs to greed and rapacity. Other claims made by the English were only excuses.

MONEY FOR SOLDIERS' FAMILIES.

British Societies Here Send Out Appeals for Funds.

The British societies in the United States have determined to demonstrate their loyalty to their mother country in her present difficulties by raising as large a fund as they can to supplement that which is being raised at the Mansion House, London, for the widows and orphans of soldiers lost in the Transvaal war. The St. George Society has issued through its President, George Gray Ward, a circular letter in the matter, and the Sons of St. George, who have lodges in various parts of the country, have done likewise. St. David's Society is also interested in the work.

Thus far, it is said, $51,000 has been raised in Chicago, and about $10,000 has been collected from various sources in New Jersey. It is estimated that the response which will be received through various channels will bring the total to at least $250,000.

The Queen to Act as Patroness.

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Jan. 12.—Sir Fleetwood Edwards, the Queen's private secretary, cabled to Lord Minto to-day stating that her Majesty would be pleased to become patroness of the Canadian Patriotic Fund Association for the Canadian soldiers invalided in the wargin South Africa.

MR. HAY MAY NOT BE RECEIVED.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—With reference to a Washington report, cabled here, that the Boers will refuse to receive Adelbert S. Hay, the new United States Consul at Pretoria, now on his way to his post, on account of the fact that he "was in constant communication" with the British Foreign Office while in London, a correspondent is informed that Mr. Hay's communication with the Foreign Office consisted of a social call on Lord Salisbury, which lasted only a few minutes, and was undertaken purely because, as a son of the United States Secretary of State and a former Ambassador at London, he desired to personally pay his father's compliments to the Premier.

A correspondent is officially informed that Lord Salisbury and Mr. Hay did not discuss Transvaal matters.

In reply to a telegram, Dr. Leyds, the diplomatic representative of the Transvaal, wires from Brussels:

"I see no reason why the Transvaal Government should not recognize Mr. Hay as the representative of the United States. I am unable to say more, as communication with my Government is cut off."

LONDON CHEERS VOLUNTEERS.

Scenes of Great Enthusiasm Follow Services for Them in St. Paul's Cathedral.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—Remarkable scenes of patriotism were witnessed in London last evening after a short service held for the volunteers in St. Paul's Cathedral. The vast audience was slow to disperse. Ladies stood upon the chairs beckoning and calling to brothers, sons, and friends in the ranks, the latter signaling back.

A scene of great animation ensued. The organist introduced a few bars of the national anthem in concluding the voluntary. The effect of this was magical. First the volunteers and then the congregation took up the strains, and the vast cathedral was filled with enthusiastic song.

These demonstrations were renewed by immense crowds outside. St. Paul's Churchyard and Ludgate Hill were black with people, and it was impossible for the volunteers to march. Individual members were pulled out of the ranks by their friends and admirers, who raised them on their shoulders, and thus carried them down Fleet Street to the Temple. Those who escaped hoisting proceeded slowly, surrounded by clinging women.

Afterward, at the various theatres where the men were entertained, and yet later on returning to barracks, these scenes were renewed, and the streets were filled until midnight with cheering people.

Mr. Reginald Wynne, Chief of the Yeomanry recruiting office, says he has refused numerous offers of service made by Americans. Only British subjects are allowed to join. Consequently, he says, the report that several American Rough Riders have enlisted in the Yeomanry is incorrect. Some Britishers, however, who are alleged to have seen service in the American Army in Cuba have been accepted.

The Duke of Marlborough has been accepted by the War Office for service in the yeomanry.

Mr. Chamberlain has issued telegrams from Ceylon showing that the Legislative Council of the colony has voted to send 125 mounted armed men to South Africa.

There was a unique and interesting ceremony at the Guildhall to-day, when 500 of the City of London Imperial Volunteers received their kits and the freedom of the city. The big crowds in the city cheered the arriving volunteers, each of whom received a parchment certificate of the freedom, inclosed in a neat blue case. The ceremonial admitting the officers, this afternoon, was more elaborate.

It occurred in the presence of the Lord Mayor, Mr. A. J. Newton, the Councillors, and the Duke of Cambridge. This portion of the regiment, which sails to-morrow, will attend a special service in St. Paul's Cathedral to-night, and will afterward be entertained at supper by the benchers of the Inner Temple.

BOER ARMY IS 100,000 STRONG.

LONDON, Jan. 13.—An apparently well-informed correspondent of The Morning Post says:

"The Boer strength, originally 83,000 men, is now heavily augmented by Cape Colonists, and the enemy's fighting forces may be estimated fairly at 100,000 men and 208 guns. The Boers are not compelled to guard their communications. Their grass is good, the crops are growing, vegetables, cattle, and sheep are plenty, and game is abundant."

RIGHT OF SEARCH MAINTAINED.

Report that Great Britain Has Agreed to Abandon It Proves to be Entirely Erroneous.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—Inquiries made this afternoon by the United States Ambassador, Joseph H. Choate, regarding the disposition of the Beatrice's American cargo, resulted in nothing definite, no further information having been received on this matter.

Varying interpretations are placed on the subject of contraband, but it is learned that the reports that Great Britain gives up logical rights of search and depends entirely upon ships' manifests are incorrect.

In spite of cabled denials, all the American goods except the Beatrice's have been released.

The Foreign Office is fully under the impression that its note to Mr. Choate decided the broad question of contraband.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—At the Cabinet meeting to-day Secretary Hay read the response of the British Government to our representations regarding the flour seizure in Delagoa Bay. Members of the Cabinet, after the meeting, said that the British answer was entirely satisfactory to this Government. The several resolutions of inquiry as to the conduct of the war which have been introduced in both houses of Congress were discussed, and the statement was made that full and complete information would be furnished on all of the matters covered at the earliest day possible.

GERMANY STILL DISSATISFIED.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—There is still great dissatisfaction in Germany at Great Britain's long delay in releasing the Bundesrath and in sending a formal answer to Germany's protest. A high official at the Foreign Office voiced the foregoing sentiment when questioned on the subject to-day, adding:

"Apparently the London Government has tried to expedite matters, but the Durban authorities are unduly slow, seeming to be determined to open the last box of the Bundesrath's cargo in order to avoid an admission of error."

The semi-official Norddeutsche Gazette says the Government has decided that it would not be compatible with strict neutrality to allow war materials to be sent from Germany either to Great Britain or to the Transvaal, and therefore, when it was reported that Herr Krupp was making steel shells for Great Britain, the firm was promptly requested to stop any intended dispatch of arms, guns, ammunition, or other war munitions to either belligerents.

The German diamond industry is being seriously injured by the war. In Hanau four large diamond cutting establishments have been closed.

THE MODDER RIVER FIGHT

Correspondents Describe Methuen's Fierce Onslaught.

FINE STRATEGY OF THE BOERS

Deadliness of the Rifle and Artillery Fire Which the British Faced—Percentage of Loss Large.

LONDON, Jan. 3.—British war correspondents are pouring in by means of the mails columns of descriptions of the operations in South Africa. Those recently printed refer chiefly to the battles of Graspan and Modder River, for it is yet too early for the publication of full accounts of Buller's defeat at Colenso. The Times's correspondent at Modder River has written a graphic account of the long, fierce battle that takes its name from that stream.

"For the whole of the day," he writes, "the Guards Brigade lay on the open veldt in a heat that was actually 110 degrees in the shade at midday. Meanwhile, the left flank had not been idle, and after the General had personally led them to the summit of a slight rise that commanded the only possible means of crossing the river—the dam that had been built to turn the Modder River into an ornamental water for the picnics of the Kimberley excursionists—they moved in echelon toward the edge of the river bank on the enemy's extreme left.

"That it could even be attempted to cross the river sliding sideways through the rush of water over the paddles along a rickety iron bar, one by one, clinging to the short support, in full view of the opposite shore, was an act of reckless heroism against which even the wary Cronje had not provided. This, however, is what was actually done, and it would be difficult to find a parallel for the stubborn pluck of the men who accompanied Col. Barter across the 300 yards of dam and weir. One by one some 400 of them crossed. Then a detachment of the Royal Engineers, showing how well they could take their part in the forefront of the fighting line, followed them, after that some more of the Yorkshire Light Infantry. Little by little a force was collected which cleared several of the nearest houses on the right and effected an occupation of an irrigation patch from which they were never dislodged.

"To fight for thirteen hours is an ordeal that in any kind of warfare would be a terrible strain, but, out on the treeless veldt with the thermometer at the degree above mentioned, the exhaustion suffered by our men was so great that in hundreds of cases men and officers alike slept as they lay in the scrub, careless of the shell and rifle fire that surged over them. To provide them with food was impossible, to bring a water cart on to the field—as the Coldstream Guards found by bitter experience—was only tempting men to expose themselves to death, rushing for the water at all hazards, and leaving the cover, such as it was, afforded by the nine or ten inch growth of mimosa scrub.

"Early in the afternoon the General was shot through the thigh, and for some time the two brigades, in the absence of orders, were compelled to act independently of each other, the only communication being a warning to the Ninth Brigade not to fire upon the First, of which there was some danger.

STRATEGY OF THE BOERS.

"The magnificent manner in which the Boers had realized and augmented the strength of the position, the success with which they had kept their works and disposition secret until the crucial moment, the feint on the extreme right, by which they drew off the entire artillery strength of our force from their main position, and the astonishing accuracy of their picked shots at the longest ranges should all be remembered to the credit of their Generals. But it was in the material which formed the commandos that they failed. They could not do more than they actually did with the men under their command. Already jealousies had sprung up between the Generals, the men accused each other of cowardice, and the threat of physical force had, if rumors were true, to be held over them more than once.

"The one-pound Maxim gun was the most effective weapon used by the Boers. The five or six shots fired in one second while the gun was traversed had more moral effect than the steady discharge of shrapnel from the ordinary fifteen-pounder at half-minute intervals. One man not far from me had both thighs blown off as he sat by one of these little shells landing on the ground between them, but there is no question that the moral effect was as a rule greater than the practical results. No gun was more cordially disliked by our men than this new weapon, that was usually christened 'Bong-bong-bong,' the patent of which in 1892 was offered to and declined by our Government."

Of the lessons to be learned from Modder River this correspondent says:

"It will be impossible in any future war for the officers to retain their swords, and it will be worth while for the War Office to construct some light carbine that may be carried by them instead of the weighty rifle at present out to the men."

The scene after the battle is thus described by the same writer:

"Most people who have staid at Kimberley know of Modder River as a recreation ground, only thinking of it, in fact, much as London regards Maidenhead. Never has it been anything but a frivolous little patch in the heart of the veldt. The punishment for its giddiness has been sudden and extraordinary. The place is deserted, the walls and roofs perforated like a colander, the water, churned and befouled by 10,000 animals, rolls over and over the dead that were hurriedly thrown into its eddying hollows with a weight attached that has in many cases proved insufficient. The bridge lies on its ruined piers, a twisted length of scrap iron, and the dead horses fill every nook in the riverside woods.

MISSILES DESTROY A CHAPEL.

"The chapel with its little wooden cross near the river stood in the thick of the fight, and now lies a crumbling mass of adobe walls, with its shattered earthen altar and the remains of its seats. There is no square rood within this extinct paradise that does not bear witness to the fearful effect of modern weapons."

The conduct of the marines of the Naval Brigade at Grasnan is a source of unending praise from all correspondents. The Times representatives at that battle write:

"The Naval Brigade advanced in extended order, but in converging upon the position to be taken they unconsciously found themselves closed in, and in that formation attempted the ascent. The fire directed upon them was terrible, and, distinguished by their swords, the officers were the first to fall. Commander Ethelstan was mortally wounded fifty yards from the first slope, and one by one the rest fell as they advanced, many with two or three bullet wounds. The slaughter was appalling to watch; the gallantry displayed was useless under the pitiless iron hail that was but slightly checked by the redoubled shelling of the reinforced battery. With a cheer the Yorkshire men—by a curious coincidence they had been conveyed from Mauritius by the very men to whose help they now came—ran up, pouring upward a tremendous fusillade toward the crest of the sangar. Of course, they lost heavily, but their open formation and the impossibility of distinguishing officers saved them from the concentrated fire that had deprived the naval detachment of their leaders, and little by little the thin line of khaki crawled up to the top.

"The storming line was now so near the crest that the guns could only be directed upon the Boers enfilading the position from the spurs of the kopje on the left, and almost in a calm Lieut. S. C. Taylor, closely followed by Lieut. Jones of the marines, reached the outer work of the sangar and made their way over.

"In the next half minute fifty men tumbled over and immediately rushed forward to clear the position in the rear. This was, however, stubbornly held for a quarter of an hour, more, perhaps, as a screen than anything else, to cover the retreat of the Boers.

DRIPPING WITH BLOOD.

"Above, the hilltop was almost dripping with blood; not a boulder escaped its splash of crimson, and the innumerable chips of the ironstone blocks indicated the terrific nature of our fire. Most of the dead or wounded Boers were carried off—fifty of the more severely wounded were found in their hospital a quarter of a mile away—but here and there a dead man proved that here the Transvaal had sent its men down for the first time to meet the oncoming column."

The Daily Telegraph's correspondent dilates upon the daring of the marines.

"The mariners numbered," he writes, "183, and every man was in the fighting line, four yards apart. The total number hit was 92—exactly 50 per cent. Not a particle of cover was to be had, save three small anthills, and the Boers had accurately measured the ranges of these from their position. One gallant fellow, describing the fire to an officer, said: 'Yes, Sir, the bullets came middling thick,' and while actually making the ascent he remarked to his next man that it was like a 'bloomin' hailstorm.' Each of the three companies had only one officer. Two of those were soon hit, and the commanding officer shot dead. Sergeants at once supplied their places, and of these 70 per cent. were hit! Four bullets went through the clothes and helmet of one officer, and a fifth knocked away the magazine of his rifle. That was 'middling thick,' as Tommy said."

"One detachment of sixteen marines," writes The Standard's correspondent, "who had got round the corner of the kopje away from the others, and were without an officer, were not certain about the order to clear the kopje. But one of the men shouted, 'Let's at the devils!' and they rushed to the top, losing ten out of their number in the ascent."

APPEARANCE OF BOER DEAD.

Julian Ralph, writing for The Daily Mail, says:

"Let me describe the top of one small hill in the Belmont engagement, the one in storming which the brave Grenadiers suffered part of their fearfully heavy loss.

"On this kopje the Boer commander had compelled the poorer men of his commando to live for weeks. I took it that these were men of the servant and the laborer class. Their dead, whose untidy and neglected bodies I saw seated as the British bullets and bayonets found them, confirmed this theory, for they were poorly clad, unshaven, unclean, and hungry-looking. They were of that class of Boer whom James Bryce describes as having started at a seventeen century standard and deteriorated for 300 years. I knew, when I saw such men among the dead, the wounded, and the prisoners, how it could be that white men could misuse the white flag and mock the sacred purpose of the Geneva Cross.

"The food, the dirt, and the extraordinary profusion of cartridges and cartridge wrappings were all mixed together, but the earth and disorder were not so offensive as the grimy, beastly condition of the dead.

"If I could write steadily for a week (and if there were no such strict censorship as fetters me) I could not exhaust the list of peculiarities, eccentricities, anomalies, and novelties of this war waged against us by an undisciplined force of rebels who are soldiers by instinct and farmers or cattle raisers for livelihood. But I could not in all that week state a more astonishing fact than that at some of these battles the better-class Boers have come to battle in their carriages like gentlemen driving to the Derby at home, and, having done their best, have retired in the same way, leaving their vassals to cover their retreat."

CAMP LIFE DESCRIBED.

In a lighter strain The Pall Mall Gazette's correspondent at Frere Camp, under date of Dec. 6, described camp life:

"The tedium of camp life here has been relieved by surprise visits paid to various Dutch farms whose owners have been suspected of complicity in the rising. No looting was allowed, the orders being very strict on this point. Despite, however, the strictness with which these most necessary orders have been carried out, the return of some raiding parties rather resembled a border foray of the olden time. The verb 'to commandeer' covers a multitude of petty larcenies. The camp humorists have already nicknamed the various irregular corps forming the mounted infantry brigade 'Bethune's Buccaneers.' 'Thorneycroft's Insects,' so called from their ubiquitousness, are among the most aptly named. Our latest arrival, the South African Light Horse, who wore cocks' feathers in their smasher hats, have of course been named 'The Cockyolly Birds.'"

From the Ladysmith correspondent of The Daily Chronicle comes a grim touch of besieged misery:

"Disheveled women are peering out of their dens in the rocks and holes in the sand. They crawl into the evening light, shaking the dirt from their petticoats and the sand from their back hair. They rub the children's faces round with the tails of their gowns. They tempt scraps of flames to take the chill off the yellow water for the children's tea. After sundown a steady Scotch drizzle settles down upon us."

SIXTY DAYS FOR FLIRTING.

John Fisher Is Sentenced for Speaking to a Strange Girl.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 12.—John Fisher—young, debonair, and high-collared—who claims to be the representative of a historical publishing house of New York, is in jail in Camden for trying to flirt on a train near Atlantic City with Miss Lizzie Clark, a demure maid of fifteen, who looks older. Lizzie lives at Dorothy, N. J.

Fisher had been to Tuckahoe, and the train stopped at Winslow on the return journey bound for Camden. Miss Clark was standing on the platform. He thought she smiled. She got on the car and took the front seat. He beat a rag-time refrain. Then he ran his hand through his hair, brushed two specks from his coat, smiled a pensive smile, and took the seat beside Miss Clark and remarked in feeling tones "that it looked like rain."

Hardly were the words uttered when the conductor bore down, attracted by the girl's signals of distress. Fisher was forcibly pulled from hisses. and kept under surveillance until he was delivered to the Camden authorities This is the story he told to Justice Stackhouse at his hearing yesterday, but the Judge did not believe him and he was sentenced to sixty days in jail.

ACCUSE MR. KEATING.

Paving Contractors Allege Bad Treatment and Consult Counsel.

It was learned yesterday that several contractors, who desired to bid on asphalt repaving advertised for by the Department of Highways, felt so much aggrieved over the treatment which they alleged they had received at the hands of Commissioner Keating that they had consulted counsel in reference to the advisability of bringing suit to restrain the awarding of the contracts.

Statements made to Kellogg, Rose & Smith of 120 Broadway, who have been retained by one of the interested parties, were to the effect that Commissioner Keating had refused to accept bids which were in conformity with the specifications. L. Laflin Kellogg, the senior member of the firm, admitted that he had been consulted by a client who felt that he had been badly treated, but he would not say who this client was nor what was the nature of his grievance.

At least one other law firm has been similarly consulted, and the matter was considered so serious that Controller Coler was informed of the alleged irregularity, and warned not to pay any money under the contract until the courts had been invoked for relief.

Commissioner Keating last night said that he had no knowledge of any irregularity in receiving or rejecting bids, and that he welcomed any investigation that might be made.

KILLED HIS BABY SISTER.

Negro Boy, Seven Years Old, Cut Her Head Off with an Axe.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 12.—A negro boy named Frank Hill, aged seven years, instantly killed his half-sister, Mary Banks, aged two and a half years, with an axe near Scottsville Va., Thursday afternoon.

The children were left alone at their home. When their parents returned they found the girl with her head entirely severed from her body near the chimney, lying partly covered by ashes. An inquest was held yesterday, but owing to the culprit's youth he will not be prosecuted.

MRS. BEULAH A. PRICE DEAD.

She Was the Mother-in-Law of Attorney General John W. Griggs.

PATERSON, N. J., Jan. 12.—Mrs. Beulah A. Price, mother-in-law of Attorney General John W. Griggs, died this afternoon at Mr. Griggs's home, in this city. Mrs. Price was sixty-six years of age. She had been ill for some time. She was a native of Ohio, and came here to her daughter's home several months ago. On account of her mother's illness Mrs. Griggs did not join the Attorney General in Washington this Winter.

Firemen Still in the Hospital.

Three of the twenty firemen who were overcome during the fire in West Fifty-ninth Street Wednesday morning are still at Roosevelt Hospital suffering with burns, inhalation of smoke, and general shock. Capt. Edward Tobin is in a serious condition, pneumonia having set in. The other two men, Patrick Rogan of Engine No. 23 and Patrick J. Clark of Engine No. 40, may be able to leave the hospital in a day or two.

Seaboard Air Line Can Consolidate.

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. [illegible]—The bill to give the consent of the State of Virginia to the consolidation of the Seaboard Air Line system, which passed the Senate yesterday, passed the House to-day, was signed by the Governor this afternoon, and is now a law.

SENATOR COFFEY ON TRIAL

Replies to Charges of Disloyalty and Accuses Others.

His Counsel Declares that in Many Districts Brooklyn Democratic Leaders Cut Their Ticket.

The trial of Senator Michael J. Coffey, the Democratic leader of the Ninth Assembly District, Brooklyn, on the charges of disloyalty to the Democratic organization, preferred against him by his opponents in his district, was formally begun last night before the special committee of the County Executive Committee, appointed to hear the charges.

The hearing was held in the rooms of the Executive Committee in the Jefferson Building, in Court Square. The hearing was a public one. Ex-Assistant District Attorney John Maguire, Chairman of the committee, presided. The other members of the committee, Senator P. H. McCarren, John J. Clancy, James Regan, and George Lindsey, were all present. Senator Coffey was in attendance, with his counsel, ex-Assistant District Attorney Isaac M. Kapper. Henry Furlong appeared as counsel for the committee.

Mr. Kapper presented statements from John J. Monahan and J. J. McKeon, members of the General Committee from the Ninth District, in which they declared that their names had been attached to the anti-Coffey petition without their consent.

Senator Coffey, through his counsel, denied all of the charges against him. His counsel entered a number of technical objections to the continuance of the proceedings. He contended that the rules of the Executive Committee, under which the hearing was being held, were non-effective, as they had not been filed with the custodian of the public records within three days after the adoption, as provided for by law; that under the primary law the General Committee had no power to punish a member for failing to act with the majority; that the members of the committee appointed to hear the charges were necessarily witnesses for the defense, and so were incompetent to conduct a hearing.

Mr. Kapper said further that according to the primary law support of State and National candidates was the only requisite of loyalty to a party. He said, in effect, that if Senator Coffey had been disloyal there were others present who were "in the same boat." While Senator Coffey's district had run behind 396 votes in the last election, that of Mr. Maguire had run behind 346 votes, that of Mr. Regan 378 votes, that of Mr. Claney 246 votes, and Senator McCarren's district 233 votes. Of the twenty-one districts in the county, he said ten of them had cut the ticket worse than it had been cut in Senator Coffey's district.

"If you exclude these objections," said Mr. Kapper, "it will be at your peril before the courts and before the bar of public opinion. It is a mistake to try to strike down the only Independent Democratic leader of this county."

Mr. Furlong, for the committee, raised a number of technical exceptions to Mr. Kapper's objections.

Mr. Kapper's objections were nally overruled and the committee decided to adjourn the hearing until this evening, when testimony will be taken.

NAMES OFF THE TICKET.

Republican Club's Contest Settled by Withdrawal as Candidates of Messrs. Smith and Hitchcock.

The contest in the Republican Club which grew out of the nomination of John Sabine Smith for member of the Executive Committee, and which resulted in the nomination of J. F. Hitchcock as an opposing candidate to Mr. Smith, has been practically settled by the withdrawal of both men from the tickets to be voted for next Monday night. The following note, signed by both candidates, was sent to Senator Depew, the President of the club, last night.

"We, the undersigned, having been nominated for the same position on the Executive Committee of the club, and it having been represented to us by the Building Committee that a contest at this time might imperil the project of a new clubhouse, and also engender ill-will between some of our members at a time when all should endeavor to promote good fellowship, do hereby withdraw our names from before the club for said office, and respectfully decline the said nomination, and request that you direct that no ballots be cast or counted for us at the coming election."

According to the rules of the club, the withdrawals of candidates must be formally indorsed by the seconders of the nominations. It was said by one of the men who had been instrumental in securing the nomination of Mr. Hitchock that the men who had backed him would not permit him to retire from the contest simultaneously with Mr. Smith. On the other hand, the same man said, Mr. Smith's withdrawal would be followed by that of Mr. Hitchcock, but the indorsers of the latter would insist on Mr. Smith declining the nomination as a preliminary to the restoration of harmony. Unless this could be done, it was said, there would be a contest at the election.

CLUB'S NEW JERSEY NIGHT.

Republicans Honor the Officials of the Neighbor State—Gov. Voorhees on Industrial Combinations.

A dinner in honor of Gov. Foster M. Voorhees and other officials of New Jersey was given by the Republican Club at the clubhouse, 450 Fifth Avenue, last night. The occasion was known as "New Jersey Night."

In the absence of Senator Depew, the President of the club, Col. Charles F. Homer presided during the greater part of the function, but late in the evening Senator Depew arrived, and from that time on he acted as toastmaster. The guests of honor included, besides Gov. Voorhees, Judge J. Franklin Fort of Newark, who nominated the late Vice President Hobart; Gen. J. W. Congdon, Inspector General of the New Jersey National Guard; President William Johnson of the New Jersey State Senate, and B. F. Jones, Speaker of the House. About a hundred members of the club took part in the dinner.

Gov. Voorhees, who made the first speech, said that his State had come to be known principally for its policy of offering special inducements to industrial combinations. The policy, he said, had been in force for fifty years. The State had a large revenue from this source, but he was not prepared to defend this plan unconditionally. It had a tendency, he said, to keep the people in ignorance of what they were really spending. In turn, he said, new conditions might make it necessary to adopt a new plan of taxation, but he was willing to trust to the future to develop a remedy for any evils that might ensue from the present system.

Judge Fort, discussing "New Jersey Republicans," said that no State contained a more loyal population. "We have within our borders," he said, "no Winslows who send telegrams to the President which should brand the senders as traitors to the republic and to mankind."

Senator Depew talked of expansion in commerce and national growth, and extolled the work of the Republican Party which, he said, had always been identified with expansion. He praised the work of the Republicans of New Jersey and promised that when the Republican Club moved into its new home it would again call upon Gov. Voorhees and his fellow officials to tell how the party fared and to instruct the club how to influence Republican votes in this city.

Speaker Jones and Gen. Congdon also spoke.

DEMOCRATS AND CURRENCY.

Opposition Will Not Attack the Senate Bill, but Will Assail "Favoritism"—No Amendments Expected.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The admitted unreadiness of the Democrats of the Senate to begin their opposition to the Currency bill did not astonish the leading Republicans, who have known that the resistence to the bill would be merely perfunctory. It is learned that the bill is not to be allowed to pass without some speeches similar to those delivered in the house, in which a great deal of criticism will be directed to matters not in the bill and to the "favoritism" shown by the Administration to National banks. Senator Jones of Arkansas, is expected to make one of the speeches, and it is believed that Bacon of Georgia will be prevailed upon to deliver one that will agree with the prevailing sentiment in Georgia.

Although it is asserted by a Democratic Senator that amendments are to be offered, it cannot be ascertained that any Democrat contemplates proposing an amendment looking to the free coinage of silver at the ratio of sixteen to one. But the Democrats who still desire to vote on that question will have an opportunity. Senator Teller says he will afford all lovers of silver the chance to go on record. Unless Mr. Teller or Mr. Stewart assumes that office it is safe to say no Democrat will perform it. From all Democratic accounts it is gathered that the opposition will not be prolonged.

There is so much hesitation and doubt in the party about the financial question, so many differences of opinion, that some of the wiser leaders would prefer to let the Republicans go on with the programme they are in a position to carry out and let time point the way for a party position which can be assumed without danger of serious rupture of harmony.

It is remarked that this is the first time in many years when the opposition was not eager to take up a financial discussion. Hitherto it has been difficult to find time for all the speakers on a money question. Now there is plenty of time for all, and the demand for it is amazingly less than the supply.

TO DISMISS ENTIRE FACULTY.

New President of the University of Cincinnati Expected to Make a Clean Sweep.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Jan. 12.—Dr. Howard Ayres, the new President of the University of Cincinnati, intends to make a clean sweep of that institution by dismissing the entire Faculty. He will go before the Board of Directors next Monday with a recommendation that all chairs be declared vacant after June 1 next, which is the end of the college year. The board is said to be willing to support Dr. Ayres in any plan he proposes.

Various causes have operated to keep the university in a state of turmoil for several years. From a lack of funds the Directors had no President for a long time, but last year, owing to the demoralized conditions in the internal affairs of the university, they called Howard Ayres from the University of Missouri, at Columbia, Mo., where he was Professor of Biology. It is believed by many friends of the university that the action to be taken is the beginning of the end of the many internal troubles through which the institution has gone. It is said that Mr. Ayres had a tacit understanding with the Directors that such a move would be taken before he would accept the Presidency. In fact, when his duties were outlined by the Board he was practically given the power of employment and removal through recommendation.

During the past month President Ayres has made frequent visits to different parts of the country, and one of the professors said to-day he had an indirect intimation that President Ayres had been on a still hunt for men to fill the vacancies, and that as soon as the wholesale removals could be accomplished their successors would be proposed. He also said he believed that the slate had been completed.

While several of the professors are not considered competent by the President, the main ground for his dissatisfaction is said to be the factional contests and doubtful loyalty of some of the cliques. There is also a disposition to criticise and belittle the college. On class night in 1896 graduates in costumes caricatured the Faculty in public. This led to bitter feeling and harsh action, culminating in the resignation of several students.

Prof. Ayres is forty years old and a giant in stature. He lives with his wife and seven daughters in Avondale.

HEAVIER TAXES FOR CHICAGO.

Supreme Court Holds Part of New Revenue Law Unconstitutional.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—The Illinois Supreme Court at Springfield to-day handed down a decision declaring unconstitutional the section of the new revenue law which provided for the scaling down of the tax levy.

The law applied to all the State, and as the assessed valuation of property has been heavily increased in some sections, the knocking out of the limitation clause of the new law will result in a large increase in the tax levy. In Chicago and Cook County the increase will range from 20 to 50 per cent.

EXPEDITION TO CAPE NOME.

Party to Try an Overland Journey of 750 Miles.

SEATTLE, Washington, Jan. 12.—An expedition will soon leave this city to accomplish the difficult feat of reaching Cape Nome by an overland journey from Portage Bay, Cook's Inlet, across the snow-covered plains of Alaska. The journey will cover 750 miles.

The leader of the expedition is to be L. L. Bales, a pioneer prospector. Bales arrived in Seattle last night on the steamer Rosalie from the Porcupine district. One of the principal promoters of the expedition is Frank P. Vrooman of Chicago. There are twenty persons in the party.

RAIN AIDS WATER SUPPLY.

Relief Afforded in Brooklyn by Thursday's Storm, However, Is Only Temporary.

Chief Engineer Birdsall of the Department of Water Supply yesterday took a pessimistic view of the effect of Thursday's rainfall, so far as it affected the shortage in the Brooklyn supply. The storm, he said, had added largely to the quantity of water in the reservoirs whence the supply for Manhattan and the Bronx is drawn, but the accretions in Brooklyn were only sufficient to give momentary relief. The principal reason for this difference, Mr. Birdsall pointed out, was due to the physical nature of the two districts.

In the Croton watershed, he said, the ground was frozen, and therefore the water ran into the reservoirs with little loss, while on Long Island the soil was still soft and no increase in the reservoirs could be noted until after a certain amount of saturation had ensued. Mr. Birdsall declared that the increase in the supply would obviate for a few days the necessity of restricting the residents of Brooklyn to using the water only for drinking and culinary purposes, but nothing but a heavy rainfall for several days could prevent a water famine.

Deputy Commissioner Moffett of Brooklyn also declared that the danger of scarcity of water in that borough was by no means averted. While the rainfall amounted to 2.12 inches, Mr. Moffett asserts it will require several more equally heavy rainfalls before conditions become normal. Mr. Moffett reported that over a foot of water had been gained in the Hempstead reservoir as a result of the storm. The reports also showed that there had been a gain in the amount of water in storage at Ridgewood and Mount Prospect.

It was decided to defer action in the matter of shutting off the supply at the navy yard, the Fort Hamilton reservation, and Governors Island. The authorities at these places have promised to see that strict economy is observed in the use of water.

The storm had the further effect of deferring the use of the polluted water from Brisley's and Springfield ponds, which were to be drawn upon as a last resort.

FOG HINDERS NAVIGATION.

Steamer Goes Ashore on Staten Island, but Is Uninjured.

Fog interfered considerably with navigation in the bay and rivers in the earlier part of the day yesterday. The Quarantine disinfecting steamer James W. Wadsworth ran aground at 8:30 o'clock on the Staten Island shore. She was coming from the hospital islands in the lower bay to the upper Quarantine Station when she struck near the proving guns of Fort Wadsworth. As soon as Health Officer Doty heard of the accident he sent the two Quarantine tugs, Charles F. Allen and Governor Flower to her aid. They hauled on the stranded steamer for an hour and a half, and finally pulled her off. She received no damage.

The Standard Tug No. 2, owned by the Standard Oil Company, was slowly steaming in the upper bay at 8 o'clock, when the pilot suddenly saw Oyster Island—right before him. Before the tug could answer her wheel she ran on the reef. Tugs went to her assistance and pulled her off.

The only Sound steamer that came in on time was the Priscilla of the Fall River Line. The Sound boats Worcester and Maine were delayed by the fog just outside Hell Gate, and did not reach their docks before noon. The ferryboats were more or less delayed, while the trains and trolleys that brought passengers over the Brooklyn Bridge were crowded. At 9 o'clock the fog lifted a little, but an hour later settled more thickly than ever. After noon, however, it began to lift.

HEAVY WIND AT FERRY HILL.

Summer Residences at the Rhode Island Resort Badly Damaged.

BRISTOL, R. I., Jan. 12.—Ferry Hill, the Summer residence portion of this place, was struck by a heavy wind early this morning, and roofs were torn off, chimneys thrown down, and houses twisted out of shape. In many places the furniture in the upper stories was picked up by the wind and distributed in disorder in the yards and upon the lawns of the residences. Heavy rain added to the damage caused by the wind.

The Summer residences of William G. Lowe of New York and Dr. H. H. Howe of Philadelphia were among those partly wrecked.

Found Death in a Snowstorm.

OGDENSBURG, Jan. 12.—A heavy snowstorm visited this section during the night. This morning Peter B. Ebee, sixty years old, was found frozen to death on the road entering Rensselaer Falls. He was going to his sister's house and was overtaken by the storm. He was found in front of his sister's place on his hands and knees, nearly covered with snow.

Railroad Washout in Connecticut.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Jan. 12.—As the result of washouts on the Groton extension of the Consolidated Railroad, caused by the heavy rains of last night, traffic over this division has been entirely suspended to-day, and it will take thousands of dollars to repair the roadbed. The most severe washout was just east of the Thames River Bridge, and extended a distance of a mile and a half.

WESTERN MARYLAND FINANCES.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 12.—A new complication has arisen in the financial affairs of the Western Maryland Railroad Company which may lead to the throwing of the property into court on an application for the appointment of a receiver.

In their investigation into the condition of the railroad property, the newly appointed Directors on the part of the city ascertained that the railroad had a floating debt of $225,000. Obligations of the company are now coming due, and it needs money to tide it over its financial straits. The banks and individuals who have advanced the railroad money on call loans have refused any further advances unless the city guarantees the payment of the existing debt of $225,000.

A meeting of the city's financial officers and the city Directors was held to-day to discuss the new phase of the situation, and after a thorough discussion referred the matter to City Solicitor Carter for an opinion and recommendation. Another meeting will be held on Thursday of next week.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST. — Threatening; variable winds.

The weather conditions have moderated markedly in the last twenty-four hours. The rapid succession of highs and lows across the northern portion of the country has ceased, and no marked change will occur for the next thirty-six or forty-eight hours. The storm, central Thursday night in Western Pennsylvania, has moved to Newfoundland, and has caused rain in the Atlantic States, except snow in Northern New England and light snow in the lake regions. Rain has also fallen in the North Pacific States and northern plateau. The storm to the north of Montana has remained stationary, increasing in intensity. The temperature has fallen in the Middle and South Atlantic States, except in Southwestern Virginia, where it has risen slightly. The temperature has risen slightly in New England, and elsewhere it has remained nearly stationary.

Threaning weather and snow flurries may be expected in the lake regions and Northern New England, snow flurries in the northern portions of Minnesota and North Dakota, rain in Montana, and generally fair weather elsewhere. The temperature conditions will remain practically without change, except a slight fall in New England.

Fresh northwesterly winds, diminishing, may be expected on the North Atlantic Coast, light to fresh northwesterly winds on the Middle Atlantic, and light north to northwest winds on the South Atlantic Coast.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES'S thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

	—Weather Bureau— 1899.	1900.	TIMES. 1900.
3 A. M.	13	38	42
6 A. M.	12	36	40
9 A. M.	16	38	41
12 M.	23	44	46
3 P. M.	26	41	44
6 P. M.	30	38	41
9 P. M.	25	32	36
12 P. M.	25	31	32

THE TIMES'S thermometer is 6 feet above the street level; that of the Weather Bureau is 285 feet above the street level.

Average temperatures yesterday were as follows:

Printing House Square	40
Weather Bureau	38
Corresponding date, 1899	21
Corresponding date for last twenty years	31

The maximum temperature yesterday was 45 degrees at 1 P. M., and the minimum 31 degrees at 10 P. M. The humidity at 8 A. M. was 100 per c

BROOKLYN'S SCHOOL BILL

Special Committee's Radical Measure Introduced.

TO END BOARD OF EDUCATION

Powers of Borough Boards to be Restored—City Superintendent and Examiners Retained.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—To the great variety of propositions for amendments to the educational section of the Greater New York charter another was added to-day which is more radical in its provisions than any yet proposed. This provides for a complete reorganization of the school department and the abolition of the Central Board of Education. It was brought to this city by Horace E. Dresser, and introduced by Senator Marshall. Mr. Dresser is Vice President of the Central Board of Education and Chairman of a special committee on legislation of the Brooklyn Borough Board, by which this bill was prepared.

In explanation of the bill Mr. Dresser says that it contemplates a complete revision of the educational section of the charter. It abolishes the Central Board of Education and restores to the borough boards the functions and powers which they possessed before the consolidation. "The bill recognizes the fact," says Mr. Dresser, "that there must be some connecting link between the Borough Boards, and this link is provided for in the Board of Estimate, which is authorized to apportion to each borough its share of school moneys raised from all sources. Section 1,065 of the charter which gives power to the central board to reapportion this money is repeated. It is also recognized that there should be a connecting link in the educational system on the purely educational side as well as the material, and to provide this the City Superintendent is retained."

The positions of examiners are also retained, but instead of being limited to five persons a licensing board is created to consist of the same officers as at present but with the four Borough Superintendents added. Under the present system the City Superintendent and Board of Examiners are appointed by the Board of Education. This board being abolished, it is necessary to provide an appointing power. A Board of Delegates is therefore created to consist of the three members of the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx, two in the Borough of Brooklyn and one each from the Boroughs of Richmond and Queens. These delegates are to be elected by the Borough Boards, and their sole function is to be to meet annually to fill vacancies which occur by expiration of the terms of office of the examiners and the City Superintendent. They are also empowered to meet at any time when a vacancy may occur by reason of death or resignation.

Sections 1,079, 1,080 and 1,081, which relate to the duties of the City Superintendent and Borough Superintendents have been recast so as to carry out the general idea of the bill to confer more power upon the Borough Boards.

Another feature of this bill relates to the trustees of the College of New York and to the Normal College. These are separate corporations technically not under the control of the Board of Education, but practically under the same management for the reason that the men who compose the Central Board of Education also compose the Board of Trustees of the college. The result is that the alumni of the City College may have few and possibly no representative on the Board of Trustees. As the Board of Education is to be abolished the committee which prepared this bill adopted a plan presented to the Board of Education by a committee of the college alumni. Under it the Mayor is to appoint nine trustees for each college for a term of three years, the terms of three trustees expiring each year. These nine trustees with the President of the college and the four Presidents of the Borough Boards are to form the Board of Trustees of the college.

To Pay Teachers Next Week.

Controller Coler said yesterday that the public school teachers in the Boroughs of Manhattan and the Bronx would be paid early next week. The work of the Commissioners of Accounts is almost finished. The auditors will work to-morrow.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS.

Measures Relating to New Trials for Convicts, Pay of Attorneys, and Grand Jury Minutes.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Assemblyman Charles Dillon of New York will on Monday introduce in the Assembly a bill which seeks to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure so as to permit a person convicted of crime to move for a new trial on newly discovered evidence at any time before the expiration of the sentence imposed.

As the law now stands, the motion for such new trial must be made within one year after judgment. "This state of the law," said Mr. Dillon, "has recently worked injustice, and in a number of instances the Judges of the General Sessions in New York City have publicly stated that, if it were not for the existence of Section 308 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence would have been granted.

"This was particularly the case where Judge Cowing found himself powerless to grant a new trial to one Saul Jacobs, who was convicted before him of the crime of having obtained a large sum of money by means of selling brass filings for gold. The man, on his trial, protested that he merely acted as a broker, and was innocent, and after a long sentence had been imposed the daughter of the prisoner spent two years in hunting down the real culprit, whom she subsequently found in the person of one Coppleman. She secured the extradition of Coppleman from Chicago, and he subsequently pleaded guilty to the offense and was sentenced to prison. There seemed to be no doubt that the Court would set aside Jacobs's conviction on the confession of Coppleman. But, when that motion came to be made, counsel for the accused was confronted with this section of the code.

"As to my other amendment of Section 308, the present section is not clear as to the amount of compensation that can be ordered to be paid to counsel who have been assigned to defend persons charged with murder in the first degree. All of the trial judges, and in one recent instance the Court of Appeals, allowed counsel additional compensation after conviction for services rendered in the Court of Appeals, but recently the first Appellate Division has determined that, as the statute now reads, no greater sum than $500 can be allowed for services of counsel, including the defense on the trial as well as the appeal.

"The amendment proposed is designed to get rid of any question as to the construction of the language of the statute, and to leave it in the discretion of the Judge before whom the case is tried, to fix what in his opinion is a reasonable compensation, not exceeding $500."

Assemblyman Patton has introduced a bill which it is expected will bring out much discussion from attorneys all over the State. It is an amendment to Section 266 of the Criminal Code, and provides that in the trial of a criminal case, upon motion of either the people or the defendant, the testimony of the witness before the Grand Jury shall be produced in court and the witness examined upon that testimony for the purpose of determining if the story he tells on the trial is consistent with his testimony before the Grand Jury.

"Under the law as it now stands, it is discretionary with the Judge as to whether the Grand Jury minutes shall be put in evidence on the trial and the witness examined upon them. The question usually comes up in criminal cases, and generally the Court rules that the Grand Jury minutes shall not be put in evidence.

BROOKLYN IMPROVEMENTS.

Senator Marshall's Bill Provides for a Bond Issue, One-third to be Refunded by Those Benefited.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Senator Marshall to-day introduced a bill to provide for the further improvement of Bedford Avenue, in Brooklyn, from the extremity of the present improvement to Flatbush Avenue. To provide for the improvement the Mayor and Comptroller of the City of New York shall be directed by the Board of Estimate to issue bonds to an amount equal to the cost or estimated cost of the improvement, these bonds to bear interest not exceeding 4 per cent. per annum.

To provide for the payment of these bonds the Department of Highways shall fix a district of assessment according to benefit, upon which shall be levied and collected in twenty annual installments one-third of the entire amount of the bonds, together with interest thereon, the remaining two-thirds of the amount to be divided into a like number of parts or installments, and one of such installments shall be inserted in the annual tax budget of the city each year for twenty successive years and be levied upon and collected from all the real and personal property situated in the city and subject to taxation.

The proceedings to acquire title to the property shall be in charge of a commission of three to be appointed by the Supreme Court in the Second Judicial Department and to receive compensation at the rate of $6 a day each.

Senator Marshall also introduced a bill for the opening, laying out, and improving of Remsen Avenue, in the Borough of Brooklyn. The provisions of the bill are identical with those of the Bedford Avenue bill.

$30,000 FOR THE STATE SURVEY.

Verplanck Colvin Discovers Over 800 Acres of State Lands.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Assemblyman Allds to-day introduced a bill appropriating $30,000 to enable the State Engineer and Surveyor to continue to co-operate with the Director of the United States Geological Survey in making a topographic survey and map of the State of New York.

A remarkable discovery has been made by Verplanck Colvin of the State land surveys. In recent surveys made in ascertaining the boundary line between Herkimer and Hamilton Counties he found that the State owns between 800 and 900 acres of valuable Adirondack forest lands in Hamilton County, although the State authorities were not aware of it.

ADVERTISING ON ELEVATED ROADS.

Mr. Roche's Bill Prohibits It and Provides Severe Penalties.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Mr. Roche introduced a bill providing that no elevated railroad company in a city of 1,000,000 or more population shall exercise any rights or privileges except such as were expressly granted in the special statute by which such company was organized.

The bill is evidently aimed at the sale of advertising privileges. It provides in detail that no elevated railway shall lease, let, bargain, or give to any other corporation or person any of its buildings, stations, fixtures, coaches, cars, or other property owned, occupied or used by it in its business, or any part or portion, for advertising purposes, or for the sale of goods, merchandise, or wares, except papers, books, and periodicals, nor post or exhibit, in or upon any of its property, any card, sign, device, writing, printing, or picture in the nature of an advertisement of the business, trade, or profession of any other corporation or person.

Any company offending against the provisions of this act shall forfeit $100 for each separate and distinct violation of any of the provisions of this act, which sum may be recovered in an action in any court of competent jurisdiction by any citizen of this State.

Tax on Stock Companies.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Mr. Roche introduced a bill in the Assembly to-day compelling all stock corporations, except moneyed, insurance, and railroad companies to submit to the Secretary of State within one month a detailed statement of the condition of their business, giving to the Attorney General the power to make an investigation to verify such report and empowering the Controller to impose a tax of one-eighth of 1 per cent. of the amount of its capital stock.

Unclaimed Savings Banks' Deposits.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Mr. Sanders of New York introduced a bill in the Assembly providing that savings banks and other banking institutions shall turn over to the State Banking Superintendent all moneys that have been unclaimed for a period of thirty years, and further providing that at the end of forty years from the time such moneys were turned over to the State they may be applied to the expenses of the State Government.

JUSTICE LAUGHLIN MUST SERVE.

To Join Appellate Division of Supreme Court, Fourth Department.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Gov. Roosevelt has decided that Justice Laughlin of Buffalo shall sit in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, in the Fourth Department.

The matter has been in abeyance for some days because Justice Laughlin preferred not to serve for the present, at least on that bench. Gov. Roosevelt determined, however, that the public interests require an immediate designation.

Justice Laughlin will join the Appellate Division on Jan. 15.

PRISON COMMITTEE'S REPORT.

Deplorable Conditions Found at Auburn, Sing Sing, and Dannemora—Scheme of Industries Inadequate.

ALBANY, Jan 12.—The special committee appointed by the State Prison Commission to inquire into the management of the State Prisons presented its report to Gov. Roosevelt to-day.

Among other things the report says that the scheme of industries is neither adequate to the support of the prisons nor the welfare of the prisoners; that Auburn, on the testimony of the Superintendent of the Auburn City Fire Department, is merely a rotten shell; that Sing Sing, by the late fire, has been proved to be worse than that; that both Sing Sing and Dannemora are overrun with vermin, and that at the latter prison the doctor does not dare to have the whitewash scraped off for fear of bacilli of tuberculosis.

For an Upper Hudson River Dam.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Assemblyman Hitchcock to-day introduced a bill in the House providing that the Hudson River Water Power Company, which proposes to furnish electrical power to cities, villages, and manufacturing establishments of the Upper Hudson Valley, may erect and maintain forever a dam across the Hudson River between Glens Falls and Palmer Falls. The dam may be erected to such a height as will fully utilize the fall of such river.

Prison-Made Furniture in Schools.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Assemblyman Roche of New York has introduced a bill to prevent the use of prison manufactures in the public schools. This will affect principally the school furniture industry at Auburn prison, which has come into active competition with a large number of private manufacturing establishments.

$145,000 for Beet Sugar Culture.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Assemblyman Rogers of Broome will early next week introduce a bill appropriating $125,000 for the promotion of beet sugar culture. Last year's appropriation was $30,000, but there was an unexpended balance of $60,000 available, which gave $90,000 for the work. There is $20,000 of this amount still unexpended, which, with the appropriation to be asked for, will make $145,000 available this year.

Canal and Commerce Reports.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Gov. Roosevelt will not receive the report of the commission which investigated the decline of commerce at the Port of New York until next week. On Monday evening next the Governor will confer with Gen. Greene of the Canal Advisory Board, on the report of that body.

Signs, Bill Boards, and Fences.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Assemblyman T. P. Sullivan this morning introduced a bill prohibiting the use of signs or bill boards in cities of the first or second class on buildings when the signs are over six feet in height and on the ground when over ten feet in height. Also a bill prohibiting the use of tight board fences on the front of any lot in the City of New York, and providing that all such fences shall be removed by Aug. 1, 1900.

SHORT LEGISLATIVE SESSION.

Both Houses Pass a Bill Legalizing Primaries Here.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—Mr. Allds, leader of the majority, presided over the deliberations of the House this morning in the absence of Speaker Nixon, who went to his home yesterday at the close of the session.

An emergency message was received from the Governor to permit the passage of Mr. Henry's amendment to the primary law to legalize the primaries for the special election to be held in the Thirty-first New York District to select a successor to Assemblyman Stone, deceased. It was passed without any opposition.

At 10:15 A. M. the Assembly adjourned until Monday at 8:30 P. M.

No clergyman was present in the Senate this morning, and the unusual spectacle was witnessed of the Senate proceeding to business without prayer. There was a very small attendance of the Senators, only sixteen of them being in their seats when the Lieutenant Governor called the session to order. There was therefore no quorum for the transaction of business.

Gov. Roosevelt sent in an emergency message certifying to the necessity for the immediate passage of the Assembly bill providing for a special election in the Thirty-first Assembly District of New York on Jan. 23. The bill was passed.

After a session of less than five minutes the Senate then adjourned until Monday night.

Other Assembly Bills.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—These bills have been introduced in the Assembly:

Mr. FISKE—Extending to veterans of the Spanish war the benefits of the act providing that Boards of Supervisors shall appropriate $85 for the payment of funeral expenses of war veterans of the United States Army and Navy.

Mr. PUTE—Authorizing the Police Commissioners of New York City to rehear and determine the charges against Richard Dillon, a policeman of the second grade, for reinstatement.

Mr. O'CONNELL—Authorizing the use of trading stamps, trading checks, and similar gift enterprises.

Mr. WILSON—To establish the exterior pier head lines adjacent to the shores of the port of New York, in Brooklyn, in accordance with the pier head line approved by the Secretary of War of the United States.

Mr. REMSEN—Requiring street railway and railroad companies of Brooklyn to sprinkle streets upon which their tracks are laid.

Mr. SULLIVAN—His last year's bill providing that the township system shall be introduced in place of the school district, whenever the electors of such school district shall vote to authorize the change.

FIRE DESTROYS WAREHOUSE.

Girl Employes Frightened by Flames—Firemen Overcome and an Engine Damaged—Loss, $25,000.

The five-story brick building 184 South Street, occupied by Darmstadt & Scott as an assorting warehouse for rags and paper, was entirely gutted by fire yesterday afternoon. The twenty-five employes in the place at the time escaped by the stairway without injury.

Sorting of rags and paper is done upon the second floor, the floors above being used for storage purposes. Here fifteen girls and ten men were at work, when one of the girls discovered the rear bin, filled with paper, blazing. The cries of the girls as they rushed down to the street attracted the attention of Policeman Shevlin of the Steamboat Squad, who turned in an alarm. By the time the first engine company arrived the whole upper four floors were ablaze, and it looked as though the warehouse of Theodore Crowell, next door, in which was stored tea in bond worth $800,000, would be set on fire.

The first firemen to arrive turned in two additional alarms, and then attempted to fight the fire from the first floor. But so fierce had the flames become that they were forced to the outside. The arrival of Water Tower No. 1 enabled them to work at the altitude of the fire's origin. The fireboats New Yorker and Van Wyck arrived with the other engines called by the third alarm.

Firemen Joseph Reagan and John Murray of Engine Company No. 9 were overcome by smoke while on the third floor, but were soon able to go back to work.

On the way to the fire, Engine No. 10 met with an accident. In turning from Peck's Slip into Pearl Street the engine wheels were violently wrenched and the axles bent in. The horses started to run, but were stopped.

Chief Croker, who was present in person, estimated the damage to stock and building at $25,000. Theodore Crowell said that he thought the stock of tea stored in his warehouse was damaged by smoke and water to the extent of $5,000 or $10,000.

BIG FIRE IN NAVESINK.

Large Portion of Business Section Burned—The Loss, $20,000.

ATLANTIC HIGHLANDS, N. J., Jan. 12.—A considerable portion of the business section of Navesink Highlands was destroyed by fire this morning. The fire spread from the Post Office Building to the railroad office on the pier, and to the United States Express freight building. The Union News stand and Reiter & Woodley's stores were also consumed.

The volunteer firemen did good service in preventing the flames from communicating to the railroad wharf. The total loss is about $20,000, which is partly covered by insurance.

The origin of the fire is a mystery, but it is generally believed that it was started by incendiaries.

TO JOHN KELLY'S MEMORY.

Free Ward in Hospital Suggested as Fitting Mark of Respect by Well-Known Men.

The memory of "Smiling" John Kelly may be honored by the establishment of a free ward in one of the city hospitals. The suggestion was made at a meeting held at the Hoffman House last night, which was attended by many prominent men, including Corporation Counsel John Whalen, Commissioner Edward Kearney, ex-Judge W. N. Cohen, ex-Police Superintendent Thomas Byrnes, William Pitt Mitchell, Chamberlain Patrick Keenan, ex-Mayor Hugh J. Grant, Dr. Rice, Inspector William McLaughlin, Capt. George W. McClusky, John F. Carroll, David Gideon, Edgar Gibbs Murphy, Philip J. Britt, John E. McDonald, and ex-Sheriff Thomas J. Dunn.

Mr. Whalen presided, and Commissioner Kearney acted as Secretary. Inspector McLaughlin, to whose efforts, in the main, the meeting was due, briefly stated that its object was to provide a suitable mark of respect to the memory of John Kelly.

Remarks were made by ex-Mayor Grant, P. J. Britt, ex-Judge Cohen, William Pitt Mitchell, Dr. Rice, and others, and these disclosed suggestions of a handsome fountain surmounted with a bronze figure in one of the public squares, a monument over the grave in Calvary Cemetery, or a John Kelly ward in one of the hospitals.

Inspector McLaughlin eliminated one of the suggestions by the statement that Mrs. Kelly had told him she proposed to erect a monument over her husband's grave.

The scheme most favored was a ward in one of the hospitals to contain from four to ten beds and to be known as the John Kelly ward. Dr. Rice explained how it could be done, and expressed the opinion that for every $5,000 raised one bed could be endowed.

Ex-Superintendent Byrnes, when called upon, remarked: "I don't think John Kelly would approve of anything of this kind. I knew him well, and it is my opinion that this meeting and its objects would be very distasteful to him."

It was decided finally to appoint a committee to confer with Mrs. Kelly, and these gentlemen were chosen: Hugh J. Grant, John E. McDonald, John F. Carroll, Philip J. Britt, Alfred Henry Lewis, and Thomas J. Dunn.

Chairman Whalen was added to the committee on the motion of Mr. Lewis.

Then ex-Mayor Grant requested that Inspector McLaughlin be substituted as Chairman of the committee. The request was not acceded to, but Mr. McLaughlin was added to the committee and at a subsequent meeting was made its Chairman.

Funeral of Joseph E. Banks.

The funeral services for Joseph E. Banks, who died suddenly of apoplexy in a Third Avenue electric car Wednesday, were held last night at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Park Avenue and Seventy-fourth Street. The Rev. Dr. Hughes, assisted by the Rev. Edward Banks Smith, conducted the church service. About fifty members of the Lafayette Post No. 140, G. A. R., of which Mr. Banks had been a member, were in attendance. At the conclusion of the church service a military service was conducted by members of the post. Mr. Banks was born in this city fifty-eight years ago. As a young man he engaged in the wholesale umbrella business with his father, and later entered the wholesale paper business, in which he continued to the time of his death. He served in the civil war as a private in the Seventh Regiment.

REPORT ON THE PALISADES

State Commissioners Recommend a Large Appropriation.

$250,000 THE SUM SPECIFIED

New York Should Offset, It Is Said, the Gift of New Jersey, Valued at $750,000.

ALBANY, Jan. 12.—The report of the Palisades Commissioners, appointed by legislative enactment to confer with like representatives of New Jersey for the acquisition of the Palisades of the Hudson River by the United States and making an appropriation therefor, has been submitted to the Governor, who has transmitted it to the Legislature. Accompanying the report is a draft of a bill embodying the recommendations as suggested in the report. After a preliminary recital of the fate of the bill in Congress, which the Committee on Military Affairs declined to consider favorably, the report says in part:

"Your Commissioners cannot but feel that their position and arguments in support of the acquisition of the Palisades as a National reservation for military and other purposes have been substantiated and justified by the events of the last two years, and they respectfully request that they be authorized and directed to prosecute their labors toward the end of securing the accomplishment of the object for which they were appointed. In considering the means by which the desired result can best be reached, there is one point which deserves mention.

"While the State of New York has a vastly greater material interest in the preservation of the natural scenery of the Palisades than has the State of New Jersey, the former has, in the legislation enacted, offered to the National Government only an unimportant contribution in its very limited length of water front on the Hudson which lies within the limits of the proposed legislation, while the State of New Jersey has offered to give, free of cost, lands under water and riparian rights valued at upward of $750,000. It seems equitable that New York should tender in money what she lacks in land. It is not too much to say that many millions of dollars' worth of real estate, and also large and varied interests, are dependent upon the manner in which the fifteen miles of the Palisades river front shall be occupied."

In consideration of these facts the commission submits a bill which embodies their recommendations, and which provides that the sum of $250,000 be appropriated by the State and paid to the United States for the purposes of the act upon the acquisition by the United States of America of propery of the value of $250,000 or any part thereof, within the limits of the Palisades National Park as described in the bill pending before Congress.

The commission in closing its report says: "With such an equalization of the burden imposed on the United States, the State of New York and the State of New Jersey, it is deemed not unlikely that these three parties may be brought into harmony in the carrying out of the proposition to preserve and at the same time utilize for the public welfare the Palisades of the Hudson.

"Especial attention is called to the great privileges and advantages in the Palisade region secured to the State of New York and her citizens by the terms of legislation already enacted by the States interested and now proposed by the State of New York in Congress."

The members of the commission include Enoch C. Bell, Waldo G. Morse, and J. J. R. Croes.

VIVISECTION IN SCHOOLS.

President Haines Says Women Teachers Encourage It and that It Engenders Homicidal Mania.

President John P. Haines of the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals delivered his annual address yesterday before the society. After reporting a gratifying falling off in the number of cases calling for prosecution, President Haines gave particular attention to vivisection, against which he has long carried on a vigorous propaganda. He deplored what he termed "This execrable practice," and instanced cases in which vivisection has been carried on before children, girls, and other students. He said:

"I have no language in which to express my utter detestation of such a crime, but I would call your attention to the fact that it was committed in the presence of girls."

The case here referred to, Mr. Hines said, was performed upon a dog by a medical student at the request of the Principal of the High School. In another case, he said, a woman teacher dissected a cat in the presence of children.

Continuing, Mr Hines said: "It has been alleged that the practice of dissection and vivisection is required or encouraged by the State Board of Regents. Here, again, the female element appears, and I would impress you with its dangerous importance. I observe with pain and alarm the special dangers to which women are exposed when they enter upon certain lines of work in which it may be necessary for men to engage, but which are certain to disturb and are only too likely to overthrow or utterly pervert the nobler instincts of woman.

"I have no doubt you will remember that, within a few years past, a hysterical mania appeared here in New York in the form of cat-killing by women, who imagined they were agents of humanity. The humane destruction of homeless and diseased cats is necessary; but it is not the work for women. Women who practice it get fond of it; and women who get fond of cat-killing are on the high way to homicidal mania. What then is to be said of the wickedness of practising vivisection in the presence of female children? What roots of insanity may it not plant in those young brains? Even the dissection of dead animals in the presence of children is utterly unnecessary for the teaching of anything whatever that a child ought to be taught."

Mr. Haines said that, in reply to a request for information, Bishop Doane of the Regents wrote: "I believe that vivisection has never been recommended in any form and that dissection has never been required." Mr. Haines said he thought the Regents should do something more positive than "not to require dissection." They ought, he said, to make it known that vivisection is prohibited by law except in incorporated medical schools.

Mr. Haines called attention to the extension of humane regulations to new American possessions, referring to the prohibition of cock fighting at Manila. Dog fighting and cock fighting, common here before the formation of the society, he said had now become rare.

E. J. LEHMANN'S WILL FILED.

Pioneer Department Store Man of Chicago Leaves About $10,000,000.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—The will of E. J. Lehmann, the pioneer department store man in Chicago, was filed for probate today. He left an estate valued in the instrument at $6,076,000. Of this $3,526,000 is in personal property and $2,550,000 in real estate. The will was written Feb. 22, 1886, four years and three months before Mr. Lehmann was adjudged insane.

The testator made the following bequests: To his brother, Frederick H. Lehmann of Chicago, $10,000; to his sister, Miss Elizabeth Lehmann, an annuity of $600, to be paid her Jan. 1 of each year while she lives.

To Charles Preasant, Bertha Preasant, Matilda Preasant, and Amanda Preasant, nephew and nieces, he left $10,000 each. It was provided that in the event of the death of any one or more of these last-named legatees, the sum bequeathed to such person or persons should go to the survivor or survivors. The three nieces are dead, and the $40,000 will go to Charles Preasant. To his widow, Mrs. Augusta Lehmann, the testator left all his personal property, valued in the will when drawn at $3,526,000 and one-third of his real estate. To his six children was left two-thirds of his real estate.

The will was accepted for probate at the value of the estate at the time of the drawing of the will. It is believed the estate has increased fully $4,000,000 since that time, and is now worth $10,000,000 at least.

Indiana Bank Robbed.

PRINCETON, Ind., Jan. 12.—The McGinnis Bank, in Owensville, was entered last night and the safe blown open, the explosion completely wrecking the building. It is reported that about $15,000 was taken, but the officials refuse to give any information. The burglars escaped on a handcar.

"TANNHAUSER" AT THE OPERA.

Wagner's Drama Performed at the Metropolitan Last Night.

Wagner's "Tannhäuser" was performed at the Metropolitan Opera House last night. The audience was a large one, and its applause was generous and fairly earned. The performance was admirable in its earnestness and the general conviction which it conveyed, and though it was not without its shortcomings, it may be set down as one of the successful achievements of the season. The most serious shortcomings were of a minor kind. For example, Mr. Paur, who conducted generally with knowledge and authority, took the tempo of the march in the second act at the pace against which Dr. von Bülow was wont to rail when he declared that it was not a military march. Perhaps some persons were puzzled by the fact that the complete overture was made, and then the curtain went up on the bacchanale of the Parisian version. This was a somewhat cheap concession to a demand for an orchestral effect, but it may be pardoned. The French horns on the stage in the first act had troubles, but this, too, is a familiar failure.

The work of the principal singers was excellent. There is a temptation to write a long essay on Mr. Ernest van Dyck's interpretation of the rôle of Tannhäuser, and this temptation was intensified by his work last night. He has never before sung here with such good quality of voice or such correct intonation. To say this is to indicate that the most objectionable features of his work were almost obliterated, and its merits brought forward more conspicuously than ever before. These are merits of a high and beautiful kind, and they make this impersonation one of the most striking, one of the most moving on the operatic stage today. It is no injustice to others to say that Mr. van Dyck is the best actor in the lyric field at present. In grace, elegance, and significance of action, pose, and gesture, he is unequaled among singers. Combined with this are an intellectuality of conception, a subtle variety of detail in declamation, and a most magnetic personality. When Mr. van Dyck does not distract attention from these qualities of his work by bad singing, he makes a profound impression, and last night he was so nobly eloquent, so touchingly pathetic, that it was not hard to forgive his vocal shortcomings, reduced, as they were, to a minimum.

Happily associated with the impersonation of the title rôle were those of Venus by Mme. Nordica, Elizabeth by Mme. Gadski, Wolfram by Mr. Van Rooy, and the Landgrave by M. Plançon. Mme. Nordica's Venus is one of her most trustworthy performances. In the Parisian version she has an opportunity to make more of the part than in the original draft of the opera. The fact that the Parisian elaboration was an incongruity of styles, owing to the additions having been made in Wagner's "Tristan" period, may always be accepted with equanimity when its employment brings to the delectation of the audience Mme. Nordica's splendid delivery of the music and her plastic dignity of movement. She was in fine voice last night, and did her work, as she always does, with a wholesouled devotion to the composer.

Mme. Gadski's Elizabeth was tender, womanly and winning. Her voice never sounded better, and her singing never had a more artistic finish. Her scene with Tannhäuser in the second act was beautifully sung, and she made her usual effect with the prayer in the third act. Mr. Van Rooy's Wolfram is already familiar to this public, and its depth of feeling has been much praised. One naturally wishes at times that he would restrain the volume of his tone, which is occasionally too big for the music and threatens to transform the gentle von Eschenbach into a thundering Wotan. But these outbursts are infrequent, and may be forgiven for the sake of the general beauty and justice of the interpretation.

M. Plançon sang the music of the Landgrave with noble senority of voice and dignity of style, and his enunciation of the German text was, as it has been before, a source of wonder to those who know his little acquaintance with the Teutonic tongue. A word of commendation is due Mlle. Olitzka for her tuneful singing of the Shepherd's music. It was a pity that the English horn obbligato was so timid in tone. The chorus did as well with its music as it usually does. Wagner must shoulder some of the blame for choral imperfections in "Tannhäuser." He has set the choristers some formidable tasks in the matter of intonation.

This afternoon "Carmen" will be given, and M. Saleza, it is announced, is quite well and will positively appear as Don José.

"Three Little Lambs" to Tour.

Manager Edwin Knowles of the Fifth Avenue Theatre announces that the "Three Little Lambs," his present attraction, will terminate its engagement on Feb. 24, after which the play will go on an extensive tour of the country. Mme. Modjeska, with her new romantic play, "Marie Antoinette," will be the succeeding attraction.

"Broadway to Tokio" Held Back.

It has been decided to postpone the production of "Broadway to Tokio" from next Monday night to Saturday night, Jan. 20. While the principals are all thoroughly familiar with their respective parts, Manager H. B. Sire does not deem it wise to present the piece until the chorus and ballet are thoroughly rehearsed, which he thinks the additional time will give them opportunities for.

"Il Trovatore" at the Germania.

A short operatic season will be inaugurated on Monday evening at the Germania Theatre at popular prices. On this occasion M. Julius Perotti, the tenor, and Mme. Moran Olden will make their appearance in Verdi's opera "Il Trovatore," which will be given in German. This opera will be repeated on Wednesday and Friday evenings.

An Accident to E. G. Gilmore.

E. G. Gilmore, one of the proprietors and managers of the Academy of Music, when leaving his home, 78 Irving Place, last Wednesday, slipped on the wooden covering of his stairway, causing a severe injury to his ankle, which has confined him to his home ever since. His condition yesterday was somewhat improved, and he hopes to be able to be out the early part of next week.

An Illustrated Lecture on Napoleon.

G. P. Serviss will deliver his second illustrated lecture in the course of six at the Berkeley Lyceum, West Forty-fourth Street, to-day at 11 A. M. His subject will be "Napoleon Bonaparte: From Corsica to St. Helena."

PHYSICIAN ACCUSED OF MURDER.

Dr. William T. Jones of Pine Bush Ordered Under Arrest.

MIDDLETOWN, Jan. 12.—Dr. William T. Jones of Pine Bush has been held on a warrant issued by Coroner Decker, charged with the killing of Charles Lewis, his colored driver and cook. He will be brought to this city for examination to-morrow. Dr. Jones was formerly Assistant Surgeon in the United States Navy, and is a native of Kentucky.

The death of Lewis, who was shot yesterday, was at first reported as a suicide, but the Coroner's inquest revealed circumstantial evidence against Dr. Jones so pronounced that the Coroner decided to hold him. Dr. Jones has been practicing at Pine Bush two years. The shooting occurred in the kitchen.

No Armenian Massacre Contemplated.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Regarding the recent reports of a contemplated massacre of Armenian Christians at the vilayet of Harpoot, the State Department has received from the United States Minister at Constantinople information that no such massacre was threatened. Conditions at Harpoot are reasonably pacific, and no cause exists for alarm on the part of the Christians. The United States Legation has been assured by the Sultan that the Christians of Harpoot have given no cause for any action on the part of the authorities.

Insane Negro Kills a Preacher.

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 12.—An insane negro named Rix, living in Southampton County, to-day shot and instantly killed Mills Rayford, a Quaker preacher, and slightly wounded Thomas Hall and George Bradshaw, farmers. The shooting was done without apparent provocation. A posse was organized and pursued Rix. He was overtaken, but resisted arrest, firing upon his pursuers, wounding one or two before he fell, pierced by several bullets. He lived only a few minutes.

Obstructed the Tracks for Fun.

MINEOLA, L. I., Jan. 12.—Detective Sarvis of the Long Island Railroad has arrested two eleven-year-old boys, for trying to wreck the Oyster Bay express on Wednesday evening. The boys are Morris Smith, colored, and James Gilmartin, white. Smith made a clean breast of the affair, and said he and Gilmartin put the iron on the tracks for fun, just to see it fly when the locomotive struck it.

WANAMAKER'S WANAMAKER'S

Men's Collars, 50c a Dozen

LINEN, four-ply, wtth hand-made buttonholes; or cotton, three-ply—they need not have as many thicknesses of fabric as the linen.

This isn't a mixture, trusting to you to choose the cheap ones. It's a trade movement in which certain Troy operators join.

We took all the linen collars and all the cotton collars we could get at the reduced price—a price made possible by large general ordering and giving the makers time to make the goods as stop-gap orders.

Choose either linen or cotton—there are all the current shapes to pick from.

The collars are worth $1 and $1.50 a dozen. The price is 50c.

And cuffs—imported ones—a thousand dozen pairs—at just half present value. 2 pairs for 25c.

Six hundred Suspenders, some with cantab ends, at 25c a pair—which is about half price.

Wanamaker's is very decidedly a men's store—a store appealing to the hurried business man who wants to buy quickly and safely, and appealing as strongly to the very careful dresser who knows that we, with nearly thirty men abroad each year style-studying, must easily lead in late capers. Will you class this as a "swell" store or as the carefulest of stores? It is both.

Closing Out Wall Papers
THE ANNUAL SALE

This is an important once-a-year event in this store. Important in that superior wall papers—unique, beautiful and exclusive—are offered in each recurring sale at prices half or less than half the regular values. It's a closing out of accumulations—single-room quantities and lines that are somewhat broken. The best productions of England, France and Germany, together with America's finer goods, enter into this sale. All desirable—all from our own stock.

150 styles at 5c to 10c a roll, that were 10c to 20c.
209 styles at 8c to 25c a roll, that were 15c to 50c.
166 styles of gold papers at 10c to 25c a roll, that were 20c to 75c.
85 styles of fine papers, at 20c to 50c a roll, that were 35c to $1.
130 styles of English and French papers, at 12½c to 50c a roll; were 25c to $1.25.
Some elegant relief papers, at 75c to $1.25 a roll; were $1.25 to $2.
And ingrains, silk fabrics and dyed burlaps, in newest shades.

Please bring measurements of rooms—height from base-board to ceiling, number of windows and doors and their width, length and width of room.

Third floor, Fourth avenue.

Trimmed Hats Half price! which means quite pretty hats reduced to $3, and others at prices up to $20—still half price. We made too many—that's clear, and some of the Paris hats are left as well. Three hundred costumes can be matched from this stock of hats.

Millinery Salon, Second floor, Broadway.

Elderdown Sacques These are all in good solid colors. The making and finish all that can be desired—no raw seams. Collar and sleeves are trimmed with crocheted zephyr; ribbon at neck. The elderdown is of the same quality as that used in $1 garments, yet these sacques are but 50c.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Women's Bags, Card-Cases and Pocket-books The newest, the handsomest leather goods that could be found. And we search diligently, unceasingly. We bring the latest fancies from Europe, and show alongside the American copies and originations. Elegant, and necessarily expensive, many of them. But a lot of really pretty, stylish articles are to be had at little cost.

Long narrow pocket-books, in various new shapes. Some with invisible fasteners, others with button fasteners of sterling silver. Some severely plain—others with sterling ornamentations. $1.50 to $4.
Imported card-cases, long and narrow, of colored alligator or levant, and other fancy leathers.
Chatelaine bags, in black lizard, seal and velvet, sterling frames and chains. $15 to $30. Small sizes, at $4.75 and $6.25.

Broadway.

Thank a Pleasant Yesterday

for leaving any of the Kersey Overcoats for those who couldn't get here. Come to-day—or miss them!

Men's $15 to $20 Kersey Overcoats at $12 and $13.50

Blue or black; all full lined with all-wool fabric, and those at $13.50 have satin shoulder linings.

The garments are entirely new and the fabric they're made of is worth to-day a full third more than we had to pay for this.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Women's Jackets, $10

They are the $15, $18 and $20 ones of our own stock and from one of the big commercial tailors. A mere handful, though. Kersey, cheviot and covert cloth—colors and black. Satin or silk-serge linings; a few garments of double-face cloth, widely faced with satin and with satin sleeve linings.

Second floor, Broadway.

Men's, Women's and Children's Hosiery This of little priced sorts—exceptionally little priced. For if we were to buy the same qualities to-day we would have to pay more than we're now asking of you. And these are good kinds of hosiery—thoroughly good, though the prices be almost absurdly low:

For Men—3 pairs, 50c—Of fast black, tan or gray cotton, medium weight, regular made. Considered good value at 25c pair.
For women—25c a pair—Richelieu ribbed fast black lisle thread stockings; elastic, durable; ribbed through to toes. Cannot be duplicated in the market to-day under 38c a pair.
For Children—12½c a pair—Narrow ribbed, fast black cotton; strong and serviceable; full in size, and elastic. Would be low at 20c.

Broadway.

Rubber Toilet Goods There's always a very complete line here of the various articles of rubber required for the sick room, nursery and bathroom. They're always moderately priced, too, as this partial list shows:

An excellent 2-qt. water bottle for 50c; some all rubber at 85c; 3-qt. size at $1. Others, cloth lined, 1 to 4 qts., at $1 to $1.30. Some with covering of flannel, 1 to 3 qts., at $1.10 to $1.40.
Various styles and qualities of syringes at prices beginning at 25c; another sort at 50c; others, packed up conveniently in neat cases, at $1.50 and $1.75.
And sheeting—some for the nursery of best quality, at 55c a yard for the ¾-yd. width; 70c for the 1-yd. width; 90c for the 1¼-yd. width, and $1.10 for that 1½ yds. wide.

Broadway.

The Women's Waists at $1 Hard to conjure more attractiveness and goodness into a garment for one dollar than these show. They are of cotton, a good strong cotton, so treated, by a new process, that it almost passes for silk. The waists are prettily made, and made to fit. Full front, with clusters of plaits at intervals across the bust; yoke back also plaited. All the desirable colors and black. $1.

Fifth floor.

Enameled Ware More of the enameled-ware kitchen utensils at half price. It takes time and good management to distribute several hundred thousand pieces of such goods in a way entirely comfortable to you. The lots ready to-day are particularly good. "Seconds," but no hurts that hurt,

Tea and Coffee Pots—1 qt., 21c; 1½ qts., 24c; 2 qts., 28c; 3 qts., 31c; 4 qts., 35c; 5 qts., 39c.
Pudding Pans, ½ qt., 8c; 1 qt., 9c; 2 qts., 12c; 3 qts., 13c; 4 qts., 15c; 5 qts., 16c.
Milk Pans—2 qts., 10c; 3 qts., 11c; 4 qts., 13c; 5 qts., 14c; 6 qts., 15c.
Lipped Stewing Kettles—2 qts., 13c; 2½ qts., 15c; 4 qts., 19c; 5 qts., 21c; 6 qts., 23c; 7½ qts., 28c; 10 qts., 35c.
Cook Pots—9 qts., 38c; 18 qts, 80c.
Cake Pans—15c to 20c.
Dish Pans—8 qts., 28c; 10 qts., 33c; 14 qts., 38c; 17 qts., 40c; 21 qts., 48c.
Covered Saucepans—2 qts., 18c.
Pie Plates—8 in., 6c; 9 in., 7c; 10 in., 9c,

Shoes---A Clearance

Can't be a doubt of it—you have brought to the Wanamaker Stores the largest retail shoe business in America—we could honestly say largest in the world, but that wouldn't mean any more.

Well, there is dross when lead is worked; there are scraps when clothes are made, and there come to be all sorts of odds and ends in a shoe store. Once or twice a year we clear them out. Some of the shoes may show scuff or scratches, some of the pairs may really not be matches, but for all that, they are good quality, good wearing shoes.

Ready this morning—nearly twelve hundred pairs of

MOLINEUX MURDER TRIAL

Mr. Osborne Introduces Three More Barnet Letters.

STATE'S EVIDENCE NEARLY IN

Reported No Defense Will Be Set Up—Dr. Witthaus Declares Poison Killed Mrs. Adams and Barnet.

The ninth week of the trial of Roland B. Molineux for the murder of Katherine J. Adams closed yesterday, with the case for the prosecution still unpresented. It will take three or four days, and perhaps the whole of next week, to get in the testimony against the prisoner.

Mr. Weeks asked Mr. Osborne, the prosecuting attorney, at the close of the session, when he expected to get through. Mr. Osborne was to some extent non-committal, but he told the counsel for the defense that he could summon his first witnesses for Thursday, as by that time the State expected to announce to the court that it rested its case.

Although Mr. Weeks had persistently stuck to his resolution not to make known in advance any of his case or what he expects to do, it is thought that if he puts up any defense at all it will take him quite as long to present his side as it has taken the prosecution to present theirs. The month of February therefore would be waning before the case finally gets to the jury

There was a persistent rumor about the Court House yesterday, however, that Mr. Weeks would let the case go to the jury without putting up a defense, in fact that he would tell the jurors that Molineux, being presumed to be innocent until the prosecution had proved him guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, was not called on to defend himself in the face of his belief that the prosecution had failed to meet the law's requirements, and that Molineux was not obliged to prove his innocence. Mr. Weeks was asked about this rumor. He smiled and said that only time would show what he intended to do.

SAYS BOTH DIED FROM POISON.

Dr. Witthaus, the analytical chemist, who examined the viscera of Mrs. Adams and of H. C. Barnet, swore yesterday that both of these persons had died from poisoning by mercuric cyanide. As is usual with every answer Dr. Witthaus has so far made, he qualified even this one by saying that they had died of this form of poisoning "in the absence of violent intercurrent causes of death."

Mr. Weeks during his entire cross-examination was unable to extract from the witness one categorical answer to even the simplest question. A count was kept of every question put to the expert on cross-examination, and to not one did he answer "yes" or "no." His qualifications and explanations, couched as they always were in ten syllable words, always drew forth fresh questions to combat the qualifications, and made the examination very long drawn out and technical.

Dr. Witthaus's persistent habit of talking into his beard and dropping his voice at the end of his sentences, making his speech almost unintelligible even to the stenographer seated a few feet from him, moved the Recorder yesterday to admonish him that he would have to talk more slowly and more plainly. Col. Beard complained it was impossible to get the technical terms correctly unless the witness showed some consideration.

Dr. Witthaus put on a bored air when the Recorder spoke to him, and never once changing his crouching position in the witness chair, talked on in the same old way. He also got even with the complaining stenographer by interlarding his sentences with scraps of French, but here he reckoned without his host, for Col. Beard takes French quite as readily as he does English.

THREE MORE BARNET LETTERS.

What was expected to be something of a sensation, but which may prove a boomerang, was introduced in the case by Mr. Osborne, when he added to the letters signed "Barnet" to patent medicine firms three letters, two of which had been unearthed some months ago by newspapers and by them reproduced.

The first of these is to a Cincinnati firm, and reads:

"Gentlemen:
"Please send five days' treatment, and greatly oblige, yours truly,
"H. C. BARNET.
"Box 217, 257 West 42d St."

Another is directed to another patent medicine firm, and reads:

"Gentlemen:
"Please send catalogue and greatly oblige,
"H. C. BARNET.
"Box 217, 257 West Forty-second Street."

The third reads:

"Please send book on No-to-bac and greatly oblige,
"Yours truly,
"H. C. BARNET.
"Box 217, 257 West Forty-second Street."

Whoever the person is who was writing to these patent medicine firms, it appears that for a long period he had time to do little else than write letters for remedies. From the letters in evidence he appears to have written for almost every remedy advertised, and seems to have developed a mania for the subject. Mr. Osborne succeeded in getting in the letters after the usual opposition on the part of Mr. Weeks, and then Mr. Osborne put Handwriting Expert Kinsley on the stand to prove that in his opinion these letters were also written by Molineux.

PECULIARITY IN TWO OF THEM.

The first letter is the exact counterpart of one already in evidence and signed H. Cornish, with the exception of one word. In the Cornish letter the wording is. "Please send five days' trial." When these letters were passed around after having been admitted in evidence a striking peculiarity was observed in the first two.

In the first one the words "greatly oblige" appear in several places to be written over, and in the second the word "catalogue" and the word "greatly" are written in a peculiar wavering hand, the letter "g" in both having the top of the loop plainly added after the word was written. Mr. Carvalho, the expert for the defense, was asked about these peculiarities after the session.

"Those g's," he said, "kept me at work for two days. I had a theory at first in regard to them, but I afterward abandoned it. The word 'catalogue' is plainly peculiar."

"Do not these words show evidence of having been traced?" he was asked.

Mr. Carvalho looked surprised, and then smiling, he said: "It might be better not to answer that question just at this time, but from the fact that Kinsley said he had only lately seen those letters he might have been more careful about giving an opinion as to their authorship."

The case went back to Molineux's grandmother yesterday and the prosecution succeeded after much opposition in getting in the original death certificate of Harriet T. Clark, the defendant's maternal grandmother, who died in East Hartford, Conn., on March 20, 1865. The cause of death in this certificate was given as "phthisis."

PHTHISIS IN MOLINEUX FAMILY.

The reason for its submission in evidence was as follows: Mr. Osborne has contended all along that in a diagnosis blank sent to a patent medicine company signed "H. C. Barnet," and which the prosecution has tried to establish through its experts was written by Molineux, the writer gave a more or less accurate description of himself and in some instances of his family. For instance, the age, thirty-one years, was said by Mr. Osborne to fit Molineux.

The fact that the writer said he was contemplating matrimony at that time and measured 37 inches around the chest and 32 inches around the waist was also contended to fit Molineux. Another question in the blank is "Has there ever been any scrofula or consumption in your family?" and the question is answered by the person underscoring the word "consumption" and writing after the question the words "the latter."

Then to further prove that the description fits the defendant, Mr. Osborne had the death certificate of Molineux's maternal grandmother put in evidence to show that she died of phthisis. He said that it was reasonably certain that Molineux knew of this fact, and that in answering the questions on the blank he had that fact in mind.

When the case closed on Thursday night Dr. Witthaus had been asked to give his analysis of the contents of the glass from which it is alleged that Mrs. Adams drank the poison. There was a wordy war over this, Mr. Weeks claiming that it had not been proved that the glass sought to be put in evidence was the one from which Mrs. Adams had drunk, and that there was nothing to prove that the glass had been at all times in Mrs. Rogers's possession up to the time that she delivered it to the police.

The Recorder decided that he wanted to hear further evidence on this point before he admitted the glass and spoon in evidence, and so had Mrs. Rogers summoned to court yesterday. When the session opened Harry Cornish was called to the stand. The Recorder conducted his examination.

RECORDER EXAMINES CORNISH.

"Did you see Mrs. Adams drink out of the glass?" asked the Recorder.

"I did."

"Was the spoon in it at the time?"

"That I cannot say."

"But there was a spoon in it afterward?"

"There was."

"Did she drink out of the glass?"

"She drank out of it and then put it back on the table. I drank a little and also put it on the table. Later it was locked up in the china closet."

"Was there anything left in the glass?"

"There was."

"How long after Dec. 28 did you see it?"

"On the following Sunday."

"And there was something in it then?"

"There was."

"Was there nobody in the room when Mrs. Adams and you drank from the glass?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"Nobody."

"Were there other glasses on the table?"

"There may have been."

"And did they contain liquid?"

"I don't know."

An objection to Mr. Weeks's question as to whether Cornish had heard Dr. Hitchcock swear that there was another glass of liquid on the table was sustained, as were also objections to questions by Mr. Weeks to Cornish asking again how he was dressed on the day in question. The Recorder ruled that questions could be asked only concerning the glass, and Mrs. Rogers was called to the stand.

MRS. ROGERS QUESTIONED.

"When did you first see this glass?" asked the Recorder.

"When I returned from the bathroom."

"Where was it then?"

"On the table."

"Was your mother in the room?"

"She was."

"What did you do with the glass?"

"After my mother died I placed it on the sideboard and then locked it up in the china closet."

"Are you prepared to swear positively that the glass you locked in the closet was the one from which your mother drank and was the same one that you saw on the table?"

"I am positive."

Mrs. Rogers said that the glass was kept locked up until she gave it to Detective Carey, and she had no reason to believe that it had been disturbed in the meantime.

Dr. Witthaus handed her the glass and spoon, and she said that to the best of her knowledge it was the one in question. In answer to Mr. Weeks, the witness said that only Cornish had had access to the rooms during the funeral of Mrs. Adams, and that he had no key to the china closet.

"Do you remember Mr. Yocum looking at the glass?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"Yes."

"When was that?"

"Before it was put away."

Mrs. Rogers then left the stand, and Herman J. Witte, a lawyer and once Assistant Chief of Police of Cincinnati, was called. He said he had been asked by Capt. McClusky in January, 1899, to get a letter from a firm in that city. He then identified the first of the letters given above as the one he had received, and which he had sent to Capt. McClusky. The envelope, postmarked May 31, 1898, 5 P. M., was also put in evidence.

DR. WITTHAUS AGAIN CALLED.

Dr. Witthaus then came back to the stand and the Recorder decided to allow the glass and spoon in evidence. The witness produced his leather case again and showed the jury the result of his analyses. He said the weight of solids in the glass and that adhering to the spoon was 33.28 grains, and that the analysis of one portion showed 74 per cent. of metallic mercury and 93.37 per cent. mercuric cyanide.

"From these results can there be any doubt that there was cyanide of mercury in the glass?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"None whatever," was the reply.

Dr. Witthaus then told of his examinations of the brain, liver, kidneys, stomach, and intestines of the dead woman. The stomach tissues, he said, weighed five ounces and four drams, and by one method he found in these tissues .254 grains of mercuric cyanide. The entire amount of the poison in the stomach was 3.78 grains.

"Can you tell from that what amount was taken by the person?" asked Foreman Martin.

"Only that a much larger dose must have been taken."

"Did you find enough in the body to kill a person?"

"I did."

"How much do you estimate was taken?"

"I am certain that over twenty grains were taken. Further than that I do not care to go. There was only a small quantity in the stomach, but this had a decided odor of peach kernels, showing the presence of hydrocyanic acid."

Dr. Witthaus then gave the results of his analyses of the kidneys, brain, and liver, in each of which he found smaller quantities of the mercury and of the mercuric cyanide. He said he was convinced the poison had been taken into the system through the mouth and stomach.

NO DOUBT POISON KILLED.

"Now, how much did you find in the body in all?" asked Mr. Osborne.

"A little over twelve grains."

"You also found mercury in Barnet's brain?"

"I do."

"And hydrocyanic acid in the liver?"

"I did."

"Now, what was the cause of the death of Mrs. Adams?"

"Poisoning by cyanide of mercury."

"You can say that from your analysis of the body?"

"I can."

"And there is no doubt of it?"

"None whatever."

"I will qualify my answer," said Dr. Witthaus, as Mr. Weeks rose to cross-examine, "by stating that I suppose a violent death did not intervene before the poison had a chance to work. She may have fallen down stairs."

"Or been blown up by dynamite," put in Mr. Osborne.

"Exactly," said the witness.

Dr. Witthaus said in answer to a question by Mr. Weeks that he had found in one case of poisoning by mercuric cyanide where ten grains had been taken death had intervened in from seven to nine days. He said he had not considered in his answer any of the woman's symptoms and even went so far as to say that the statements in his own book on poisoning from which Mr. Weeks read were not entirely succinct. He said that the drug in question had more of a metallic than a bitter taste.

"Can you from the contents of the glass tell us how much of the poison was contained in a good-sized swallow?" asked Mr. Weeks.

DRAMS AND TEASPOONFULS.

Dr. Witthaus said he did not know how much a good-sized swallow was. He was asked how much liquid remained in the glass when he received it.

"Fourteen cubic centimeters," was the reply.

"How many teaspoonfuls is that?"

"About four drams."

"And is that not four teaspoonfuls?"

"Yes."

"Well, why couldn't you say that at first?" said Mr. Weeks.

Mr. Weeks here began to read from Dr. Witthaus's testimony before the Coroner's jury. He had not proceeded far when the Recorder ordered him to stop. "You are continually trying," said the Court, "to get evidence in here that was taken before a Magistrate or Coroner and not in a court of record. That is very reprehensible. This jury will try this case on what happens here and not on what happened somewhere else."

"But the witness was under oath there," said Mr. Weeks. "We have a right to refresh his memory or to contradict him."

"Well, it has gone far enough," said the Court.

"We except to your Honor's rulings and remarks," returned Mr. Weeks.

"Have you any way of estimating the quantity of mercuric cyanide in the glass when you got it?" he continued, turning to the witness.

"A very small quantity of water was sufficient to dissolve it," was the reply.

"I want an answer to my question," demanded Mr. Weeks.

Dr. Witthaus then gave the figures, but said he could not tell absolutely what were the cubic contents of the portions of the poison bottle's contents that he had taken out for purposes of analysis.

PRISONER'S GRANDMOTHER'S DEATH.

At the opening of the afternoon session Mr. Osborne, with the consent of the Court, introduced as a witness Joseph Goodwin, who said he had been Town Clerk of West Hartford for twenty-five years and had known the grandmother of Molineux. She had married George T. Clark, he said, and their daughter, Harriet D. Clark, was the defendant's mother.

The death certificate of Mrs. Clark was then introduced in evidence, showing that she had died of phthisis on March 20, 1865, at the age of fifty years. Mr. Osborne then sought to put on the stand H. H. Jackson, the undertaker who had buried Barnet, but the Court would not permit it.

When Dr. Witthaus again took the stand he said, in answer to a question by Mr. Weeks, that he had assumed that Barnet had taken a quantity of the contents of the box of Kutnow powder and cyanide of mercury, and that this assumed fact had helped him to come to the conclusion that Barnet died of poisoning by mercuric cyanide.

"Do you know that he took a part of the contents of the box from your own knowledge?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"Not from my own knowledge, but I inferred—"

"You have no right to either infer or assume anything," thundered Mr. Weeks.

"But I did," returned the witness.

The witness was asked how he accounted for the difference in time that it took to kill Barnet and Mrs. Adams, if he maintained that both died from the same poison. He said that mercuric cyanide was poisonous in two ways and by the liberation of two articles. So long, he said, as the poison was combined as mercuric cyanide it acted as a pure mercurial poison, whereas when the cyanogen was liberated it acted as a very much more active poison, and death was caused by hydrocyanic acid poisoning.

The mercurials, he said, acted slowly, and there was no giving off of free cyanogen in the combination with Kutnow powder. In the bromo-seltzer, however, he maintained, there was a combination of the poison with potassium bromide and tartaric acid, forming free hydrobromic acid, and this, decomposing the mercuric cyanide, gave off free hydrocyanic acid.

DEADLY HYDROCYANIC ACID.

"How much hydrocyanic acid will cause death?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"It has been estimated that three-fourths of a grain will do it."

"What per cent. of hydrocyanic acid is there in a grain of mercuric cyanide?"

"Well, in 251.72 grains of the cyanide I found 51.02 of the acid."

"That means about a fifth, does it not?"

"About."

"It would have been just as easy to say that in the first place, would it not?" said Mr. Weeks, nettled.

Mr. Weeks asked the witness if he did not think it strange that if hydrocyanic acid had caused death, the attending physician and others in attendance on the victim had not smelled it, and Dr. Witthaus said that this might be strange and it might not. He talked at great length about a case in Philadelphia.

"Now in that case, when you testified for the defense, did you not say that there was grave doubt that the person had been killed by hydrocyanic acid because there was an absence of any odor?"

"I did."

"Was it a reason?"

"A very strong one."

"Do you not maintain that the jaw is generally fixed and rigid?"

"It is usually."

"Was it so in this case?"

"I understood Dr. Hitchcock to say that he had to pry the jaw open to administer whisky."

"Well, then, you understood wrong." He said he had to tie the jaw up after it dropped. Does Prussian blue contain mercury?"

"It does not."

"How much of cyanogen is there contained in the minute quantity of Prussian blue that you found in Barnet's body?"

"About 30 per cent," said the witness after a long calculation.

MERCURY AS A MEDICINE.

"Mercury taken as a medicine, like calomel, may remain in the body for a long time after death, may it not?"

"It may. I don't think, however, that enough calomel is absorbed to show any distinct traces. Taken in other forms it may remain in the body for six months."

"Assuming that H. C. Barnet took a dose from the bottle given to you by Detective Carey," said Mr. Osborne on redirect, "and assuming that from taking the powder that you analyzed he was taken with violent vomiting, purging due to mercury, mercurial stomatitis of the mouth, inflammation of the throat, an examination of the tissue of which showed no bacteria of diphtheria, and assuming that there was found in the body after death the quantity of cyanogen and mercury you mentioned, and assuming that several days after taking the powder Barnet died, from that statement of fact can you say what caused his death?"

"I can."

"What caused it?"

"Poisoning by mercuric cyanide in the absence of violent intercurrent causes of death."

"Would you put your opinion against that of his physician, who, after making cultures from his throat, gave the opinion that he died from diphtheria?" asked Mr. Weeks.

"I would."

Mr. Kinsley was then called to the stand and gave it as his opinion that the letters given above as signed by Barnet, asking for remedies and books, were written by Molineux. There was no cross-examination, and court then adjourned until Monday morning.

INTEREST IN KAISER'S FATE.

Money for Dog and Man Confined in Hudson County Jail.

Lester Livermore and his dog Kaiser, who refused to be separated, and were therefore sentenced as vagrants by Recorder Stanton last Friday, have been spending their time since then in the corridor of the top floor of the Hudson County (N. J.) Jail. Kaiser has made friends with the inmates of that section of the jail, and his master has improved very much in appearance. They are not confined to their cell during the day, but are allowed the use of the corridor. In fact, the only restraint laid upon them is at meal times, when all the prisoners are locked up so as to keep the place clean.

Livermore's story has aroused a great deal of sympathy, not so much on his account as for the dog. The authorities have received numerous letters asking about the fate of Kaiser, and have also received sums of money for the man. Through THE NEW YORK TIMES the sum of $10 has been received, $5 of which came from "Fedelta" and the remaining $5 from a lady in Detroit who does not desire her name used. Recorder Stanton received $1, and $3 has been received from another source. This money is being held for Livermore until he is liberated. Recorder Stanton has said that he will discharge him whenever he wishes to leave or will resentence him to another term when his present one expires.

When Livermore arrived at the jail and was taken to his cell, he sat down on the cot and remarked to his friend, who looks very much like a small edition of a coach dog: "Well, Kaiser, it's warm here, anyway, and we'll get something to eat, too."

TAX ON PULLMAN ESTATE.

Appellate Division Decision in the Matter of the Appraisal of the Property in This State.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court handed down yesterday a decision in the matter of the appraisal of the property of George M. Pullman within this State for the purpose of determining the amount of the transfer tax to be paid to the Controller of this city for the benefit of the State Treasury. Except upon one point it sustains the decision of Surrogate Fitzgerald, who held that the tax should be paid on $744,191.66.

Shortly after Mr. Pullman's death the Controller applied for an appraisement of the property left by him in this State. An appraiser was appointed, who found personal property of the Pullman estate in the State of New York valued at about $774,000. He also found that Mr. Pullman had been indebted in this State to the amount of about $800,000, which was secured by pledges of bonds and stocks of various corporations of greater value than the amount of the indebtedness. The appraiser found that the value of the property subject to the transfer tax was $744,191.66, from which should be deducted $58,430, representing bonds and stocks of New York corporations pledged as collateral. The Surrogate held that this property also was taxable, and fixed the amount on which the tax should be paid at the gross sum reported by the appraiser.

An appeal was taken by Howard Mansfield, counsel for Helen F. West and Emma P. Fluhrer, Mr. Pullman's sisters, and Florence Lowden and Harriet Carolan, his daughters. The grounds of the appeal were:

First—That inasmuch as the decedent at the time of his death was indebted to local creditors to an amount greater than the ascertained market value of the local assets, there was no property of the decedent within the State of New York subject to a transfer tax under the act.

Second—That under the laws and policy of the State of New York all of the local assets of the decedent were absolutely subject to and primarily liable for the payment of the indebtedness to local creditors to the entire extent of such property.

Third—That the local assets to the amount of $58,430 specifically pledged as collateral security for the payment of the indebtedness to local creditors were liable to be entirely used for the purposes of such payment.

The appeal was argued by Mr. Mansfield for the appellants and James M. Hunt for the Controller. Justice Patterson, writing the opinion of the court, in which Justices O'Brien, Ingraham, and McLaughlin concur, sustains the ruling of the Surrogate except as to the sum of $58,430, represented by securities of New York corporations pledged for indebtedness, which he holds not to be taxable. He refers to the fact that no ancillary administrator was appointed in this State, and holds that the debts owed by Mr. Pullman here constituted a general indebtedness of the estate, payable by the Illinois executors, and that in the event of their failure to pay the creditors were bound to resort to the securities held by them as collateral, which were ample for the purpose.

Presiding Justice Van Brunt writes a dissenting opinion, in which he holds that the question is to be considered as though ancillary testamentary letters had been taken out. The administrator in such case, he says, would apply the property in this State to the payment of debts and would first select taxable securities for that purpose.

Messrs. Howe & Mansfield, the attorneys, declined to discuss the decision yesterday, but it is understood that appeals will be taken by both sides to the Court of Appeals.

SOUGHT DEATH BY STARVATION

Two Women in Connecticut Victims of a Strange Hallucination.

SOUTH MANCHESTER, Conn., Jan. 12.—The authorities to-day investigated a report that Mrs Augusta Moffett, aged fifty-five, and her daughter, Bertha, aged 30, were endeavoring to starve themselves to death. Selectmen C. G. Watkins and Henry Barrows visited the house occupied by the two women. They found the women in bed, dressed. The officers say the women appeared to be mentally unbalanced. There was neither foor nor fuel in the house.

Mrs. Moffett and her daughter came to Manchester from Providence three months ago. The daughter secured employment in the silk mills here, but was soon seized with the hallucination that persons from Providence were following and annoying her. Finally she could not be induced to le

LIGHT ON THE CLARK CASE

More Witnesses Testify in the Alleged Montana Bribery.

PAYMENT OF MONEY DESCRIBED

First Division in the Committee Over Admitting Testimony Shows Only Two Senators Favor Mr. Clark.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections began its session in the Clark case to-day with a request from the prosecution to have the books of the Thomas Cruse Savings Bank, at Helena, Mon., showing the deposits of A. J. Davidson and a man named Toole brought before the committee.

E. L. P. Ector, a dentist at Missoula, was the first witness. He had participated in the campaign in Ravalli County in the interest of E. P. Wood, who was the Democratic candidate for the Legislature in the last campaign, and who was a friend of Mr. Clark. Mr. Ector said he had acted at the instance of Mr. Bickford, one of Mr. Clark's managers. A number of letters from Bickford were exhibited. In one of these, written after the legislative election, Mr. Bickford referred to the presence of "our friend" in Hamilton, and asked Mr. Ector to ascertain what his financial condition was. Mr. Ector said "our friend" was Mr. Wood, and that he had replied to this letter, saying that his indebtedness was $6,500, and that $7,000 would probably be necessary to settle all his debts. Afterward Mr. Bickford had given him $7,000 to give to Mr. Wood. He had then refused to accept the money, telling Bickford it was "all off," as Wood had told him that he could not afford to sell himself.

The witness said that Bickford had promised to pay him for his services, but that no specific sum had been mentioned.

"He asked me how much I expected," said the witness, "and I told him that I wanted all I could get out of it. He continued by saying, 'No doubt you will make a stake out of it.' He asked me how 10 per cent. would do. I said: 'That would be satisfactory, as I have no doubt you will get $20,000 or $25,000 out of it.'"

It appeared that no settlement was made with him by Mr. Bickford, and that Mr. Ector wrote to Senator Clark about the matter. There was a correspondence with that gentleman, beginning Dec. 10, 1898, and closing Nov. 6, 1899.

State Senator H. L. Myers was the next witness. He was one of the members who turned $10,000 over to the legislative investigating committee, stating it had been put in Mr. Whiteside's hands for him on condition that he vote for Mr. Clark for Senator. Mr. Myers detailed not only the particulars of his taking the money, but also other circumstances leading up to this episode. He said that he had first been approached after his election as a Senator by Dr. S. W. Minshall and W. M. Bickford, and his vote for Mr. Clark requested. He had been told by these men that if he would agree to vote for Mr. Clark, the latter would appoint him attorney in connection with his coal interests at Bridger. He said he had declined this offer, but, notwithstanding this, he had received a letter from C. W. Clark, son of the Senator, written from Butte on Dec. 14, 1898. This letter was put in evidence. In it Mr. Clark stated that he had forwarded to Dr. Minshall $500 "as a retainer for his services in the Bridger coal mine." Mr. Clark, Mr. Myers said, had afterward asked him not to read the letter before the joint Legislative Assembly.

These letters were read to show that Mr. Bickford had been the agent of Mr. Clark in the Senatorial race. In the first letter Mr. Clark said that the matter concerning which Ector had written him had been "left entirely in the hands of Mr. Bickford," and that he would confer with that gentleman concerning the matter. In the second letter, dated Jan. 28, 1899, Mr. Clark spoke of the fact that he had just been elected, saying Bickford was wild with joy, and that there would be a hot old time in the town that night, adding that while he had no personal knowledge as to what he had done, he "never disappointed any one who had helped him."

This last statement was practically repeated from Paris in April last, and in another letter written from New York on Nov. 8 last. In the New York letter Mr. Clark said he would refer Ector's matter to Bickford, and in the Paris letter he said it was his desire that "any one who served him should be amply remunerated." One of the letters of the series was signed in typewriter, and the defense objected to its admission. This objection brought out the first division in the committee, Senators McComas and Chilton casting the only votes against admission.

Cross-examination was postponed until the defense could look up the letters received from Ector. Representative P. G. Sullivan, a member of the last Montana Legislature from Granite County, testified that he had been approached by Mr. Bickford when he went to Helena previous to the meeting of the Legislature and asked to vote for Mr. Clark.

"I said," the witness testified, "that I might do so if there was enough in it. He asked how much. I said $20,000. He then asked me if half that amount would not be enough. I replied 'No,' and we separated."

Sullivan said that afterward he had again met Bickford, and that the latter had suggested $15,000. He had told Bickford then that he would not vote for Clark under any circumstances and had seen no more of him.

Mr. Sullivan said his purpose had been to lead Mr. Bickford on, and that he had not expected to vote for Mr. Clark, even if the offer of $20,000 had been accepted. The witness stated that he is now the proprietor of the Florence Hotel, at Butte, and the cross-examination was devoted to showing that this hotel is owned largely by Marcus Daly.

State Auditor T. W. Poindexter testified that A. J. Steele had promised to give him $50,000 to secure the votes of the three members of the Legislature from Beaverhead County for Mr. Clark, he (Poindexter) to have $5,000 for his services, but that he had never approached the members because he was opposed to Mr. Clark's election, and had only agreed to see them for him to prevent others acting in the capacity of go-between.

He said that he had only agreed to Mr. Whiteside's proposition to accept $10,000 from Mr. Wellcome for the purpose of exposing what he believed were efforts at bribery. He said he had received the money from Mr. Whiteside, the latter saying Mr. Wellcome could not see him then. The witness said that after the exposure in the Legislature he had been persuaded to go see A. J. Steele, when the latter, he said, had tried to persuade him first to vote for Clark, next to leave the State until after the excitement over the Senatorial race had subsided, and lastly to sign a statement denying his connection with the exposure and contradicting his own testimony before the legislative committee. In each case Steele had asked him if there was any inducement or consideration which would secure his assent, and he had replied that there was not.

Mr. Meyers also said that Mark Hewitt had offered him $10,000 to vote for Clark, saying Charley Clark had authorized him to make the proposition. The latter had told him, he said, that he could put up $10,000 with Whiteside to be paid to him in case he voted for Clark.

The last witness of the day was Henry E. Garr, a member of the Legislature from Flathead County, Montana. He is one of the members of the Legislature in whose name money was turned over to the legislative investigating committee by Mr. Whiteside and the only one of them who afterward voted for Mr. Clark for the Senate.

Referring to his transaction with Mr. Whiteside, the witness said Whiteside had been a warm supporter of his, and he had listened respectfully when Whiteside had asked him to go to his room, and had complied with his request when Mr. Whiteside had asked him to mark for identification an envelope containing $5,000 in one-thousand-dollar bills which Whiteside had brought to him at the hotel during the session of the Legislature last Winter. He had no reason for doing this except his confidence in Whiteside and the additional fact that he himself was an "egregious ass." He had, however, put his initials on the envelope, exhibited yesterday in the committee as the one so marked. He declared that Mr. Whiteside had never said anything to him about voting for Clark, and that he had kept his promise to Conrad's friends to vote for him as long as he had a chance of election. He pronounced as untrue the report that he had told Judge D. F. Smith that he was to vote for Clark and receive $6,000 for so doing.

Garr stated that since the adjournment of the Legislature he had purchased a ranch for an aunt living with him, paying $2,500 for it, and that he had also loaned $600 for her. The ranch was paid for in currency, one of the bills being of the denomination of $1,000. He had to vote for Mr. Clark in the end to avoid a deadlock in the Legislature. On cross-examination, Mr. Garr said he had never received any money for voting for Mr. Clark, or for promising to vote for him.

FRYE SUBSIDY BILL IS URGED.

Prominent Shipping Men Appear Before the Senate Committee on Commerce.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The Senate Committee on Commerce to-day began hearings on Senator Frye's bill to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States and to provide auxiliary cruisers, transports, and seamen for Government use when necessary, the measure popularly known as the Subsidy bill. Besides the members of the committee, among those present at the hearing were Thomas Clyde and Col. E. P. Wilson of Cincinnati, Theodore A. Search, President of the National Manufacturers' Association; A. R. Smith, Secretary of the New York State Commerce Commission; H. P. Booth, President of the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company; C. A. Griscom, President of the International Navigation Company; Aaron Vanderbilt, Secretary of the American Shipping League; ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, and Eugene T. Chamberlain, Commissioner of Navigation of the Treasury Department.

Mr. Edmunds, who spoke for the shipping men, said one of the objects of the measure was to place vessels of American register upon an equal footing with foreign-built vessels in the trade with Cuba, Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines. The compensation to be paid American vessels amounted to no more than that, as Americans never asked for anything more than fair play. In referring to the Philippines, he said that, as an anti-expansionist, he was bound to recognize the facts as they existed. The United States had expanded, and it was necessary to regulate our business affairs accordingly.

Mr. Edmunds explained in detail the object of each section of the bill, his statement being merely an elaboration of those set out in the measure.

A long discussion was precipitated by an inquiry of Senator Martin (Dem., Va.,) as to why it was provided by the bill that 80 per cent. of a ship applying for registry and the subsidy should be owned by Americans. Mr. Edmunds regarded the provision as necessary to insure practical American ownership and control. It would be more difficult for the foreign stockholders to acquire control of the vessel if the American stockholders held 80 per cent. than if they held only 51 per cent.

In this connection the Chairman said it was the principle of the bill to bring under the United States flag American-owned ships, manned by Americans, which had been compelled by financial considerations to sail under a foreign flag.

Mr. Louis Nixon, shipbuilder, of Elizabethport, N. J., said that American shipowners had a monopoly of the coastwise trade, but the pending bill had little to do with that. It was the trade on the ocean with foreign ports it was proposed to get. The cost of vessels and their operation under the American flag were much greater than they were in Europe. As to men of war, Mr. Nixon said they could be built in this country as cheaply as any nation could build them, but there were special reasons for that fact which did not apply to the construction of merchant vessels.

In reply to an inquiry he stated that if he, as a shipbuilder, were given absolutely free materials and free labor—the contract labor law being repealed—he would be able to compete successfully with foreign shipbuilders. But he hoped this would not be done. He told about the shipyards of Glasgow and the miserable condition of the men employed there.

Mr. Nixon thought it particularly desirable to encourage and build up the American tramp steamers.

W. D. Munson of New York, President of the Munson Steamship Line, believed that if the bill passed the American shipbuilders would rise to the occasion and soon establish a great American merchant marine. He declared foreign vessels would run them out of business.

Thomas Clyde of the Clyde Steamship Company made a technical explanation of shipbuilding and ship-operating in various nations.

Mr. Edmunds's Argument Objected To.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—In the House to-day Mr. Richardson (Dem., Tenn.,) called attention to what he claimed was an infraction of the rules of the House in the printing of the Shipping bill. Appended to it was an argument by ex-Senator Edmunds, which made it a non-frankable document. He thought the whole document should be suppressed. Mr. Payne (Rep., N. Y.,) explained that the Edmunds argument had been printed by inadvertence. It was agreed by unanimous consent that the bill should be reprinted without the argument attached.

INCREASED COST OF BUILDINGS.

Appropriations Already Made by Congress Prove to be Inadequate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Assistant Secretary Taylor of the Treasury was heard to-day by the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds as to the increased cost of building material. He said the Supervising Architect's office was much hampered because of an advance of about 30 per cent. in building materials. As a result many of the appropriations already made for public buildings were found to be quite inadequate. Moreover, the cost of sites had also risen, leaving a scant balance for buildings after paying for the site. There are about 130 public buildings bills before the committee, involving appropriations of $20,000,000.

While no formal action was taken, the sentiment of the committee appeared to be favorable to taking action first on the lines suggested by Mr. Taylor for an increase of appropriations on the work already authorized in order to meet the added cost of material.

TO BUILD AN ISTHMIAN CANAL.

House Committee Decides by Almost Unanimous Vote to Report the Hepburn Bill Favorably.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The House Committee on Inter-State and Foreign Commerce to-day ordered a favorable report upon the Hepburn bill for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. The bill is very similar to the one reported by this committee in the last Congress. There was some discussion about the advisability of delaying action on the bill until the Isthmian Canal Commission reported, but this was finally regarded as unnecessary, and all the members except Mr. Fletcher of Minnesota voted to report the bill favorably. The latter said his silence should not be construed as opposition to the measure, but merely as a reservation of his right to support or oppose it after further consideration. The committee made some changes in the original bill, inserting a new section three and making verbal alterations. As finally agreed to the bill is as follows:

To provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans

Be it enacted, &c.,

That the President of the United States be and is hereby authorized to acquire from the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, for and in behalf of the United States, control of such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua as may be desirable and necessary on which to excavate, construct, and defend a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movement of ships of the largest tonnage and draught now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, via Lake Nicaragua, to Breto, on the Pacific Ocean; and such sums as may be necessary to secure such control are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Section 2—That when the President has secured full control over the territory in Sec. 1 referred to, he shall direct the Secretary of War to excavate and construct a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea, near Greytown, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Breto, on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest depth now in use, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Greytown to Breto; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal and such fortifications for defense as will be required for safety and protection of said canal and harbors.

Sec. 3—That the President shall cause such surveys as may be necessary for said canal and harbors and in the constructing of the same.

Sec. 4—That in the excavation and construction of said canal, the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be available, shall be used.

Sec. 5—That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have, the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

Sec. 6—That the sum of $140,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the completion of the work herein authorized, said money to be drawn from the Treasury from time to time, as the same shall be needed, upon warrants of the President based on estimates made and verified by the Chief Engineer in charge of the work and approved by the Secretary of War.

REPUBLICANS DEFEND MR. GAGE.

Representatives Consider His Reply to Resolutions as Satisfactory.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—In the House to-day Mr. Sulzer (Dem., N. Y.,) presented for immediate consideration a resolution for the appointment of a special committee of nine members to investigate the relations of the Secretary of the Treasury with certain New York National banks and the transactions relative to the sale of the New York Custom House. Before the reading of the resolution was completed, Mr. Dalzell (Rep., Penn.,) objected on the ground that the resolution should go through the box in the regular way.

"Then I ask unanimous consent," said Mr. Sulzer, "for its consideration."

"I object!" shouted Mr. Hopkins (Rep., Ill.,) and several other Republicans.

Mr. Grosvenor (Rep., Ohio,) moved that the resolution be laid on the table.

"It is not before the House," observed Mr. Hopkins. "The able report of the Secretary of the Treasury has met all the charges it contains."

STATEMENT OF MR. HEPBURN.

Does Not Recall Letter in Behalf of National City Bank.

Vice President A. B. Hepburn of the Chase National Bank said yesterday that he had no recollection of having written, while Vice President of the National City Bank, the letter to Secretary of the Treasury Gage, asking for favorable consideration of that bank, which has recently been published. In regard to the reference to "political claims" of the National City Bank, (because of what its Directors had done, as alleged, for the Administration,) referred to in that letter, Mr. Hepburn said that he had only been with the National City Bank a few days on the date of the letter in question, and, therefore, that he certainly could not have professed to know of any help the Directors had given the Administration, except in the general line of support.

"I can only repeat what I have several times said," Mr. Hepburn said yesterday. "I was an extremely busy man at the time the letter referred to was written. I have no more recollection of writing it than the man in the moon."

President James Stillman of the National City Bank has expressed himself to the effect that his correspondence with Secretary Gage in regard to relief of the money situation last April was simply in the line of his duty, and in his judgment not culpable. He declined to discuss the matter further last night.

CONGRESSIONAL NOTES.

Representative Grout of Vermont has introduced a bill appropriating $500,000 for the purchase of the right to manufacture and use the high-explosive thorite and also the Isham high-explosive shell.

The House yesterday adourned until Monday.

Representative Pearre of Maryland yesterday introduced a bill for the "suspension of tariff duties upon imports when their sale or manufacture are monopolized, and providing for a commission on foreign commerce to investigate and report to the President thereon."

The House Committee on Census yesterday heard Prof. Alexander Graham Bell upon an amendment to the Census bill for the compilation of complete statistics regarding the deaf, dumb, blind, and other afflicted classes. In the past statistics of afflicted classes have been taken only at institutions. These, Prof. Bell said, hardly covered 4 per cent. of the afflicted.

The House Committee on Naval Affairs has decided to report favorably the bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to change the material of the new dry docks at League Island, Penn., and Mare Island, Cal., from timber to stone, at a total additional cost for the two dry docks of $700,000.

Representative Loud of California has reintroduced what is known as the "Loud Bill," in reference to second-class mail matter, with some modifications. Mr. Loud's bill is substantially the same as of two years ago, except that Section 2 is changed to make the rate on second-class mail matter 1 cent a pound when the distance between the office of mailing and the office of delivery does not exceed 1,000 miles, and 2 cents a pound when the distance exceeds 1,000 miles.

THE RECIPROCITY TREATIES.

Preliminary Negotiations with Germany in Progress.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Mr. Kasson, the special plenipotentiary in charge of the negotiation of the reciprocity treaties and arrangements, has gone to Florida to recuperate from a severe attack of the grip. During his absence in Florida it is assumed that the reciprocity treaties will not be pressed.

A few preliminary steps have been taken looking to the conclusion of a reciprocity treaty between the United States and Germany, but these have not been conclusive, because it is not deemed expedient to add to the number of reciprocity treaties pending before the Senate until it is known what disposition will be made of them, and also for the reason that the German Government has not yet taken action, through its legislative branch, toward ameliorating the restrictions imposed upon American meat products.

As to the first obstacle, there is some reason to apprehend, in the judgment of the State Department officials, a total failure of all the reciprocity treaties. This feeling is based on reports of the formation of a combination of all the interests which believe that they will suffer through a reduction in the rates of duty on imports. The result of a failure to ratify in the case of the French treaty, it is said, would be the imposition of the full maximum rates of duty on all American products entering France, and the withdrawal of the minimum rate which has been extended in the case of many articles, in anticipation of such ratification.

DECEMBER POSTAL RECEIPTS.

Total Amount Was $4,162,038—Several Cities Show Increases.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—A statement of the gross postal receipts for December, 1899, as compared with the receipts for the same month during the preceding year shows a net increase of $199,835, or 5 per cent. The total receipts for last December were $4,162,038.

New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Brooklyn, Baltimore, and Pittsburg all showed increases.

The largest percentage of increase shown was at Albany, 21.6 per cent. Decreases are shown at Providence, R. I.; Lowell, Mass.; New Haven, Conn.; Hartford, Conn.; Peoria, Ill., and St. Joseph, Mo.

San Francisco receipts decreased 7.8 per cent.

NEW MONEY ORDER BLANK.

Proposed Improved Form Relieves Post Office Officials of Work.

A new money order blank, designed to do away with much of the clerical work made necessary by the form now in use, has just been submitted to the Washington postal authorities by Joseph Elliott, Superintendent of the Money Order Department of the General Post Office. The new blank is Mr. Elliott's own device.

Under the present system each money order payable at a designated office must be accompanied by a Postmaster's advice, mailed separately by the issuing Postmaster. This necessitates the handling of a great number of mailed advices. The envelopes must be cut and the advices arranged in alphabetical order and filed for ready reference before payment can be undertaken.

The new blank does away entirely with this handling of advices. By its means the remitter forwards his own advice. The new device is in three parts. The first one is torn off by the remitter and held as his receipt. The other two he sends to the payee. When the order is presented at the paying office the duplicate advice forming the second part is torn off and the money order forwarded to Washington.

Two Senators Look Alike.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The close resemblance of Senators McComas of Maryland and Kenney of Delaware led to a slight confusion in the Senate Thursday. Mr. Kenney rose during the morning hour to introduce a bill and the President pro tem. promptly recognized "the Senator from Maryland." Mr. Kenney responded, "The Senator from Delaware," and the correction was at once made.

Would Abolish Hazing by Law.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Representative Lloyd (Dem., Mo.,) to-day introduced a bill to change the oath of a cadet of the Military Academy, so as to require him on admission to the institution to subscribe to an oath that he will abstain from the practice of any form of hazing while at the academy.

RECENT FIGHTING IN LUZON.

Gen. Otis Reports on Movements of Wheaton's, Schwan's, and Other Commands—Operations Successful.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Gen. Otis has made a report to the War Department in regard to the military operations in Luzon south of Manila, showing the capture of several towns and a large number of prisoners with arms and ammunition. The message is as follows:

"Manila, Jan. 12.

"Continued operations Bates command south, Manila; Thirty-seventh and Thirty-ninth Regiments Calamba, commanded by Bullard. On Jan. 1 Bullard, with two battalions Thirty-ninth, attacked force insurgents in vicinity, driving enemy, capturing town of Cabayuo; following day captured Rinan; enemy's loss thirty killed, large number wounded, twenty prisoners and rifles captured; casualties three men slightly wounded.

"Jan. 3, Boyd, three companies Thirty-seventh, captured Gen. Rizal, official papers and property, three miles east of Los Banos; Jan. 4, Long, detachment Thirty-ninth, attacked insurgents at Carmona; twenty-five killed, no casualties; Jan. 9, Bullard, with portions Thirty-seventh and Thirty-ninth Regiments, attacked enemy south Calamba, whom he drove beyond Santomas, killing twenty-four, capturing artillery; casualties, one private killed; Capt. Baker and Lieut. Pelite, Thirty-ninth, slightly wounded.

"Jan. 11, Cheatham, Thirty-seventh, 100 men, supported by artillery, attacked insurgents two miles west Santo Tomas, driving them from that section, no casualties; Schwan's column, consisting squadron Fourth, one of Eleventh Cavalry, Thirtieth, Forty-sixth Infantry, and six Nordenfeldt guns under Capt. Van Duzen, seized Binan, Silang, Indang, Naic, scattering enemy, who were severely punished. Wheaton's column, three troops Eleventh Cavalry, Fourth, Twenty-eighth, Thirty-eighth, and Forty-fifth Regiments, Astor and Henley Batteries, has driven enemy from all important points north of Silang line; had heavy fighting, captured considerable public property, inflicting heavy loss upon and scattering enemy; Schwan's column now moving in Northern Batangas in southerly direction.

"All Cavite Province occupied by Wheaton's command; heavy loss to enemy during week in men, ordnance, and other property; all operations very successful."

McDEVITT WAS A HERO.

Marine Killed at Olongapo Once Recommended for a Medal.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—It is said at the Navy Department that McDevitt, the Sergeant of Marines who was accidentally killed at Olongapo, through the discharge of a revolver, is the marine whom the Treasury Department refused to honor with a life-saving medal, although the recommendation was formally made by the Navy Department.

McDevitt was a man of splendid character, and of great personal courage. The particular incident, though there were many such in his career, which led the Navy Department to make the effort to secure a medal for him, occurred at the League Island Navy Yard, when McDevitt, who was attached to the Brooklyn, at great risk saved a sailor from drowning. Capt. Cook made the incident the subject of a special report to the Navy Department, and while the Treasury Department was anxious to recognize the gallant act, it was unable to do so because of the limitations imposed by the law regulating the bestowal of life-saving medals.

Lieut. Gillmore Assigned to Duty.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Lieut. Gillmore, formerly of the Yorktown, who was recently rescued in the north country after many months as a prisoner, has been assigned to temporary duty on the Glacier.

CUBAN OFFICIAL REMOVED.

Gen. Wood Relieves Mora, the Supreme Court Fiscal, "for the Good of the Public Service."

HAVANA, Jan. 12.—"Federico Mora, Fiscal of the Supreme Court, is hereby removed from office for the good of the public service. This removal is the result of an investigation into the conditions existing in the administration of justice under his administration."

The foregoing official order was handed to Señor Mora this morning by Governor General Wood. Señor Mora's fall has been predicted ever since the first case was brought against the Custom House officials, and the disgraceful condition of the prisons, especially as affecting those awaiting trial, has been generally charged against him.

For some time it has been said that Mora has been devoting too much attention to social affairs and too little to his duties. Gen. Wood's investigation has shown that the office of the Supreme Court Fiscal is largely responsible for a number of the untried cases, and that not only Mora but others in the Department of Justice have been persistently trying to block the charges against customs officials whom Collector Bliss is anxious to prove guilty of wholesale bribery and corruption.

Every possible influence has been exerted to protect the incriminated men from receiving the punishment which is their due, but the public has scarcely been willing to believe that high officials of the rank of Mora have been implicated. Mora's letter to the Supreme Court regarding the Custom House fraud cases under trial, which has already been cabled, was only the last straw. His dismissal had been decided upon some days before.

Señor Estevez, Secretary of Justice, had a long consultation with the Governor General before final action was taken. Both agreed that the letter, published without the authority of the members of the Government, of which he was a part, was published through a real desire to thwart justice, although there was a superficial attempt to make it appear that the civil authority was being overturned by the military.

Cuban Paper Appeals to Gen. Wood.

HAVANA, Jan. 12.—The Cubano announces to-day that it has been fined $10 by Gen. Ludlow for "not having contradicted a false statement made in a former issue when ordered to do so." It appeals to Gen. Wood, saying that "the time has arrived when Gen. Ludlow should stop usurping powers which do not belong to him," and adding that it is Gen. Ludlow, and not The Cubano, that is deserving of a fine.

GEN. MILES COMPLAINS.

Declares His Orders Are Altered in Gen. Corbin's Office.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The relations between Gen. Miles and Adjt. Gen. Corbin have not improved, and the matter has been brought to the attention of Secretary Root. Gen. Miles has complained to the Secretary that the Adjutant General's office has failed in certain cases to forward official communications to the Secretary. It is said that in some of these cases a personal inquiry by the Secretary about communications which he expected from Gen. Miles revealed the fact that they had been made by the General, but had not been forwarded.

Aside from this, Gen. Miles has complained that orders issued by himself have been altered in the Adjutant General's office without his knowledge. Gen. Miles assigned Capt. Van Deusen of the artillery to proceed to Europe and inspect the manufacture of certain mountain guns at the Maxim works. When Capt. Van Deusen reached Washington he found he had been ordered to San Francisco to take charge of some guns. The orders were ultimately revoked.

TO BRING THE ALBANY HOME.

Navy Department Will Send Over a Crew of Two Hundred.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Naval Constructor Gilmore, who is at Newcastle-on-Tyne, inspecting the new cruiser Albany, has informed the Navy Department that the vessel will be ready to receive her crew within two weeks. The department will send out a complement of about 200 men on the Prairie when she makes her next trip to Europe, to form the crew of the Albany and bring her to the United States.

The reports indicate that the cruiser is very similar in speed and other qualities to her sister ship, the New Orleans, which was also purchased from Brazil by the Navy Department just before the outbreak of the Spanish war.

Gold Medal for Lieut. Blue.

For the services rendered to his country in the war with Spain, Lieut. Victor Blue of the United States Navy will receive a handsome gold medal to-day from the women of South Carolina, Lieut. Blue's native State. The presentation will be made on the battleship Massachusetts at the Brooklyn Navy Yard at 11 A. M. by ex-Gov. Thompson of South Carolina.

PRAISE VANDERBILTS' PLAN

Merchants Pleased at Proposed Abolishment of Differentials.

PRESIDENT KING'S STATEMENT

W. K. Vanderbilt, He Intimates, Can Aid New York When Long Agitation Might Fail.

The announcement that the acquisition of the control by the Vanderbilts of the Eastern trunk roads would be followed by the abolition of the differential rates, which have diverted from New York its natural share of the increase of traffic from the West to tidewater, was the cause of much satisfaction yesterday in mercantile circles.

William F. King, President of the Merchants' Association, said: "Our idea is that if men like W. K. Vanderbilt, who control the railroads as holders of securities, take this matter of differentials up they can do more for New York's interests in a short time than all the public agitation that has been had over the subject for years.

"The New York Central Road agreed to the differentials originally, through, it is generally believed, the pressure of other cities and roads which thought that that company was directing its policy too much for the benefit of New York at their expense. The company, therefore, agreed to what was thought to be a reasonable differential of 1½ cents a hundred pounds in favor of Philadelphia, and 3 cents in favor of Baltimore.

"Once established it was impossible to get rid of it, though various bodies, including our association, have fought it. It was taken into the courts, and before the Inter-State Commerce Commission, and a special commmission considered the question, on the commission being such men as Judge Thurman and Judge Cooley. They came to the conclusion that the differential was not a burden upon New York as conditions then existed, the reason being that the more direct connections and high-grade equipment of the New York Central offset the advantages of the differentials. The fight has been continued, and recently the differentials were reduced one-half.

"With competition as keen as it now is, the smallest fraction of a cent tells. Of course we can't prevent trade following the lines of least resistance, and we do not seek to obtain any unfair advantage such as to invite concerted action on the part of other cities against us, but we do object to their getting more than their natural proportion of the increase of traffic by the operation of artificial means. There ought to be some way of equalizing traffic by a readjustment of the business. It would be simply necessary to issue instructions to traffic managers to re-equalize the distribution of business. If Mr. Vanderbilt intends to take this up and agree to a new distribution among the roads, it should be very easy of accomplishment."

In a number of interviews recently obtained from representatives of the shipping interests for gauging the conditions and prospects of foreign shipping for the annual Financial Supplement of THE NEW YORK TIMES, one of the conditions on which nearly all laid stress was the discrimination of the railroads in favor of Southern ports at the expense of New York.

John Lee of the White Star Line said: "New York is feeling the competition of Southern ports very keenly, particularly in breadstuffs." Emil L. Boas of the Hamburg-American Line spoke similarly of the trade diverted by discriminating rates in favor of Baltimore and Philadelphia, from both of which places the company operates steamers. Charterers of vessels engaged in the grain-carrying trade told of the increasing amount of shipments from Southern ports and the falling off at New York, while West Indian lines feel keenly the diversion. Henry P. Booth of the New York and Cuba Mail Steamship Company said that the railroads were taking provisions from the West to Gulf ports at rates proportionately lower than to New York, and new lines from those ports are carrying freight that formerly passed through New York.

One representative of this trade said that this discrimination had been carried so far that goods shipped via Southern ports were landed in Cuba at the cost of transportation from the same starting point to New York.

REFUSE NEW YORK LOW RATES.

Western Railroads Decline to Grant Concessions Asked.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—Wholesale merchants and jobbers in Chicago and west of here will be benefited by action just taken by the Western and Southwestern railroads in declining to accede to a request of the Merchants' Association of New York City to reduce round-trip rates to the latter city from Western points for Spring buyers.

A few weeks ago the Eastern jobbers induced the railroads east of Chicago to agree to sell reduced rate tickets to New York from Feb. 13 to 17 and from March 1 to 14. The Eastern roads, largely represented by the Vanderbilt lines, the owners of which always work in the interest of New York as against Chicago and the West, were the prime movers in this agreement.

Encouraged by their success with the roads east of Chicago, the New Yorkers turned their campaign against the lines west of here. The proposition was put to a vote of the roads in the Western and Southwestern Passenger Associations. The result was a unanimous refusal of the request.

Reduced Rate Circulars Sent Out.

The Merchants' Association sent out by mail yesterday circulars to merchants throughout the country announcing the reduced rates which have been obtained by it from the several sections of the United States in which the railroads have agreed to grant these rates. These reduced-rate circulars will be sent to all merchants in the territory in which the reduced rates are granted. These States are New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Northern Kentucky.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

ERIE REPORTED IN A BIG DEAL.

Rumors of a $1,500,000 Office Building to Occupy a Block.

A report current yesterday was to the effect that the Erie Railroad had bought the block bounded by Washington, West, Reade, and Duane Streets, and would erect thereon a large office building at a cost of $1,500,000. No confirmation of the report was obtainable, and John A. Middleton, Secretary of the company, said the Erie Railroad did not own the property and that he had heard nothing of the projected improvement.

The block mentioned formerly belonged to the city and was sold at auction last May for $453,000. At that time the nominal buyer was Jarvis Hicks, concerning whose identity there was considerable mystery. Title to the property was subsequently transferred by the city to Edward Roche.

In view of the report circulated yesterday it is significant that when the property was offered at auction the only competitor of Mr. Hicks in the bidding was a representative of the Erie Railroad.

SEABOARD LINE RUSHING WORK.

Trains from New York to Florida May Run Feb. 1.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 12.—Vice President St. John of the Seaboard Air Line, referring to the progress of the work on the links that will connect the different properties to compose the Greater Seaboard Air Line system, to-day said that if the bridge-erecting companies were equal to the task trains could be run through from New York to Florida Feb. 1. The grading is about completed and track laying is going on. About fifty miles of track are to be laid, and this is progressing at the rate of four and one-half miles a day.

Proposed Railroad for Connecticut.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Jan. 12.—Parties in New York, North Adams, and Springfield are interested in the incorporation of a new company to build a railroad from Troy, N. Y., to Williamstown, Mass., passing through the towns of Brunswick, Grafton, and Peterburg. The length of the proposed road is twenty-eight miles.

Santa Fe Wages Not Increased.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—The statement to the effect that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fé Railroad Company had signed a new contract with the trainmen granting what practically amounted to a 15 per cent. increase in wages, proves to be untrue. Certain inequalities have been ratified, but no change was made in wage rates.

SOLDIERS MAY WEAR BADGES.

The Secretary of War Amends Rules Pertaining to Decorations.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—The Secretary of War has amended the regulations of the army pertaining to the wearing of badges and similar decorations so as to permit officers and enlisted men who, in their own right or by right of inheritance, are members of military societies; of men who served in the armies and navies of the United States in the War of the Revolution, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, and the War of the Rebellion, or are members of the regular Army and Navy Union, to wear on all occasions of ceremony the distinctive badges of such societies.

It is also provided that medals of honor and the several distinctive marks given for excellence in rifle practice, as well as army corps badges, may be worn on occasions of ceremony. The wearing of insignia "buttons," however, is prohibited.

THE BANKERS AND THE SECRETARY.

Mr. HEPBURN'S letter to Secretary GAGE admits neither of excuse nor palliation. The request he had to make was a perfectly proper one. He desired the Secretary to continue the National City Bank, of which he was then Vice President, as one of the depositories of Treasury money. It was purely a business letter. Mr. HEPBURN made the serious mistake of mixing politics with business. That is always a questionable procedure; in dealing with the Secretary of the Treasury it won't do at all.

So, when Vice President HEPBURN, after calling the Secretary's attention to the great strength of his bank, added "if you will take the pains to look at our list of Directors, you will see that we also have very great political claims, in view of what was done during the canvass last year," he compromised both himself and his case. In the first place, no banker has the right to address the Secretary of the Treasury in that way. It is impertinent spoils-seeking. In this case no appointments to office in the Treasury were demanded, but the Treasury deposits were asked for. The principle is the same, and it is a bad principle. Moreover, such a demand for business favors because of political services to the Republican Party simply adds fuel to the flames of Populism that if sufficiently fed would destroy all banks. The Populists and Bryanites charge that the banks thrive by Government favor and exist only for the accommodation of the money barons and the speculators. They specifically charged that the National banks "put up" a great sum of campaign money in 1896. They will accept Mr. HEPBURN'S letter as a full proof of their charges.

Persons who take the time to reflect will see, of course, that the letter proves that the bank had no political "pull" with the Secretary of the Treasury. A "pull" to which it is necessary to call attention does not exist. If the writer of this letter had been confident of his "political claims" he would never have mentioned them. It would have been manifestly superfluous to call the Secretary's attention to a fact of which he must have been gratefully aware. And Mr. GAGE'S treatment of the letter shows what he thought about it. It is extremely unlikely that a letter referring to a valid, effectual, and recognized "pull" would have gone upon the department files and thence to the Public Printer.

THE LATEST PHASE OF THE MAZET BUSINESS.

There is a certain fine suggestion of fitness in the report that the Mazet report has been "held up" by a threat on the part of the minority that they would outdo the majority in personal and political abuse if the latter persisted in indulging in it.

Here was a committee appointed by the Legislature to inquire into the workings of the charter and the administration of the actual City Government with a view to legislation that would correct errors in the former and provide for the punishment of faults in the latter. A lawyer was selected as counsel who was reputed to be an expert in exposure and peculiarly familiar with the field to be explored. It is true that he had no special reputation for knowledge of the principles of municipal government, but he might be expected to get at facts on which the Legislature could act if it chose. He proved to be a helpless sort of person, with no clear knowledge of what he wanted to get at and with still less of how he could get at it. The whole investigation was apparently left to him. He spent months in groping and trying to get the multitude of persons he had before him to tell him what he ought to ask them about. He had before him a great number of the city officials and he had Mr. CROKER, their boss. He went in a confused and muddle-headed fashion into a hundred matters. Some of them were very important, others trivial. He brought out a lot of information which, in the hands of a competent man, should have given opportunity for both demonstration of evils and suggestion for remedies. What use did he or the committee make of it?

Worse than none. On the eve of the election, in which the Chairman of the committee was a candidate for the Assembly, Mr. Moss was allowed to bring out a hysterical report full of all sorts of violent accusations against his political opponents. Later, after the Chairman had been defeated, and it became clear that the blind partisanship of the committee had done more harm than good, there seems to have been some effort on the part of the counsel to correct it, and he is credited with the purpose of calling Mr. PLATT and probing as far as he could the relations of that gentleman to the pernicious politics of the city. Then came the break of the committee with its counsel, and the latter rushed in his own report, which the committee disregarded and prepared another. Now this is said to have been submitted, under the threat of reprisals from the minority, to Senator PLATT for revision.

It would be an interesting outcome of the whole ridiculous and disgraceful business if the two reports, majority and minority, were toned down to a common level of agreeable insignificance, and were then both sent their way to dusty death in the pigeon holes of the Cities Committee. The Mazet inquiry had its birth in a temporary quarrel between the two bosses. It would find its appropriate grave in a reconciliation based on the protection of each by the silence of the other.

CONTRABAND OF WAR.

The British reply to our representations concerning the British seizures of American flour is what we were all sure beforehand that it must be. Food, it has been held by all the publicists from GROTIUS down, is "occasional contraband." It is contraband, according to these authorities, when it is used as munition of war. That should mean and generally does mean when it is evidently destined for the use of the enemy, the enemy being the actual armed combatants. If, says GROTIUS, "I can defend myself only by intercepting the goods sent to my enemy, necessity will justify my doing so." And necessity will equally justify the interception of all supplies sent to a besieged city. It might justify the interception of all supplies intended for a country which might be regarded as besieged, even though they were intended for the consumption of non-combatants as well as of combatants. But, as we have already pointed out, Great Britain is precisely the last nation in the world which can desire such an extension to be given to the doctrine of "occasional contraband." We are perhaps the next to the last, seeing that our interests are likely to be in favor of our being allowed to feed either belligerent in case of any probable war.

But, so far as we are concerned, there has been nothing in the recent British seizures to excite any National susceptibilities. The endeavor to do so, on the part of a portion of our yellow press, has been as unpatriotic as it has been disreputable. It is British ships which have been stopped in endeavoring to deliver American goods. In the case of the German seizures the case has been different, inasmuch as it has been German ships and "the flag" has been brought into the discussion. Still there has been nothing to justify the German hyperaesthesia. The German Government has not, discountenanced this, simply because the German Government is warmly interested in getting a bigger navy, and is willing to accept any bad arguments in support of its own contention.

The British Admiralty Manual of Prize Law, upon which the British naval officers have no doubt been modeling their proceedings, gives, as "conditionally contraband," provisions fit for consumption by army or navy. But there has never been any real reason for doubt that the British statesmen who are aware that the present is not the only war in which their country may be engaged should give to the provisions of international law applicable to the case the construction demanded by their permanent interests rather than by their immediate exigency. That is what they have done and what it has all along been certain that they would do.

THE SENATE AND THE OFFICES.

There is a peculiar feeling among Senators of the United States about the petty offices connected with their body. Perhaps it would be rude to call it greed, but there is in it more of greed than of any other sentiment. This is not made any better by being mixed with considerable vanity, jealousy, and a curious fondness for intrigue.

At this moment it is probable that if the Senators could be led to tell with exactness and candor what it is that excites the most interest in their grave and reverend bosoms, it would be found to be—not the Finance bill, or the policy in the Philippines, or even the ship subsidy scheme the lobby is urging on them—but the question as to who shall hold one or two of the little offices they have in their august gift. The chief of these is the Secretaryship, for which the ex-Hon. JAMES S. CLARKSON, formerly of Iowa, was a candidate. His election would have been extremely discreditable to the Senate. His career in Washington, in public office, is perfectly well known. He was one of the most energetic and least scrupulous of the spoils system's preachers and beneficiaries, and he has since been engaged in the calling of a professional advocate of interests connected with legislation pending in Congress. He was very properly turned down, and the place was offered to Mr. ODELL of this State, who has declined it on the ground that his business and family affairs will not permit him to reside in Washington. Mr. PLATT is now reported to be hunting for some other Republican from New York who will be acceptable, and who will efface the disagreeable impression made by the presentation of CLARKSON'S name. Since this is the way that these things are done, it is to be hoped that the Senator will be reasonably successful.

But the whole system is as wrong and unintelligent as can be. The United States Senate should have a permanent staff of employés, administrative and clerical. All legitimate duties falling to the staff could be performed very much better by men tested and trained by experience. These duties are not political, and they could be attended to as well by men of one party as by men of the other, and best of all by men with no active part in politics at all. The records of the Senate show many instances of confusion, delay, and mischief caused by careless and inefficient clerical service, for which there is no adequate responsibility when the places are distributed as patronage. The same may be said of the clerks of committees, who are among the most favored and least competent of office holders. The affairs of the Senate and of the country would be far better administered if this miserable notion of partisan reward could be got rid of. But that consummation is a long way off.

IN DEFENSE OF MILLIONAIRES.

The millionaire is not wholly friendless. Hard beset and panting as he flees before his Socialistic pursuers, he hears now and then a good word said for him. Even from the pulpit, where the doctrines of Christian Socialism, whatever that may be, are reported to have effected a lodgment, a just and dispassionate estimate of the utility of millionaires in the scheme of creation may sometimes be heard. The rector of Grace Church, not speaking from the pulpit, to be sure, but in an address delivered at Hobart College on last Commencement Day, expressed the belief that business is not a criminal pursuit even when it is successful. That is, he thought that in the accumulation of their riches men may do good to others at the same time that they are accomplishing their own private ends.

In view of recent utterances upon the subject of millionaires, in letters to this journal and elsewhere, we quote a passage from Dr. HUNTINGTON'S address:

> Is any terrible calamity awaiting us because of the increase of our goods, and if such peril really threatens, how may it most surely be averted? * * * It is quite conceivable that there may be uses of wealth the effect of which if tried would be tonic and antiseptic rather than the opposite; methods of investing capital positively conducive to the public health. * * * And this holds true not merely of gifts and benefactions, but of all well-considered, bona fide investments. It is a mistake, and a harmful one, to insist that the millionaires are doing no good with their money except when they are giving it away. Wealth accomplishes its best work when devoted to the purpose of keeping the wheels of industry in motion. The purchasers of stocks and bonds are not as those who hide gold in a stocking on the one hand, nor on the contrary, what they do serves to put bread into countless mouths. In every community a certain percentage of the people have to be tugged along, so to say, by main force, because of infirmity, and for this reason a relief fund is a necessary adjunct of civilization, but the lower the poor rate can be kept the better both for the helpers and the helped. Some years ago, Gen. BOOTH of the Salvation Army startled the world of the charitably disposed with his story of what he called "the submerged tenth." The fact that this fraction, one-tenth, exactly corresponds with the proportion of a man's goods which, under the usage of the old Hebrew Commonwealth, had to be turned as "tithes" into the treasury of God, is most interesting, for it suggests that what society must expect to give away in the form of out-and-out gratuity in order to keep all of its members upon their feet, is of the nature of a constant quantity. In other words, hospitals, asylums, almshouses, and all similar provisions for the helpless are to be accounted what the financiers call a "fixed charge" upon the income of society, the payment of which, at a just appraisal, leaves the rest of the wealth of the community available for other purposes. If all of our capitalists were suddenly and by common consent to take the line of St. Francis of Assisi, we should be in a bad way. The Mills Hotel, in the City of New York, with its 1,500 beds, counts as an investment, not as a charity, and yet the millionaire who built it and maintains it is justly reckoned a public benefactor. Who can doubt that he is doing the "submerged tenth" an infinitely greater service through his wise investment than if he were to stand at a street corner doling out in equal portions to all applicants the money now "tied up," as the misleading phrase has it, in his hotel?

Dr. HUNTINGTON'S theme was "The American College as a Breakwater Against Plutocracy." His conclusion was that we are safe. He had no fear that an aristocracy of wealth would be established in the United States. The real aristocracy here is the aristocracy of good sense and sane opinions, and the high task of the college is to mold men who help mold society.

If the powerful thinkers of the Socialistic school are right, the aristocracy of millions is already established; the reign of the plutocrats has begun, and nothing but the election of BRYAN, or the immediate application of the remedies recommended by JONES of Toledo, will save us.

It is pleasant to be able to cite the reassuring testimony of a man like Dr. HUNTINGTON, whose head does not betray him into indiscriminate denunciation of the rich because his heart feels for the poor.

GEN. LUDLOW AND THE CUBAN PRESS.

It seems that Gen. LUDLOW has been making a serious political mistake in availing himself of the provision of the Spanish "hold-over" law, which empowers a commanding officer to fine summarily and at his own will newspapers which have offended him. We say this with the more freedom because we are also free to maintain that the Government which Gen. LUDLOW has been giving to the inhabitants of Havana is immensely better than any other they have had since their harbor was first visited by Europeans.

We can understand, too, that an honorable man like Gen. LUDLOW is very greatly exasperated by aspersions upon his motives and false statements of his conduct for which he is perfectly aware that there is no basis at all. But in the first place that very fact ought to induce him to trust to time and the "common sense of most" for his vindication against absurd untruths. In the second place, his invocation of a Spanish statute or regulation which is entirely in contravention of the American spirit would have been more excusable if it had been made in vindication of anybody else than himself.

This is the crux of the whole business. It is part of the American scheme of government that every public officer shall be liable to criticism, and that every citizen shall be free to criticise, being responsible for the abuse of this freedom, but not to the object of his criticism. For it is the very basis of our notions of "justice according to law," which we are trying to instill into the Cubans, that no man shall be judge in his own cause. Gen. LUDLOW, acting under the authority of a Spanish regulation, has made himself judge in his own cause. It is quite true that the criticism which he resents is not fair criticism, but abuse founded upon falsehood. But then he would have the same power to suppress just criticism, founded upon truthful statements of fact, temperately expressed and published with a public purpose. He would not avail himself of his legal powers to suppress such criticism, but some less just and honest official in his place might do so, and the dishonest and tyrannical Governor and Gen. LUDLOW would be legally on the same footing. The power which Gen. LUDLOW has exercised is a power which Anglo-Saxon communities are agreed should be intrusted to no man.

We have no doubt that the Governor General of Cuba will induce the Governor of Havana to undo action which would, if left to stand, create a dangerous and intolerable precedent.

In an enthusiastic article in The Independent Mr. EVERETT P. WHEELER defends the course of the British in South Africa, and maintains that the war was inevitable for the overthrow of an oppressive oligarchy in the Transvaal, the protection of the rights of British subjects and the establishment of the principles of justice. We have not been able to reach this conclusion as unqualifiedly as Mr. WHEELER, nor can we at present see the immediate future as clearly favorable for the British as he sees it, but we can fully agree as to the results of a British triumph, when it is won. Mr. WHEELER says:

> The British will triumph in the end, and put down the oligarchy of which KRUGER is the head, and establish a just government of freedom and equal rights. The Boers will not lose one farm. They will find themselves well treated, and possessing their just rights, as their brethren are and do in Cape Colony and Natal. The next generation will "shake hands over the bloody chasm," as North and South have done. Boer regiments will be proud to fight under the British flag, as Scotch and Irish and French Canadians now are. Quebec and Edinburgh and Belfast are as loyal as London. In fifty years Pretoria will be as loyal, too; and the story of the misgovernment of the Transvaal and of the war that the British waged to vindicate the immortal American principle that "taxation and representation are inseparable" will seem like an evil dream.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Rarely indeed is it profitable to seek an explanation for the acts of Police Justices, but mysteries, as a rule, are interesting in direct ratio to the improbability of solving them, and as the Magistrates mentioned indulge in frequent excursions beyond the realms of both natural and statute law, it is not at all surprising that their acts attract frequent and delighted attention. There is in Washington a Police Justice, who, on this principle, is particularly deserving of notice, for he has just fined a cab driver for maintaining an "unsightly" vehicle. It may be, of course, that there is in the ordinance under which Washington cab drivers obtain their licenses a clause defining the exact degree of sightliness which their vehicles must illustrate, but we prefer to believe that the Justice founded his decision on no such simple thing as that, and to assume that he imposed the penalty merely because his own aesthetic taste had been offended. To do so turns the affair into a typical Police Justice mystery, and opens up a delightfully wide field for conjecture. How beautiful, for example, must a Washington cab be to win magisterial approval, how beautiful to escape magisterial condemnation? Or, again, when will somebody in Washington get fined because his coat or other garment lacks the requisite amount of "sightliness" in his Honor's eyes? Further inquiries of like nature suggest themselves, but these are enough to indicate the extent of the curiosity justified by the imposition of this fine. Later one might consider the whole subject of Washington cabs, and have occupation for the leisure of months, yes, of years. While an Inspector was examining a covey of them the other day one dropped a door at his feet as a tribute of respect, and a second, which he had been rush enough to enter, hurried his exit by a sudden parting of continuity between its sides and its floor. Whether these cabs passed muster as sufficiently "sightly" is as yet unrevealed.

—Gen. DABNEY HERNDON MAURY, whose death we announced yesterday, was a nephew of MATTHEW FONTAINE MAURY, whose study of ocean currents opened up a new realm of scientific investigation and made him the most distinguished member of a Virginian family few members of which have failed to attain some degree of distinction. Most of Gen. MAURY'S life since the war has been passed very quietly at Richmond, where his daughter and other children reside, and his time has been devoted chiefly to researches into local history. His friends are unanimous in crediting him with a character of spotless rectitude, and as an illustration of his regard for what he considered right and honorable they are now telling of his instant refusal of an offer which he once received from the Louisiana Lottery Company. When that organization, in 1895, or thereabcut, lost by death the services of the bearer of another well-known name, it asked Gen. MAURY to become one of its managers in his place. The General at that time was entirely without means, and the large salary which the proffered position carried with it, practically for life, would have been most acceptable to him, but his views of the lottery business were those of a man at once honest and enlightened, and he did not hesitate an instant in telling the company's representative to look elsewhere for a name with which to win the confidence of its dupes. When the war with Spain broke out the veteran of many campaigns manifested the deepest interest in all of the operations in Cuba and later on in the Philippine Islands. When asked, soon after the declaration of war, what he was going to do, Gen. MAURY said he was too old to take any active part in the field, but with sparkling eyes he added that if the Government had any use for his services and he could render any to his country, he was ready to be assigned.

—Railway travelers, and especially that portion of them upon whom has been fastened the not very dignified name of commuters, rarely indulge in fervid praise of the officials who control their ambulatory destinies, but just at present the patrons of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Road are unanimous in praising the unknown genius connected with the management who has solved at last the problem of securing from brakemen a distinct announcement of station names. The previous attempts in this direction have been innumerable—at least so it is said—and hitherto the record of utter failure has been broken only by a few partial and always impermanent successes. It is too soon to credit the New Haven benefactor with an enduring triumph, but his is certainly a perfect one for the time being, and even the commuters, professional skeptics as they are, express confidence that the old trouble will never return. Of course the new device is a very simple one; that, probably, is why nobody ever thought of it before. Instead of yelling—or muttering—one, or, at most, two, words on leaving a station, as is the natural tendency, and has been the invariable custom, of all brakemen, those employed by the New Haven Road now have been commanded to deliver a complete and somewhat lengthy sentence. One formula is: "The next station for this train is Mount Vernon," or Port Chester, or Stamford, as the case may be. The brakeman usually begins in the old unintelligible way, but the beginning of the sentence doesn't matter, and before he reaches the town name he remembers the object of his oration and speaks with beautiful distinctness. The announcement of arrivals is similarly prolonged, and so are those delivered on the platform to passengers about to enter the cars. Now, this is a most admirable reform. The man who thought of and enforced it deserves a statue from the American public, and for once it isn't necessary to wait till he is dead before giving it to him. He should have it immediately.

—A Parisian now in Washington is quoted as talking about the Dreyfus case in a way most amusingly significant of the fact that Frenchmen are thoroughly willing to forgive—or at least thoroughly willing to forget—the attitude assumed by America while the unfortunate Captain's so-called trial was in progress. "The 'affaire,'" said this amiable visitor, "is a thing of the past; the incident is closed. It will not, I think, affect the attendance of Americans to the Exposition. I suppose DREYFUS will make continued effort to have his name entirely cleared from all stain, and if he is able to do so, why, of course, it will be a source of gratification to his friends on this side of the water and in France. But, you see, your people over here, while the case was very thoroughly reported, were unable to judge of all the conditions. Their sympathies were naturally aroused, for it was a case that appealed to the emotions. But you do not understand fully, perhaps, and you might be induced to look at the matter in a different light did you but fully understand." Deeply analyzed, that is not quite so agreeable reading as it seems to be on first sight, but it serves fairly well as a means of escape from an untenable position. Possibly it is as good as anything less than a frank confession of cruel and intentional wrong would be, and that is too much to expect.

—Thursday night's rain was so welcome all through this region that nobody will have the heart to complain of its brevity. Perhaps nobody would even have thought of doing so if the Weather Bureau hadn't promised that the storm would last through all of yesterday. The bureau officials, by the way, are probably complimenting themselves on their success in predicting the storm's arrival. Well, they certainly did hit it, but how? They had been prophesying rain or snow for the greater part of two weeks, and naturally they triumphed at last. It is only in the moon that the fulfillment of a rain forecast would not be inevitable, provided the forecasting were kept up with sufficient courage and industry.

GENERAL NOTES.

Chicago people appreciate the public baths. The city has two houses for the purpose, and last year these gave 301,468 free baths.

A man arrested in Middletown, Conn., on the charge of unlawfully selling cider made the ingenious plea that the customers did not pay him for the cider, but for his time and trouble in going down cellar to draw it. An unsympathetic Judge could not thus view it, and sent him to jail.

The Portland Oregonian, always an excellent newspaper, issued on New Year's Day a special and handsomely illustrated number of sixty pages, containing a large amount of statistical and historical matter, proving very satisfactorily that the year just closed was the most prosperous in the history of the State of Oregon.

Fire Chief Swenie of Chicago reports that there were 185 fires in that city in 1899 resulting from the use of gasoline, the total loss amounting to about $205,000. Six persons were killed and thirty-four were burned by gasoline explosions during the year. The Fire Chief will strive to have the use of gasoline, and especially of gasoline stoves in crowded tenement houses, restricted.

ORIGIN OF BARBARA FRIETCHIE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In the later correspondence on the subject of Whittier's poem, I read in THE TIMES of Dec. 17 a letter from Jesse W. Reno stating that his father, Gen. Reno, was presented with a flag by Barbara Frietchie while marching through Frederick, Md., at the head of his troops, and in The Sun of Dec. 24 a communication dated Boston, Dec. 17, wherein the flag and the manner of its alleged presentation are described.

As one of four soldiers of the Ninth Corps, who, knowing the facts, gave to the whispering winds playing around the campfires at Frederick in the night of Sept. 12, 1862, the story of an attempt to take an American flag from a plucky little woman in that town while our forces were moving upon that afternoon, and as a participant in an episode on the morning of Sept. 14, 1862, when another woman (who stood, with a young girl by her side, in front of a house on the right side of a street leading into the road to Middletown,) was introduced, without ceremony or formality, to the last soldiers of the Ninth Corps leaving Frederick, with the words "Here's Barbara! Richy, here's Barbara!" I beg leave to offer a few reasons why the flag in possession of Gen Reno's son should not be heralded as one of the already too numerous only original Barbara Frietchie flags, and for my belief that Gen. Reno was not even aware of her existence.

When the Union troops arrived at the Monocacy River, on the road to Frederick, Gen. Rodman's Third Division of Gen. Reno's Ninth Army Corps was in the advance, following a squadron of Rush's lancers and a section of light artillery under a Lieut. Mullen or McMullen. After passing the Monocacy the division, instead of moving along the road by the flank or in column, formed in line of battle by brigades, and in that formation marched on the town and bivouacked on the outskirts. The front of the division covered that section of the town which included East and West Patrick Street. The First and Second Divisions after crossing the Monocacy passed by the rear of the Third Division to its right and formed a prolongation of the line. No body of troops marched into the town by the left of Rodman's on the night of Sept. 12 except some cavalry and details.

The first infantry to enter Frederick from the left "early on that September morn" (the 13th) was a part of Rodman's division, which passed through and went to Jefferson. There was no flag waving, and Gen. Reno was not with the column. The First and Second Divisions entered the town by a lane or street farther to the west and took the road to Middletown. Later Rodman with his Second Brigade entered the town by the road from the Monocacy and passed through, also going to Middletown. It may have been this column that Mrs. Rivers referred to as passing Mrs. Frietchie's house.

On the night of the 13th of September, 1862, of Reno's Ninth Corps, the First and Second Divisions and the Second Brigade of the Third Division (and four companies of the One Hundred and Third New York Volunteers of the First Brigade of the Third Division) were at or near Middletown or on the road, and the First Brigade of the Third Division (except the four companies referred to) having returned late from Jefferson, was back in camp at Frederick. This was about thirty hours after Rodman arrived at the town, and about twenty-four hours before Gen. Reno was killed near the top of South Mountain. By this time the story of the struggle for the flag had spread throughout the army in and around the town and beyond, and curiosity was aroused as to the identity of the woman. No name was mentioned in connection with the incident until after the morning of the 14th of September, when the similarity of the sound of the "Here's Barbara Richy" of the quissing soldier and her name furnished the opportunity to associate Barbara Frietchie with the fabrication that deceived the poet.

The real heroine was not bowed down by the weight of "threescore years and ten," but was an attractive little kitchenmaid a few years out of her teens, who was engaged in baking bread. The flag was not of silk or attached to a staff, but was only a miniature "Union forever" print—of the kind that could be bought at the rate of two for a dime—which, tastefully arranged, rested quietly on the left shoulder of the maid until the onslaught of the "rebel horde"; the aforesaid "rebel horde" consisting of one "Johnnie" straggler, who made the little flag a means of attempting to get away with a loaf of the fresh-baked bread. The scene of the struggle was not an attic window of the Frietchie home but was near the rear door of the kitchen room on the ground floor of a house standing at the time near the field where Rodman's troops bivouacked. The Barbara of Frederick (Richy's Barbara) was a dark-haired woman of about thirty years, who looked somewhat like a German. She did not have a flag, but wore a scarf or sash across one shoulder, the peculiarity of this scarf or sash being that it could be used to satisfy either North or South without removing a doubt as to which side she favored. The girl who stood beside her was about ten years old and held a small flag in her left hand.

OBJECTS TO SOUTH BROADWAY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The proposition to change the name of Whitehall Street to South Broadway is one of the most senseless and uncalled for acts of vandalism ever perpetrated by our so-called city fathers, and should meet with the united protest of all citizens having a spark of reverence left for the few historical points in our city which have not been attacked by these busy-bodies.

While they are about it, why not change the name of Bowling Green to Croker Park, and erect a statue of Dick Croker on the site formerly occupied by the statue of King George III.; change the name of State Street to Divver Avenue, or some such euphonious name; wipe out the Bowery and other historical localities, and thus obliterate all recollections of old New York.

Whitehall Street was known by that name long before the grandfathers of many of our city rulers were born in Ireland, and is more closely associated with the stirring times before the Revolutionary war than almost any point in the lower part of the city. State Street is the logical extension of Broadway, and there would be just as much sense in calling that South Broadway as in giving that name to Whitehall Street.

The only plea so far advanced for this change is that Broadway should extend from South Ferry to the northern city line, and this is just about as silly as the one advanced a few years ago, when the name of Chatham Street was changed to Park Row. South Ferry is not the extreme lower limit of the city, being on the East River, whereas the Battery is accepted by everyone as the lower limit, as the common expression is "from the Battery to Harlem," and Broadway does now and always has extended "from the Battery to the Bronx."

What with Broadway in Brooklyn, Broadway, East Broadway, West Broadway, and now South Broadway, one would think that we had gone "Broadway mad," and might better untangle this maze of Broadways instead of adding to the difficulty.

This action is in a par with the crazy idea of turning the street signs on the corner lamps, so that a stranger in the city can no more tell "where he is at" than if the signs were removed altogether. In the light of these recent acts of vandalism, for that is all they can be called, it is high time that something is done by the people of this overruled city to prevent such meddling with its traditions, and a curb put on the ambitions of these petty politicians, who spend their time on silly resolutions and neglect important legislation of vital interest to the taxpayers.

EXPENSE IN PATENT LITIGATION

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There is a certain feature of patent litigation which might well be ventilated in your columns. Numerous impecunious inventors having meritorious patents lose the fruits of their inventions because of their inability under the present system of conducting patent suits to proceed against infringers.

This state of affairs as concerns the poorer patent litigents is brought about by the fact that the expense of conducting such litigation is far beyond the means of the average patentee. Before his cause can be brought to a hearing in the courts, voluminous proofs are usually taken before United States Commissioners or Standing Examiners; often his counsel is compelled by the defendant to attend the taking of testimony in remote sections of the country, expensive models are in many cases required, expert testimony is usually necessary, and all the proofs must be printed and printed briefs submitted at the argument. The actual disbursements rarely fall below $500, and the counsel fees for attending to the taking of the proofs, preparing briefs and arguing the case are seldom less than $500. So that in the simplest patent suit the expense of getting a hearing is something like $1,000—certainly a startling figure for a man of little means. But even if successful he will probably have to face an appeal at the hands of the defendant to the Appellate Court, entailing additional expense. By this time the litigant will probably have been crushed out of the field unless a man of means. Yet, should he finally prevail, before he can recover any damages a lengthy proceeding has to be gone through before a Master appointed by the court, before whom proofs are taken to ascertain the damages. The opponent may then file exceptions to the Master's report, which are argued before the court, and by this time a poor struggling complainant is no doubt disgusted with it all, and after all may not even recover his actual outlay, which in his case may be the savings of a lifetime.

It has been my experience that the average owner of a patent, when about to sue an infringer to protect his patent rights, is appalled at the probable expense, and is thus compelled to stand by and permit his infringing competitor to reap the fruits of his invention.

From the above it seems that some change ought to be made in the practice with reference to patent suits, and perhaps some of your legal readers may be able to suggest a remedy.

HISTORY AND THE TRUTH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial of the 6th inst under the caption of "History in the Schools" will occasion much regret to many of your readers who have admired your paper no matter how much they may have differed with you politically. Assuming that you have read the comment of School Commissioner Keating of Chicago on the question of American history in the school books, it is hard even for your admirers to find an excuse for your dealing with such an important subject in a spirit of banter, not to say levity. Mr. Keating, who has the misfortune to be National President of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, made a distinct statement in reference to the elimination of truth, and the consequent falsification of American history, in some school books. You reply by attempting to ridicule Mr. Keating on account of his nationality, and you conclude with what may possibly be construed as intended for a joke in regard to the statement of some priest, who, luckily, is dead, in regard to Irish civilization:

Your own article is a strong vindication of the position taken by Mr. Keating. I am not concerned now with the desirability of acquainting the young generations of Americans how their fathers won and preserved their liberties. I have in mind rather the appalling disregard for truth, the extent to which prejudice and bigotry, combined with ignorance, have swayed the minds of some un-American American writers, and the fact that such a reputable paper as THE TIMES should, consciously or otherwise, encourage such writers. Let us cite an instance.

In a certain edition of Barnes's School History there is a description of the Battle of Gettysburg in which a quotation is used from an account of that great struggle by the war correspondent of The London Times. The edition was printed before the "progress of knowledge" of which you speak, and the quotation in question spoke of the part taken in the battle by the Irish brigade, and paid a glowing tribute to the matchless heroism of the "undaunted sons of Erin," who threw themselves again and again upon the enemy's almost impregnable position. A later edition of the same book, published after the march of knowledge had begun, used the same quotation, but deliberately cut out therefrom the mention of the Irish brigade and "the sons of Erin" (using the word "foreign" instead of "Irish," and omitting the other portion altogether)!

My limited vocabulary does not afford me words to describe the action of those who would rob the dead of the credit to which they are entitled and their kin of the present day of the heritage bequeathed to them by these men who gave up their lives for this Nation; but the ruthless disregard for truth, the narrowness, bigotry, and often gross ignorance of some of the dwarfed minds who essay to teach the youth of this country is by far the more grave consideration. These are the things to which Mr. Keating referred. Is this the enlightened history of which you approve?

As to your meant-to-be sarcastic reference to Irish claims as to the early civilization of their country, four pages of that material will not affect one fact. I could quote from non-Irish (and, of course, non-English,) authorities whose testimony would be equally extravagant in your eyes as that of the priest whom you misquoted. I could also prove from impartial, qualified authorities that Irish intellectual progress was hindered and finally stopped by England, and it could likewise be shown that to the present day England represses education in Ireland. But I am well aware of the indisposition in some quarters to receive facts, and I shall refrain.

A REPLY TO MR. McLOUGHLIN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

May I say a few words in answer to Thomas P. McLoughlin, whom I think rather cheekily criticises your Saturday editorial? From the beginning to the end of the letter it is absolutely wrong.

Father Tom Burke, (who doubtless was the most famous Irish scholar,) nor any other priest, ever did, or can, prove that Ireland was more cultivated than England at any period from the first century to the twentieth, nor that it will be to the fiftieth, as it looks now.

Celtic manuscripts are not abundant in any monasteries or convents; they are now in the great museums and libraries, for during the last twelve centuries the monasteries of the British Isles have been plundered hundreds of times, so that not a vestige or scrap of a genuine manuscript or relic remains in their possession. I have been shown frequently some of the most wretched specimens of comparatively modern rubbish in imitation of the fine art of the fourth and fifth centuries. To see the relics and manuscripts of Notre Dame and St. Dennis a fee is demanded. A distinguished French artist with me said: "I assure you not one is genuine."

Priests, mostly Irish, for reasons best known to themselves, have for a long time talked about the cultured Celt or Kelt having been superior in the arts of learning to the Saxon or Briton. It was not so. The word Celt or Kelt means singer. "They are one of a number (says The Century Dictionary) of the peoples speaking languages akin to those of Wales, Ireland, and the Scotish Highlands, (the birthplace of St. Patrick, who went to Ireland to convert and baptize.) They all came originally from France and Northern Italy. Of the remaining Celtic language and people there are two chief divisions. First, the Gadhail or Scots, Irish, and Manx; second, the Cymric, comprising the Welsh and Cornish; the latter only recently extinct; also, the Bretons, whose descendants, centuries later, came over to England with William the Conqueror."

Celtic art, still extant, in the shape of crosses and tombs, is found all over England and Wales, though perhaps not so plentifully as in Ireland, for the reason that in Great Britain abbeys and monasteries were destroyed by those scourges the Norsemen, Danes, and Romans; later, the Normans; later still, that famous destroyer of art Oliver Cromwell. Ireland escaped, because its petty Kings (as wild and savage as any British) were able to hold their own.

The beautiful manuscripts of complicated ornamentation done by the monks are not so abundant as your correspondent thinks. I speak of the British Isles. There are none now in existence executed before the second century. Of the third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh centuries, which cover the period of Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," of which the scene is supposed to be laid at Tintagal, in Cornwall, there are fine specimens—quite as fine as any done in Ireland, and for that period quite as numerous. Indeed, they are of exactly the same character. It was absurd for Father Burke to claim that it could be otherwise. The monks went to Ireland to escape robbery and murder from invaders of England.

Your correspondent is also somewhat in error regarding music, for not till the sixth century was it written, and then it was limited to a few notes. St. Gregory of Rome, not Ireland, re-formed and rearranged the scale of music, and not till the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries was music written as we read it now. Irish music, from the fifth to the twelfth century, was handed down by players and singers by memory alone.

Neither priest nor layman, learned or unlearned, can prove that Ireland, since the flood, was more civilized than England, Scotland, or Wales. LOUIS RHEAD.

WHEN HE IS GONE.

S. E. Kiser in Chicago Times-Herald.

"When I am gone," he sighed, "the sun

Upon the distant hill!
When I am gone the waves will break
Upon the sloping strand,
And happy children still will make
Their castles in the sand!
When I am gone the birds will sing
As blithely as to-day,
And men and maidens, in the Spring
Will live to love away!"

AMERICAN ART AT PARIS

Director Cauldwell Names the Exposition Committees.

Well-Known Artists Will Select Works of American Aspirants for Exhibition.

PARIS, Jan. 12.—John B. Cauldwell, Director of Fine Arts of the American Section of the Paris Exposition, has appointed the following jury to select paintings for the Exposition: E. A. Abbey, J. W. Alexander, W. T. Dannat, Alexander Harrison, Gari Melchers, F. D. Millet, J. S. Sargent, and Jules Stewart.

On account of the limited space, the works submitted must be of moderate size, high merit, and produced by an American since May, 1889.

The Sculpture Committee is composed of P. W. Bartlett, Frederick MacMonnies, A. P. Proctor, and A. St. Gaudens.

The Painting Committee on Installation will be selected later.

Edwin Austin Abbey, Royal Academician, is an American having been born in Philadelphia in 1852, but since 1878, when he went to England for Harper & Brothers, he has resided there almost continually. His success in his profession has been a rapid one, and he now occupies a position second to none as a black and white artist, while his more important pictures are eagerly sought for. He lives at Morgan Hall, Fairford, Gloucestershire, and is well known in London society.

John W. Alexander is a native of Pittsburg, and studied in Munich, Venice, and Florence. He has exhibited many pictures at the Paris Salons, and in 1898 he gained the coveted honor of having his exhibit, "The Green Bow," purchased by the French Government for the Luxembourg. He is a member of the Société Nationale des Beaux Arts, and resides for the most part in Paris.

F. D. Millet is another American artist who has gained his chief successes abroad. He was born in Massachusetts in 1846, and studied in Antwerp. He occupied a position similar to that to which he has just been appointed at the Paris Exposition of 1878. He was special correspondent for The London Daily News during the Russo-Turkish war, but his subject pictures by no means suggest the work of a war artist, being exquisitely careful studies of modern interior scenes.

Every American artist who intends to exhibit at the Exposition will doubtless be glad that John S. Sargent has been appointed one of the final jurors. He was born in Florence of American parents in 1856, and, next to Whistler, is regarded by many as the greatest American artist living. He is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, a Royal Academician, and has gained innumerable medals and mentions for his portraits and subject pictures.

Jules Stewart is an American who has gained a number of successes in Paris exhibitions, and has made that city his home. He is a member of the Société Nationale des Beaux Arts.

Gari Melchers is another member of the Beaux Arts. He resides and has worked almost continuously in Paris, but is a native of Detroit. He won the Grand Prix in 1889, and the Medal of Honor at Antwerp in 1894. One of his pictures has been purchased for the Luxembourg. He is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and a Knight of the Order of St. Michael of Bavaria.

Alexander Harrison was born in Philadelphia in 1853. He won a gold medal at the Paris Exposition of 1889, and is a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor and an Officer of Public Instruction, appointed by the French Government. He is a member of the Royal Institute of Painters in Oil Colors of London.

The Sculpture Committee consists of men equally well known in their profession. Paul Wayland Bartlett is a native of New Haven, and has divided his time between this city and Paris. He is a pupil of Fremiet, a member of the National Sculpture society, and has executed many public works in this country. An important heroic figure by him is now on exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

Frederick MacMonnies is so well known as hardly to need mention. His "Bacchante" would alone have made his name celebrated, but his work in the Congressional Library, at the Chicago World's Fair, and in dozens of American cities, is regarded by critics and by his fellow-artists as of a quality very seldom found in modern productions.

A. Phimister Proctor is a member of the National Sculpture Society, and has frequently exhibited in this city.

Augustus St. Gaudens is another sculptor who has attained European fame. He is a native of Ireland, but was brought to this country when an infant. He studied at the Cooper Institute and the National Academy of Design, and later went to Paris to complete his artistic education. His home is now in that city.

The announcement of the names of the final committees of selection for the American art section of the Exposition has been eagerly looked for by artists in this country. The preliminary committees gave great satisfaction to all, and the painters and sculptors now chosen by Mr. Cauldwell will doubtless prove equally acceptable.

INFLUENZA IN BERLIN.

Consul General Mason a Victim—Many Deaths Reported.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—An epidemic of influenza has broken out in Berlin and scores of deaths are already reported. United States Consul General Mason is confined to his bed with a serious attack.

Honors for a German Artist.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—To-day United States Ambassador White attended the festivities in honor of Herr Louis Knaus, being himself an old friend of the painter. An exhibition of Knaus's canvases was opened this morning. The artist received congratulatory dispatches from all parts of Europe, many of them coming from France; and the Russian Art Academy wired that it had conferred a diploma upon him. This evening there was a notable reception at the Kuenstlerhaus, the costumes worn being from some of the more celebrated paintings of the guest of the occasion.

German Exports to America.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—The territory under the jurisdiction of the United States Consulate General in Berlin, during the last quarter exported to the United States $14,770,287, an increase over 1898 of $1,847,802. The total figures for last year are $51,138,496, as against $49,020,847 the year before. The largest single gain was Hamburg, with $2,270,976. Magdeburg and Berlin came next in that order; Bremen fell off $1,175,450.

Germans Urged to Emulate Americans.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—The Fleet Society continues to agitate vigorously in favor of the Naval bill. Its latest pamphlet, issued to-day, deals with "American Naval Regeneration," praising the energy shown and admiring the manner in which "this joyous, vigorous, and lively nation plants the Star-Spangled Banner in every nook of the globe."

Large Death Rate in Bombay.

BOMBAY, Jan. 12.—The number of deaths here, largely from the bubonic plague, jumped up to-day from 282 to 376. The normal death rate is 75.

Diseased Meat Sold in Berlin.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—A widespread scandal has resulted from the discovery that, owing to the connivance of officials in the Berlin stockyards, large quantities of condemned tuberculous beef have been smuggled through and sold to a large restaurant and to several big sausagemakers. An official investigation has been ordered.

Growth of German East Africa.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—A memorial describing the development of German East Africa in 1899 has reached the Reichstag. It shows that the census revealed a population of 4,000,000.

PROF. JAMES MARTINEAU DEAD.

Was an Eminent British Unitarian Theologian, an Educator, and a Writer.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—Prof. James Martineau, the eminent Unitarian theologian, died to-day. He was in his ninety-fifth year.

The late Dr. Martineau, who was a younger brother of the late Miss Harriet Martineau, was born in Norwich, England, April 21, 1805. He was educated at the Norwich Grammar School, Dr. Lant Carpenter's school at Bristol, and Manchester New College, York. In 1840 he was appointed to the Chair of Mental and Moral Philosophy in Manchester New College, of which institution he soon became the most distinguished representative. From 1859 to 1872 he was minister of Little Portland Street Chapel, London, and in 1869, while holding his pastorate, he accepted the Principalship of Manchester New College, which in 1857 had been removed from York to London.

Among his numerous publications, ranging in date from 1836 to 1890, are "The Rationale of Religious Inquiry," "Unitarianism Defended," "Essays Philosophical and Theological," "Religion as Affected by Modern Materialism," "A Study of Spinoza," "Ideal Substitutes for God Considered," "Types of Ethical Theory," "The Seat of Authority in Religion," "Hymns for the Christian Church and Home," "Hours of Thought on Sacred Things," "Miscellanies," and "Essays, Reviews, and Addresses."

Dr. Martineau was a constant contributor to The Prospective and National Reviews, of which he was one of the founders. In 1872 Harvard University conferred upon him the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. From the University of Leyden he received that of Doctor of Theology in 1875, from the University of Edinburgh that of Doctor of Divinity in 1884, and from the University of Oxford that of Doctor of Civil Laws in 1888. The University of Dublin gave him the degree of Doctor of Literature in 1892.

SEEK HEIRS TO A FORTUNE.

An Eccentric Old American Woman, Maria L. Livingstone, Dies Alone in Paris.

PARIS, Jan. 12.—An eccentric old American woman, known at the United States Legation and Consulate for the last twenty years under the name of Lady Livingstone, has died here under extraordinary circumstances, leaving a large fortune for unknown heirs.

Her eccentricities and incompatibility of temper made constant trouble for her, and it was chiefly to make complaint of the actions of her neighbors that she called continually on the American officials. She always dressed fantastically, but lived the life of a recluse. She had two rooms at Neuilly, her only companion was a parrot, and she always pleaded she was in reduced circumstances.

Not being seen from Friday last, her rooms were broken into on Monday, when Lady Livingstone was found lying in the middle of the floor, unconscious and was taken to a hospital, where she died without regaining the power of conversation. There were indications that she had laid on the floor from Friday until discovered. The room was in the greatest disorder. Her papers and books, coal, wood, and scraps of food were scattered about the place. The body was taken in charge by the officials of the Consulate and searched without avail. No will or anything designating the dead woman's heirs was discovered. Only a few francs were found in the room, and the Consulate officers also have in their possession a deposit book on a prominent bank for a very large sum, the exact amount of which the officials prefer not to mention.

The letters found indicate that the correct name of the deceased was Maria L. Livingstone, and that she was eighty years of age. There was no evidence of foul play. The body has been embalmed and placed in a mortuary chapel, and the Consul General is making efforts to locate her heirs.

MALIETOA ENTERS A PROTEST.

Declares Partition of Samoa a Crime Against Law of Nations—Says Natives Are Not Benefited

LONDON, Jan. 12.—Malietoa Tanus, in his letter to The London Times, published to-day, inclosing copies of the protests he addressed to the United States, Great Britain, and Germany against the Samoan treaties, characterizes the partition of Samoa as a gross violation of the treaties and as a crime against the law of nations, only equal to the dismemberment of Poland, Denmark, and France.

He thinks that if it is necessary for the great powers to promote wars and annexations to distract the minds of the peoples, then The Hague conference was the greatest farce of the century. The writer also asserts that the civilization introduced by the great powers in their annexations in the South Seas, Africa, and elsewhere is inferior to the primitive state of the countries "stolen," leading to war through breach of faith on the part of the Government officials, and to the decimating of the peoples by contagious diseases and spirituous liquors. He continues:

"The missionaries who graced our country with their holy or unholy presence introduced the same religious differences and hatreds against each other as pertained at the hour in civilized States. The missionaries live in palatial, concrete houses, with all the luxuries their countries can afford, and charge us for Bibles and Prayer Books which, we understand, are sent as free offerings."

Malietoa Tanus further charges the missionaries with extracting all the money possible from them, in return for which they only received a Bible, a Prayer Book, or a "Pilgrim's Progress." He cites the case of the Wesleyan missionaries who, he declares, collected £20,000 at a single meeting at Tonga, adding:

"The missionaries aroused a great spirit of emulation, telling the natives that the largest givers would be the most acceptable in the sight of God, thus reversing the spirit of the widow's mite."

The Samoan Chief concludes: "These be thy Gods, O Israel!"

SPOTTED TAIL DIES IN PARIS.

Was a Leader of Sioux Indians in Custer's Campaign.

PARIS, Jan. 12.—Spotted Tail, the well-known Sioux Chief, who has been here exhibiting, died of heart disease yesterday. He was eighty-nine years old.

Spotted Tail was one of the best known of the war chiefs of the Sioux Indians, having taken a conspicuous part in the uprising of 1876, which witnessed the massacre of Custer and his men. When a conference was held at the close of hostilities for the purpose of arranging for the future of the tribe, he was the chief spokesman for his people.

FRANCE MAY SUSPEND DUTIES.

Deputy Moves to Remove Coal, Iron, and Steel Tariffs.

PARIS, Jan. 12.—In the Chamber of Deputies to-day M. Breton, Socialist, moved a temporary suspension of the duties on imports of coal, in view of the economic crisis due to the shortage in the supply. He pointed out that the Protectionist M. Meline had not hesitated two years ago to suspend the duties on wheat in an analogous case.

M. Cailloux, Moderate Republican, moved that the proposal be referred to the Customs Committee, which was agreed to. M. Breton then moved to suspend the duties on imported iron and steel. This motion was also referred to the Customs Committee.

President San Clemente Alive.

In response to a cablegram sent by Colombian Consul General Eduardo Espinosa inquiring as to the truth of the reported death of President Manuel San Clemente of Colombia, the following dispatch was received yesterday from Minister of Finance Calderon: "President in perfect health and vigorous."

The Machias Reaches Santo Domingo.

SANTO DOMINGO, Jan. 12.—The United States gunboat Machias and one more French warship have arrived here. The French Admiral has had a conference with the Government. According to rumor, the difficulty is being settled in a satisfactory manner.

CRISPI'S SON A CONVICT.

Receives a Four-Year Sentence for Complicity in a Robbery—Career Has Been Notorious.

ROME, Jan. 12.—Luigi Crispi, son of Signor Francisco Crispi, the distinguished Italian statesman and former Premier, was today sentenced to four years' imprisonment for the theft of jewelry from the Countess Cellere in April of 1896.

Luigi Crispi is a natural son of the ex-Premier. His career has been notorious. He was shipped off to Argentina soon after the accusation of theft was brought against him, and his father used his vast influence as Prime Minister to thwart all efforts to find either the jewels or the robber. The Countess followed the matter up energetically, and soon found the thieves and the dealer to whom they sold the jewels. The thieves were two brothers named Malpieri and a mysterious Manuel.

The evidence left no doubt that Luigi Crispi induced the Countess, whose intimate friend he was, to remove her jewels from her bankers, where they had been placed for safe keeping, to her rooms on a certain day, upon the pretence that a would-be purchaser wished to see them. While they were in her apartments, he persuaded her to go to Frascati, his accomplices meanwhile secreting themselves in the apartments. This having been done, he took the Countess home and left her at midnight, after an unusually tender farewell.

Early in 1893 Luigi's lavish expenditure had awakened suspicion that he was living a fast life, and Signor Crispi was soon made painfully aware that the source of his son's funds was the sale of private papers to the enemies of the statesman. Some of these were made use of to support scandalous charges against Crispi. Young Luigi was locked up in a house of correction.

When the Countess Cellere accused Luigi he retorted with a charge of blackmailing. Ultimately kleptomania was offered as an excuse for him.

RUSSIA'S BUDGET FOR 1900.

M. de Witte Comments on the Stringency of Money Markets.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 12.—The Russian budget for 1900 shows the following:

Revenue ordinary, 1,593,745,680 rubles; revenue extraordinary, 3,000,000 rubles; revenue from free cash balances at the Imperial Treasury, 160,641,423 rubles; expenditure ordinary, 1,564,441,679 rubles, and expenditure extraordinary, 192,945,424 rubles.

The report of M. de Witte, the Finance Minister, on the budget closes with a statement on the high rates and the stringency of the money markets throughout the world, which, he says, seriously hamper commerce and industry and has been complicated by the war in South Africa. He proceeds to say:

"This state of affairs is largely due to vague fears of European complications, and would lose much of its acuteness if the governing powers of the world and public opinion abroad would become imbued with the sentiments which animate the ruler of 100,000,000 subjects."

JAPAN PREPARES FOR WAR.

Will Try to Stop Russia's Advance in Korea.

VANCOUVER, Jan. 12.—Japanese newspapers just received here indicate that Japan is drifting into a war with Russia. The Japanese apparently do not shrink from the dangers of such a conflict, their Government having recently given an order in England for 100,000 suits of warm Winter clothing for Japanese soldiers in preparation for a campaign in Russian territory.

The Kobe Chronicle asserts that a Japanese cruiser with a large force of soldiers on board recently sailed from a Japanese port under sealed orders, and that three transports have been chartered to carry troops to Korea. Following is a specimen of Japanese journalistic opinion:

"The Japanese are convinced that to permit Russia to acquire Korea or establish Russian ascendency in Northern China would be strategically, politically, and commercially a deadly menace to Japan's rapidly developing strength. Japan believes her navy is strong enough to attack Russia, and the general opinion is that the interests of the two nations are so conflicting that it is impossible to avoid a rupture in the near future."

KING OSCAR SENDS GREETINGS.

Expresses His Good Will Toward Scandinavians in America.

STOCKHOLM, Jan. 12.—King Oscar, in the course of a private audience, recently granted an American, dictated the following message to the Scandinavians in the United States:

"Tell those of my two peoples who have taken up their abode in the United States, and their descendants, that I follow their path with love and interest, and that I feel their joys and their sorrows as if these were my own.

"I am glad to hear that the Swedes and Norwegians are among the most respected citizens of your great country. May it always go well with them."

His Majesty, who talked in a charming manner of events in the United States and elsewhere, seemed greatly interested in hearing of the evidences of prosperity in America, showed himself well informed regarding the American problems in the Philippines, and expressed a fervent wish that the war there, as well as the war in South Africa, might soon be over.

He refrained from expressing any opinion on the subject of the troubles in Sweden and Norway.

Venezuela Makes a Concession.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—Minister Loomis, at Caracas, has reported to the State Department that the Venezuelan Government has removed a great annoyance to shippers and one which has frequently led to international trouble by a decree relieving foreign vessels in Venezuelan ports from the requirement of depositing their papers with the port officials. They are now at liberty to deposit the papers with the Consular officers of their respective countries.

Fishing Rights Agreement Extended.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—The Foreign Office officials say emphatically that the question of the Newfoundland fishing rights has been settled for at least a year through the acceptance by Great Britain of the French proposition that the modus vivendi be extended for another year, as Great Britain is not prepared in war time to discuss the matter, which is now a question between Great Britain and the Colonial Parliament, as the latter must ratify the extension.

Plans for Germany's Manoeuvres.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—The German military manoeuvres this year will involve the shipping and transportation of a large force, composed of infantry, cavalry and artillery, which will land at some point and imitate a genuine invasion. The transports will be convoyed by warships. This will be the first experiment of the kind in the history of German tactics.

Japanese Prince to Visit America.

VANCOUVER, B. C., Jan. 12.—According to advices received here to-day by the steamer Empress of China, the Japanese Prince Imperial is to visit America next Summer. He is to be married in May, and will then set sail for the United States. Count Ito, one of the Ministers of the Japanese Cabinet, made this announcement.

Silver Needed in India.

LONDON, Jan. 12.—Renewed buying of silver by the Indian Government, The Statist says, cannot be delayed much longer in consequence of rupee coinage requirements. This, The Statist believes, will lead to a marked improvement in the price of silver.

Venezuela's Money Crisis Is Over.

CARACAS, Venezuela, Jan. 12.—The financial crisis is ended. The difficulty between the Government and the banks has been amicably settled and public confidence is restored.

Chilean Estimates Approved.

VALPARAISO, Chile, Jan. 12.—The Council of State has approved the estimates for the current year, amounting to $76,500,000, currency.

Pension for Gen. Henry's Widow.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—A pension of $30 a month, to date from Oct. 28, 1899, was to-day granted by the Commissioner of Pensions to the widow of Gen. Guy V. Henry, who died last October.

TO BE MR. ISMAY'S BRIDE

Miss Constance Schieffelin Engaged to Sister's Brother-in-Law.

War Hastens the Announcement and the Wedding to Come Before Seas Part Them.

The cable brings the news of a wedding, to be celebrated in Liverpool to-day, which is a veritable romance. The bridegroom is to be Mr. C. B. Ismay, a son of the late Thomas Henry Ismay, founder of the White Star Line, and the bride is to be Miss Constance Schieffelin of this city. Miss Schieffelin is a daughter of Mr. George Schieffelin. Her mother was Miss Delaplaine, and she is a niece of Mrs. James Hude Beeckman, and is related to many prominent New York families.

Miss Schieffelin's elder sister, Miss Florence Schieffelin, married some years ago Mr. J. Bruce Ismay, an elder brother of to-day's bridegroom, and went with her husband to live on the Ismay place at Birkenhead, near Liverpool. She has revisited her New York home several times since her marriage and has been here in both Winter and Summer as a guest of her parents, or of her sister, Mrs. Henry G. Trevor. Mrs. Bruce Ismay's sisters have also visited her in Liverpool, and when on her last visit here she asked her youngest sister, Miss Constance Schieffelin, to return with her, neither of the young women had any thought that they would soon be sisters-in-law, as well as sisters.

Although there have been reports that an engagement between Mr. C. B. Ismay, the younger brother of Mr. Bruce Ismay and Miss Schieffelin might result from the attention the young Englishman paid the New York girl, this was laughed at by Miss Schieffelin's friends and relatives here.

But war, like love, brings strange surprises and when Mr. Ismay decided to volunteer last week for the Transvaal war, both he and Miss Schieffelin decided that they would first announce their engagement and that their wedding would follow before the seas parted them.

PHILADELPHIA'S "ASSEMBLY."

All Society Attends the Quaker City's Time-Honored Function.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 12.—The time-honored institution of Philadelphia, which has been so identified with its social life for more than a century, and which the aspirants for social position regard as their Mecca—the Assembly—took place to-night at the Academy of Music. As an institution it has survived and lived throughout many changes, and is to-day held in the same veneration by the fashionable world of Philadelphia as it was a century ago.

The date of the origin of the Assemblies has been a question of much dispute, but so far as can accurately be ascertained they were founded in the year 1749. The subscription was then $3. The invitations were sent on the backs of playing cards, and the hour named for the opening of the ball was 6 o'clock. Watson in his "Annals" infers that the Assemblies were originally given in a hall in Water Street, and that many of the ladies went on horseback. Whatever may have been the origin of the ball, it has always represented the more fashionable element in the comunity, and during its history it has only been given up twice—once during the Revolutionary War and again during the civil war.

To-night the Assembly was much the same as last year. The decorations were of an elaborate nature. The corridor was filled with flowers and tall trees, and the patronesses received in the foyer. Supper was served down stairs in the auditorium, which was boarded over. The cotillion was led by Sidney Keith. The following ladies acted as patronesses:

Mrs. William Platt Pepper, Mrs. Morris J. Lewis, Mrs. J. Dallas Dixon, Mrs. R. A. Bayard-Bowie, Mrs. James Large, and Mrs. William H. Hart. The committee consisted of Richard L. Ashhurst, Chairman; Henry B. Coxe, Jr., Owen Wister, J. Percy Keating, John Cadwallader, Jr., and John S. Newbold.

Among the New Yorkers present were Mrs. William Jay, Mrs. James Duane, and N. Craig Wadsworth.

MRS. REID'S COTILLION.

Mrs. Whitelaw Reid gave last evening at her residence, 451 Madison Avenue, a cotillion for her niece, Miss Mary Crocker of California. Mrs. Reid, who wore a gown of white satin draped with lace, exquisitely embroidered, and pearls, and Miss Crocker, received in the large drawing room. Miss Crocker's gown was of white satin, covered with tulle. The decorations were simple but beautiful, and consisted of quantities of flowers. A large number of roses were employed. Supper was served at small tables in the dining room before the cotillion, which was danced in the white and gold ballroom. Mr. Worthington Whitehouse led the cotillion, dancing with Miss Mary Crocker. There were six favor figures, and the favors, which were very handsome, consisted of brocaded satin bags, pictures and picture frames in silver and gilt, pincushions, and in the jewel figure handsome brooches were given to the girls and scarfpins to the men.

Among the 180 guests were Mrs. Astor, ex-Gov. Morton and Mrs. Morton, the Misses Morton, Miss Catherine Dix, Mr. and Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry, the Misses Gerry, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies, Gen. Lloyd Bryce, Mrs. Bryce, and Miss Clare Bryce, Mr. and Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting, Mr. and Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, Miss Cutting, Miss Margaret Cutting, Miss Sackville Beasley, Miss Mary Gurnee, Miss Pauline Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. Lanier, Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Mills, Miss Anna Dodge, Miss Trevor, Miss Anna Sands, the Misses Hewitt, Miss Clews, Miss Laura Swann, Mrs. Bishop, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Robinson, Miss Elsie Bronson, Miss Winthrop, Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel, Mr. and Mrs. Townsend Burden, Miss Evelyn Burden, Mr. and Mrs. Pierre Lorillard, Mr. Delafield, Miss Evelyn Sloane, Mr. Creighton Webb, Mr. John Tallmadge, Mr. William Rude Nelison, Mr. Prentice, Mr. Worden, Mr. Erskine Hewitt, Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Augustus Gurnee, Major Mott, Gen. Merritt and Mrs. Merritt, Mr. Betts, Mr. Brewster, Mr. William Sloane, Mr. Elliot Gregory, and Mr. Tracey of London.

A DAY'S WEDDINGS.

Utzinger—Cockerham.

Special to The New York Times.

NORWALK, Conn., Jan. 12.—The marriage of Miss Anna May, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Cockerham, to Jacob J. Utzinger, was celebrated this evening at the residence of the bride, 63 Woodward Avenue. The Rev. Charles M. Selleck of Norwalk performed the ceremony. Miss Carrie Cockerham, sister of the bride, was bridesmaid, and Charles J. Miller was the bridegroom's best man. The ceremony was performed in the parlor, the bridal party standing under an immense evergreen and floral bell.

Good Pictures at Auction.

There are now on exhibition at the Fifth Avenue Auction Rooms, 238 Fifth Avenue, a collection of oil paintings by foreign and American artists, belonging to Mr. George E. Tewkesbury and Mrs. Henry Purton. These are to be sold at auction on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday evenings of next week. The collection is a more than ordinarily interesting one, and contains some really excellent examples of such painters as Lerolle, Cain, J. F. Murphy, David Johnson, Braith, Courbet, and two admirable examples of George Inness, a fine and large Isabey, a charming Plot, and an important Escosura.

Capt. Willcocks Released.

Officers thronged the Ninth Regiment Armory last night in expectation of sensational developments following the military arrest of Capt. Washington Willcocks at the regimental drill Wednesday night. Capt. Willcocks, who was one of the first arrivals, went directly to the private room of Col. William F. Morris. Both officers were closeted in consultation for nearly two hours. When the doors were opened Col. Morris said: "I have released Capt. Willcocks from military arrest, and there will be no further proceedings." It is understood Col. Morris laid down the law and the Captain made an apology.

Cunard Line in Its New Office.

The Cunard Steamship Company, which for forty-years occupied offices in Bowling Green, yesterday took possession of its new offices at 29 Broadway. The old iron stairway to the main entrance, which pointed south toward Bowling Green, has been removed, and a new semi-circular stoop with stone steps has been substituted.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

Social movement and life yesterday in the fashionable districts of the city was a little more noticeable and pronounced than on Thursday. This was due to the warm weather, the passing of the rainstorm, and also the fact that Friday is this year quite a favorite day for receptions and "At Homes." The evening brought the cotillion given by Mrs. Whitelaw Reid for her niece, Miss Crocker; several dinner and theatre parties, and, of course, the opera; Tannhäuser was sung, and there was a good house with the boxes well filled. Mrs. Pratt's afternoon class had its sixth meeting at Sherry's, and Mrs. Church's class held its third meeting in the evening at Sherry's.

***

This will be a fairly gay Saturday. Mrs. Fish will give the first of her "Three Saturday Nights," Mrs. Elbridge T. Gerry will give a large dinner, the third De Coverly dance will be held at Sherry's. Mrs. Fish's entertainment will be the event of the day. It will be a musicale with, probably, Signor Campanari and Mme. Schumann-Heink as the chief artists. Preceding the musicale Mrs. Fish will give a large dinner. During this dinner a Hungarian orchestra will play. With "Carmen" at the opera matinée, possibly Mme. Calvé, and certainly others of the Metropolitan Company singing at Mrs. Sterns's musicale this afternoon in her Fifth Avenue palace, and Mrs. Fish's affair in the evening, it will be a field day for music lovers in society.

Among those booked to sail to-day on the Lucania for Liverpool are Mr. and Mrs. Harry B. Ashmore, (Mrs. Ashmore has just recovered from an attack of typhoid fever,) Henry I. Braem, Miss Bowne and Miss Dayton of Briarcliff Manor, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Inman of Atlanta, Ga.; Thomas Seton Jevons, Mr. and Mrs. Murray Kennedy, Miss Orvine and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Kennedy of Quebec, Canada; Mr. and Mrs. Robert H. McCurdy, Thomas J. Montgomery, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Poor, Jr., Miss Marian Poor, Mr. J. Augustine Smith, the Very Rev. Dr. C. W. Stubbs, Dean of Ely, and Mrs. and Miss Torrance. The St. Paul, due to-day, is said to be on board among others Mrs. Cooper-Hewitt, Mr. Adrian Iselin, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. B. S. Colgate, Mrs. J. W. Wadsworth, H. H. Harjes, and C. P. Waddington. There was no White Star boat in this week, but the Oceanic is due on Wednesday next, and both she and the Etruria, as well as the St. Paul, are said to be bringing heavy mails. The Trave will sail on Tuesday for Southampton, and the Ems on Saturday next for the Mediterranean.

Mrs. Robert Goelet will sail early next month for Europe, and will proceed at once to the Riviera. She has ordered her steam yacht Nahma to meet her at Nice about Feb. 15, and will then cruise along the Mediterranean until late Spring. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Baring, (Miss Marie Churchill,) who have been traveling in the South of France, have just left Marseilles. They will be in Cairo later in the Winter. Mrs. Terry-Sanderson, as the operatic star, Miss Sibyl Sanderson, the widow of Antonio Terry, now calls herself, has engaged a villa at Beaulieu, on the Riviera, for January. She was recently given in Paris a large musicale by Miss Fanny Reed.

The women composing the committee in charge of the concert to be given in aid of the Dewey Arch Fund on Feb. 6 at Carnegie Hall are Mrs. Levi P. Morton, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Robert Abbe, Mrs. Lloyd Brice, Mrs. Edmund T. Bayliss, Mrs. J. Kennedy Tod, Miss Callender, Miss De Forest, Miss Laura J. Post, and Miss Hewitt. At a meeting held at Mrs. Speyer's house Wednesday afternoon it was decided to put the price of boxes at $50 and seats in the orchestra at $3 each. These will be on sale at Carnegie Hall and all the ticket offices of Tyson. The concert will be directed by Messrs. Emil Paur and Walter Damrosch. The first part will consist of Damrosch's "Manila Te Deum," to be sung by the Oratorio Society Chorus, Mme. Gadski, and fifteen other soloists, the full list of which will be published later, and it is hoped that Gov. Roosevelt will make a short address. The second part of the concert will consist of solos by Mme. Nordica, who will sing Inflammatus from Rossini's Stabat Mater; Mme. Gadski, M. Edouard de Reszke, and Mr. Evan Williams. Admiral Dewey and Mrs. Dewey will occupy a box on the right-hand side of the auditorium, which will be decorated with flags. A reception committee of men prominent in political and social affairs is being formed, who will act as escorts to Admiral Dewey and Gov. Roosevelt on their arrival.

The third meeting of the dancing class known as Mrs. Church's, as it was first organized and has always been under the direction of Mrs. Benjamin S. Church, took place last evening at Sherry's. The members and guests were received by Mrs. Frederic de Peyster, who wore a gown of black velvet; Mrs. Benjamin S. Church, who was in a black velvet gown, trimmed with duchesse lace; Mrs. Frederic Goodridge, who wore black net over black silk; Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish Morris, whose dress was of lavender satin; Mrs. Henry R. Beekman, who wore blue velvet, and Mrs. Edward Curtis, who wore black satin. Mrs. John M. Bowers and Mrs. George Schieffelin also received. The attendance was large, and numbered in the aggregate nearly 300 people. The cotillion was led by Mr. Harry Batcheller. There were two favor figures, in which the favors were very handsome, and consisted of French and Japanese fans in white and gilt, ribbon sashes of different shades, silver and gilt picture frames, leather frames in repousse work, with silver edges, and inlaid boxes of lacquer. The invited guests were Miss Livingston Mason of Newport, R. I.; Miss Dillon of Rochester, Mr. O. L. Jones, Jr., Miss Mulaney of Philadelphia, J. Frederic Piersom of Tuxedo, Mr. Edwards Brooks of Orange, N. J.; Mr. Vriedenberg of Freehold, N. J.; Mr. Sloane, now a student at Harvard; Mr. Littlejohn of Flushing, N. Y., and Vicomte Rubani of Austria. Among the members of the class present were the Misses de Peyster, Miss Angelica Schuyler Church, Miss Louise Gallatin, Miss May Wagstaff, the Misses Delafield, Miss May Beekman, Miss Helen Peabody, Miss Josephine Roe, the Misses Dominick, Miss Bartholomew, Miss Curtis, Miss Sturgis, Miss Edith C. Jay, Miss Charlotte Hegeman, Miss Dorothy Schieffelin, Miss Butler, Miss Bowers, Miss Atterbury, Miss May Young, Miss Dorothy Higginson, Miss Lefferts, Miss Crosby, Miss Cecil Boardman, the Misses Rutherfurd, Miss Augusta Robbins, Miss Walker, Miss Josephine Drexel, Miss Georgette Kidd, Miss Lentilhon, Miss Mabel Armstrong, Miss Jean Brown, and the Messrs. Theodore Pell, Stephen Pell, T. Curtis, Goelet Gallatin, Hugh Benkard, Raymond Lefferts, William H. Fearing, Lawrence Gillespie, Arthur Coppee, Alexander Irving, Jr., E. Lansing Satterlee, Clarence Storm, H. H. Boyesen, Lawrence Atterbury, Alfred Walker, Alfred Wagstaff, J. R. Delafield, Henry M. Brokaw, Hollister Sturgis, Mr. Van Benthuysen of Albany, and James Pierson.

The embassies at Washington have all entered on their season of gayety. The British Ambassador and Lady Pauncefote entertained at dinner on Monday night, when many members of the Diplomatic Corps were their guests. The Spanish Minister and the Duchess d'Arcos gave a handsome dinner Saturday evening. Mlle. Cassini, the Russian Ambassador's niece and hostess, had a Russian Christmas breakfast Friday, where the guests were the young ladies of the Cabinet. The Russian "Jours de fête" always come along after those which other nations celebrate, and they provide such curious Russian dishes, even here in Washington, where it is a wonder such things can be procured; one doesn't know what one is eating most of the time. The servants are costumed à la Russe and the samovar is always steaming gayly away.

Mrs. William B. Rochester gave a luncheon yesterday in Washington in honor of Miss Grace McKinley and Miss Duncan, the guests at the White House. Mrs. Rochester is the sister-in-law of Mrs. Bradley Martin of New York and Scotland. Mrs. Horstman gave a luncheon also in honor of the White House guests on Thursday. Senator Kean of New Jersey entertained at dinner yesterday, this being the first official dinner he has given. A new arrangement for calling the carriages was introduced at the White House last night. Large megaphones were used and proved a great success.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

The Right Rev. Joseph Rademacher.

The Right Rev. Joseph Rademacher, Roman Catholic Bishop of the diocese of Fort Wayne, Ind., died in that city yesterday. He was fifty-nine years old, and had been identified with the work of his Church in the Middle States for the greater part of his life, until his last illness, which was of about a year's duration. He was born in Westphalia, Mich., and was educated for the priesthood at St. Michael's Seminary, in Pittsburg, being ordained Aug. 2, 1862. After serving for six years at various missions in Indiana he was appointed pastor of the Church of St. Paul of the Cross at Columbia City, and in 1877 became pastor of the Church of St. Mary at Fort Wayne, and soon after Chancellor of the diocese. He was then for a short period pastor of the Church of St. Mary at Lafayette. Bishop Rademacher was elevated to the hierarchy in 1883, being consecrated a Bishop on June 24 of that year by Archbishop Feehan of Chicago. His first see was at Nashville, where he remained for several years.

COLER AND RAPID TRANSIT

Delegation Sees the Mayor and Attacks Controller's Tunnel.

Thought It Meant Delay in Completion of the Road—Mr. Coler Blames the Corporation Counsel.

A delegation of residents of the northern and northwestern sections of the city, under the leadership of ex-Alderman Collin H. Woodward, called upon Mayor Van Wyck yesterday to urge him to use his efforts to hasten the construction of the entire rapid transit system before anything is done looking toward the building of a tunnel to Brooklyn. The delegation was under the impression that Controller Coler, in his desire to have the South Brooklyn tunnel constructed, was disposed to prevent work on the rapid transit system, after the contract for the section between the City Hall and Fifty-ninth Street was executed. Mayor Van Wyck dispute this, and eventually proved to his visitors that they had wronged the Controller, and when the party left the City Hall all of the men seemed to be satisfied. Controller Coler, when told of the remarks made to the Mayor, said Corporation Counsel Whalen had fomented the attack on him.

Newell Martin, who acted as spokesman for the delegation, said, in beginning: "The people of the whole northern part of the city are alarmed at the resolution relating to the South Brooklyn tunnel which Controller Coler has sent to the Rapid Transit Commission. The contract for the rapid transit system will likely be awarded on Tuesday, and if, after that, the question of an East River tunnel is taken up, the result will be that we will not get the relief which we need so much, and which we have been promised so often. The suggestion has been made that private interests are behind this East River tunnel scheme, and that its real object is to give the Long Island Railroad a route to this island. I don't believe that this applies to the Controller or any official."

Speaking of the magnitude of the rapid transit system and the credit its completion would give the administration, Mr. Martin said: "And your name, Mr. Mayor, will go down into history coupled with that of Mayor Clinton"—

"I'm not looking for reputation after I'm dead," said the Mayor, with a laugh.

"And we're looking for transportation, not reputation," Mr. Martin rejoined.

"I don't think any of the Rapid Transit Commission wants to retard the completion of the system," said the Mayor.

"Neither do we," the delegation chorused.

"And I'm sure I wouldn't retard it in the slightest," the Mayor added.

Assemblyman Maurice M. Menton followed Mr. Martin. He said he had been informed that only the first two sections of the underground road would be built at once. These two sections would give some relief, but it would not be adequate. He urged the Mayor that the entire route be built before any money was spent for trans-East River tunnels. "What we want is your help, Mr. Mayor," said Mr. Menton, "in addition to your sympathy."

Continuing, Mr. Menton said, as he understood it, the Controller wanted the four sections of the underground road built, and then connections made with other boroughs.

"The Controller is the father of the South Brooklyn tunnel," the Mayor interjected.

"Yes," said Mr. Menton, "and he regards us as having priority. He recognizes that we have the first claim."

"You know I don't father that Brooklyn tunnel," said the Mayor. "The Controller is the only man who so wants it."

James L. Wells of the North Side Board of Trade was the next speaker. Mr. Wells wanted the Mayor's assurance that the South Brooklyn tunnel would not be begun till the rapid transit system was assured and contracts let. The Controller, he said, had told the delegation that that was what he wanted, and then had offered a resolution to the Rapid Transit Commission providing for the South Brooklyn tunnel as soon as the contract for the first section of the underground road is executed. This Mr. Wells considered bad faith, and he said that the Controller apparently intended to frustrate the plan to build the underground road till his own scheme had been carried out.

"Read that resolution to me, Mr. Wells," said the Mayor. "I think you are mistaken."

Mr. Wells read the resolution aloud, and then the Mayor said: "You have done an injustice to the Controller. He has been charged with telling you one thing and then going ahead and urging the commission to do the reverse. The language of his resolution plainly shows that he meant that the South Brooklyn tunnel plan should be taken up after the contract for the underground road, as confirmed by the Appellate Division, had been executed. You have misinterpreted the resolution and have wronged the Controller, who is earnestly in favor of rapid transit."

Several of the Mayor's visitors talked of the delay in building the road, and expressed the hope that there would be no more obstacles to surmount. To this the Mayor replied: "This is the only time the Rapid Transit Commission has been able to see daylight." One of the party, addressing the Mayor, asked: "In the event of there being no bids received for the construction of the underground system, what will the commission and the City of New York do?"

"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," the Mayor replied, with a laugh. "We will cross that bridge when we come to it."

Controller Coler resented the implication made by the Mayor's callers, when the circumstances were related to him. "When this administration came in," he said, "we were ordered to have nothing to do with the Rapid Transit Commission. How well every one but myself followed these instructions every one interested in the matter knows. The city's financial disability made the beginning of work impossible for a year. In searching for some way to get through I suggested that the road be built in sections, and had a law drafted to permit this. No help came from the administration, and then the Constitutional amendment separating the city and county debts came up. It had lain in an Assembly committee, and it was only after I had agitated its passage and had enlisted the sympathy of Gov. Roosevelt that it was adopted.

"I wrote repeatedly to the Corporation Counsel, but I never got a reply from him, and his representative in Albany was equally phlegmatic about it. Now, when the city is able to build the road and there is no way to dodge the issue, the administration tries to get aboard the band wagon. I have received no support from the Corporation Counsel, but, on the other hand, he tells these people in the Bronx that I am trying to build the South Brooklyn tunnel at the expense of the people of the Bronx.

"There is absolutely no danger, and there never has been, of anything being permitted to interfere with the construction of the whole of the rapid transit route as now planned, and it would be impossible to make any clearer or more unequivocal statements in regard to this matter than were made at the last meeting of the Rapid Transit Commission. All I have claimed is that the tunnel extension to South Brooklyn is the logical continuation southward of the rapid transit system; that it is imperatively demanded by the large interests in that locality; that it will add enormously to the value of the rapid transit franchise to be bid for next Monday, and that it should be undertaken at the earliest possible moment."

THE SPECIAL GRAND JURY.

Needed to Investigate the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Complaint.

Although District Attorney Gardiner did not present himself at his office yesterday, he showed that in spite of his broken rib he was engaged in his official duties. A statement which he had dictated in regard to the special Grand Jury to be impaneled on the first Monday in February was received at his office from Garden City late yesterday afternoon. There has been much conjecture about the District Attorney's office in regard to the real reasons for the application made for the special Grand Jury. Col. Gardiner's statement purports to give the reasons in full. He said in part:

"The constantly increasing volume of criminal business submitted to the Grand Jury every term has, in the opinion of the District Attorney, made it necessary, from time to time, to have two Grand Juries in session. In April last the District Attorney served about 2,500 subpoenas for the Grand Jury in that month. Those were too many for any single Grand Jury to be called on to consider.

"Last month the attention of the Grand Jury was called to a violation of the Penal Code in the circulation of alleged false and malicious rumors and intelligence in order to affect injuriously the credit of certain stock corporations organized under the laws of this State.

The Grand Jury found itself unable, with other pressing business before it, to go into the subject exhaustively.

"The District Attorney therefore found himself constrained, in order not to interfere with current business, to ask in the Supreme Court for a Grand Jury for February, to attend to the presentment and to other matters of importance in addition to the ordinary Grand Jury in the Court of General Sessions."

Ex-Lieut. Gov. William F. Sheehan, the counsel for the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, called at the District Attorney's office yesterday. Regarding the ordering of a special Grand Jury by the Supreme Court, he said:

"From the beginning there has been no relaxation of effort to bring all guilty parties to justice. Evidence has been and is accumulating clearly showing that many persons are guilty of having circulated false rumors affecting the securities and credit of corporations and institutions. It will be our duty, as well as our pleasure, to lay all this evidence before the special Grand Jury."

AFTER AN ESTATE IN QUEENS.

An Illinois Man, Who Was Born in New York, Is the Claimant.

Surrogate Noble of Queens received a letter yesterday from Seth V. Watson of Pana, Ill., asking for information which may lead to the recovery of portions of the estates of several deceased relatives of Mr. Watson. The letter says that in 1896 there appeared in a Chicago paper a notice asking information as to the whereabouts of Seth V. Watson, for whom an estate in New York was waiting. Mr. Watson was born in this city in 1858. He became an inmate of the New York Juvenile Asylum in 1869, and in 1873 was indentured to N. M. Lingle of Irving, Ill. His mother was Caroline Valentine, a daughter of Jacob and Edna Valentine.

An examination of the records of the office by Surrogate Noble showed that George Feeks, a maternal grand-uncle of Mr. Watson, died unmarried in 1868, leaving an estate valued at about $10,000. The Surrogate has written to Watson for particulars, and it is thought a large portion of the estate may be recovered for the claimant. It was said that Watson may also come into the possession of sums of money from other members of his family, who have hitherto been unaware of his existence.

MUST HEAT CROSSTOWN CARS.

Board of Health Has Begun a Campaign Against the Street Railway Companies.

The Board of Health has undertaken to stop the practice of the street railway companies of running their crosstown cars unheated and transferring passengers to them from cars which are often uncomfortably warm. Col. Michael C. Murphy, President of the board, announced yesterday that immediate action would be taken against the corporations for failing to heat their cars.

Inspectors have been making investigations during the recent cold snap, and the result of their observations has been placed in the hands of the Corporation Counsel, who will prosecute the cases. The department was not satisfied with isolated instances of failure to heat the cars, but required that at least six cases should be reported from every route, and such reports were obtained from the following lines:

"Central Crosstown, Futon Street, Grand and Canal Streets, Union Square and West Fourteenth Street, Chambers, Roosevelt and Madison Streets, Christopher and Tenth Streets, Avenue C and Houston Street, Thirty-fourth Street, Third Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, and Spring and Delancey Streets."

All these roads are controlled by either the Metropolitan or the Third Avenue Company. President H. H. Vreeland of the former system said last night that in this era of progress in city transportation the people had just cause for complaint in regard to this matter, but that in the press of other great improvements the company had not been able yet to attend to it. "We didn't let the fires go out—we are not trying to save coal," he said, "for it is a condition which has always existed in New York City on the crosstown lines."

Mr. Vreeland said that when the present municipal regulation requiring cars to be heated when the temperature fell below 40 degrees was adopted, it was only framed to apply to the longitudinal lines, those under a certain length being specifically excepted. He said that on all the lines of the Metropolitan system on which mechanical traction had been introduced, the cars are heated and stoves have been installed on the compressed air cars. "I have never considered that there was a regulation requiring the heating of the short crosstown roads," he said.

President Albert J. Elias of the Third Avenue system said he knew nothing about the Board of Health's action. Col. Murphy's Inspectors also found thirty-one cars on the elevated roads which were supposed to be heated by steam from the locomotives without warmth, and this system, too, was, therefore, included in the presentment to the Corporation Counsel.

VALUABLE JEWELS STOLEN.

Thieves Obtain Property of Mrs. Joseph Wood Worth Between $4,000 and $5,000.

A number of diamonds, emeralds, and sapphires, a valuable gold watch and several rings, worth in the aggregate between $4,000 and $5,000, were taken last night from the home of Mrs. Joseph Wood, 16 East Thirty-third Street. The West Thirtieth Street police think clever thieves gained access to the house during the dinner hour with false keys and took the jewels, while the servants were busy in the rear part of the house. The property was taken from Mrs. Wood's chamber on the second floor.

The robbery was reported to Captain Price at 8 o'clock by Policeman Cox. The Captain and a party of detectives visited the house and the servants were rigorously questioned. No information of value was obtained from them.

Mrs. Susanne McKee, the widow of Thomas H. McKee, and a relative of Mrs. Wood, died in the house about three weeks ago. Many of the missing jewels, Mrs. Wood said, had been given to her by Mrs. McKee, and were especially prized by her for that reason.

The thieves also took some smaller articles. Capt. Price said he did not think any of the servants had committed the robbery, as it appeared that none of them knew where the jewels were kept.

DEATH AT BOXING MATCH.

Byron S. Sabin Expires While Watching McCoy-Choynski Contest.

Byron S. Sabin, a dealer in dental supplies, who lives at 29 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, died suddenly last night while attending the McCoy-Choynski boxing match at the Broadway Athletic Club. He had been threatened with heart failure for some time, and went to the fight last night against the protest of his family, who feared the excitement would be more than he could stand.

Mr. Sabin occupied a seat in the northeast corner of the house, next to William O'Connor, a salesman for Hackett, Carhart & Co. O'Connor noticed that Mr. Sabin was leaning heavily against him all evening, but thought the man was asleep, and did not disturb him. When the contest was finished, O'Connor rose from his seat, and Mr. Sabin fell heavily to the floor. He was picked up and efforts were made to awake him. It was then found that he was dead. The body was taken to the Mercer Street Station, and the family notified. Mr. Sabin leaves a wife and one child.

UNION CLUB MAY SPLIT.

Among the older members of the Union Club, it is said, the plan to abandon the old clubhouse, at Fifth Avenue and Twenty-first Street, and move up town to a new building to be erected at the corner of Fifty-first Street and Fifth Avenue, has not met with favor. The older men have, they admit, a sentimental regard for the house which has been the home of the club for so many years, and are unwilling to exchange its somewhat out-of-date equipment for the garish furnishings of a new building.

A proposition, it is said, has been made to those in favor of the change that a new club, to be known as the Union Club, Junior, or by some similar title, be organized to purchase the new site and occupy the new house, while the older members retain the old house and the name, Union Club. It is understood that there is no bitterness in the difference of opinion, and that the compromise proposed is similar to the plan which several London clubs have adopted under almost identical circumstances.

WORK FOR UNIVERSAL PEACE.

Prominent Citizens Pray the Senate to Ratify The Hague Treaty—Send a Memorial.

The following memorial, urging a ratification of the treaty of The Hague has been forwarded to members of the United States Senate:

To the Honorable the Members of the Senate:

The undersigned unite in respectfully urging your favorable consideration of the treaty of The Hague relative to the peaceful adjustment of international differences.

The Congress of the United States, in 1890, adopted a concurrent resolution requesting the President to invite from time to time negotiations with all foreign powers, to the end that any differences or disputes which could not be adjusted by diplomatic agency might be referred to arbitration and be peaceably adjusted by such means. In the spirit of this resolution, our Government was among the first to accept the proposal of the Emperor of Russia for a conference "as to the most effective means of securing to all peoples the benefits of a real and durable peace."

The labors of that conference, in which the leading powers of the world were represented, resulted in a unanimous agreement. This agreement establishes as the avowed policy of all the nations concerned, the beneficent principle that force ought not to be employed, unless neither friendly offices, nor mediation, nor arbitration can settle the difficulty. At the same time it leaves every nation absolutely free to follow its own judgment of what its interest and honor demand.

Our representatives in the conference declared over their signatures—and their action in so doing was accepted as entirely satisfactory—that the treaty was not to be held to conflict with our traditional foreign policy. European interference in American affairs is not invited or permitted.

For more than a hundred years the United States has been foremost among the nations in the settlement of international disputes by means of arbitration.

Therefore we trust that the pending treaty, the provisions of which we have carefully examined, may receive your favorable consideration.

We have the honor to transmit, under separate cover, two pamphlets in which the merits of the treaty are discussed.

With great respect, we remain,

TO-MORROW

Will include among its features four interesting Articles upon current topics.

The Tax Laws of New York and the Necessity of Their Revision

By EDWIN R. A. SELIGMAN, Professor of Political Economy and Finance, Columbia University.

Prof. Seligman gives a brief history of the methods which led up to the present system of taxation, states its difficulties and defects, and suggests a remedy.

Are the Americans an Anglo-Saxon People?

By EDWARD E. CORNWALL, M. D.

Dr. Cornwall makes a racial analysis of the American people, cites statistics to emphasize his statements, and shows that the Anglo-Saxon element is larger than all the others combined.

Modern Suicides

By KATE SANBORN, Author of "The Wit of Women," &c.

Miss Sanborn discusses the subject entertainingly, and covers a wide field in a short article. She includes among the forms of suicide the shortening of life by the intemperate use of food, drink, and tobacco.

Defects in the City's Educational System

By JOHN G. AGAR, formerly a member of the Board of Education of this city.

Mr. Agar shows the defects and indicates what the policy of the State should be in its treatment of the question.

Dr. Van Dyke's Successor at the Brick Presbyterian Church.

IN EPISCOPAL SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Missionary Meetings in 20 Churches—Dr. Purves in Fifth Avenue Pulpit—St. Matthew's Rectorship.

The Rev. Dr. Maltbie D. Babcock and the Rev. Dr. George T. Purves preach for the first time to-morrow as pastors, respectively, of the Brick and Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Churches. Dr. Babcock comes for permanent service, and it is announced that he will preach morning and evening regularly. This is a change from the practice obtaining heretofore. Dr. Purves will not begin permanently at the Fifth Avenue Church for some months, being detained by Princeton engagements. To-morrow will be his first occupancy of the pulpit since his acceptance of the call to succeed the late Rev. Dr. John Hall.

The Year Book of the Brick Presbyterian Church, just issued, contains for frontispiece a portrait of the retiring pastor, the Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, and in the opening pages is recited the recent actions of Session and congregation in calling the Rev. Dr. Maltbie D. Babcock.

The record shows a total membership of 815, with 45 added last year. The amount of money raised was $116,580, of which $65,-134 was for home missions. All of the societies are shown to be in good condition, but special mention is made of the Christ Church House, the Randolph McAlpin Memorial, opened during the year.

The Rev. Charles Martin Niles, D. D., has been called to the rectorship of St. Matthews's Protestant Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, to succeed the Rev. A. A. Morrison, Ph. D., who was recently called to Trinity Church, Portland, Oregon. Dr. Niles has the call under consideration, and will visit the parish to-morrow, preaching at both morning and evening services.

Protestant Episcopal missionary days for Sunday schools occur to-morrow and on Monday. In this diocese the meetings are under the management of the junior department of the Woman's Auxiliary, which has arranged for to-morrow special services in twenty churches in Manhattan and the Bronx. The hour of the meetings is 4 P. M., except at Trinity Church, Wall Street and Broadway, where the hour is 3:30. Sunday schools of churches not included in the list are expected to send delegations to near-by services; for example, all Episcopal schools in the Bronx send delegations to St. Paul's, Washington Avenue and One Hundred and Seventieth Street; those on the west side to St. Michael's, Ninety-ninth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, and All Angels', Eighty-first Street and West End Avenue, and so on. In the list, among others, are the crypt of the new cathedral, Morningside Heights, where Bishop Worthington of Nebraska will speak. At St. Michael's, Amsterdam Avenue and Ninety-ninth Street, Archdeacon Spurr of West Virginia will be the speaker, and at All Angels', West End Avenue and Eighty-first Street, Bishop Talbot of Central Pennsylvania.

These services were started at the instance of Bishop Potter two years ago, and their success here resulted in the Board of Missions recommending them for the whole country.

At a missionary meeting for Sunday school teachers, to be held Monday evening in Grace Church, Broadway and Tenth Street, the Rev. Dr. W. R. Huntington will preside, and the speakers will be the Rev. Dr. Arthur S. Lloyd of the Board of Missions, Bishop Funsten of Idaho, and John W. Wood.

The purpose of these meetings is to increase interest in missions, and each Lenten season the children of all the country make offerings for missions, seeking to reach a total of $100,000. They began at less than one-half that sum, and last year reached $87,000.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

Notes on the International Series Selection for Jan. 21, 1900.

SUBJECT—The Preaching of John the Baptist.—Luke, iii., 1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Prepare ye the way of the Lord.—Luke, iii., 4.

JOHN THE BAPTIST.
THE SON OF ZACHARIAS AND ELIZABETH, and
THE PROPHET OF THE HIGHEST.

BORN IN JUDEA.
PREACHED IN THE WILDERNESS.
DIED IN A PRISON.

This is the simple inscription on the monument erected by history to the memory of a man who filled the most unique position ever filled by any human being. It sets forth about all that we know of him. Yet his birth was foretold by prophets hundreds of years before it occurred. It was promised by an angel of God to his father, and it was accompanied by most significant declarations. Our Lord Himself said of him, "Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." (Matt., xi., 11.)

But notwithstanding all this, we hear nothing of him from the time of his birth until he was thirty years old, and then the fact that he awakened a great religious interest by his preaching, as set forth in this lesson, is about all that is said of him, except a brief account of his tragic death. In his whole narrative St. Matthew refers to him in only forty-six verses; St. Mark in twenty-nine; St. Luke in ninety-four, and St. John in thirty-seven. Although he was the Elijah, the Malachi, the John Knox, the Savonarola of his time, and did as important a work as any of them, yet no record at all comparable to theirs is found either of himself or of his work. "He was a burning and a shining light" (John, v., 35) to be sure, but like a brilliant meteor his light shined upon men only for a moment.

Meagre and fragmentary, however, as is the history of John, it yet occupies a very important place in the Gospel narrative. And this, not because his personal influence, or that of his work, were in themselves very exceptional or very far reaching, but because of their peculiar relation to Jesus of Nazareth and His great work of redemption. Before proceeding to tell us much about Jesus and His work, therefore, each one of the Evangelists fixes our attention first upon John and his ministry. St. Mark indeed says, "The beginning of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God," is "it is written in the prophets, Behold I send My Messenger before Thy face, which shall prepare Thy way before Thee," and that, in fulfilment of this prophecy, "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins," (i., 1-4.)

Before he was born, the angel Gabriel told his father, "Thou shalt have joy and gladness, and many shall rejoice at his birth. For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and he shall go before Him in the spirit and power of Elias, to make ready a people prepared for the Lord," (i., 14-17.) And when he was born, his father, filled with the Holy Ghost, prophesied concerning him, "And thou child, shalt be called the Prophet of the Highest; for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord, to prepare His ways; to give knowledge of salvation unto His people, by the remission of their sins," (i., 76, 77.) Thus his work was not a final work with which any man could be satisfied, but only initiatory. It was "to give knowledge of salvation," but it could not give salvation. It only awakened men to know their need of "the remission of their sins," by bringing them to the consciousness that they were sinners. It was simply preparatory, but it was an absolutely essential preparation.

The historical time when John entered upon his ministry is very distinctly stated in the opening verses of our lesson. It was "the Augustan age." It was a time of great earnestness and longing expectations. In every walk of life men were trying, in all manner of ways, to meet the cravings of their nature, for they were satisfied neither with themselves nor their circumstances nor their prospects. This spirit developed and strengthened and gave great reputation to such sects as the Pharisees, the Sadducees, the Essenes, and the Nazarites. Men thought then, as they have often thought since, that they could find peace of conscience by mortifying the flesh, and that they could commend themselves to God by withdrawing from the world in which He had placed them.

At such a time as this John suddenly appeared "preaching in the wilderness of Judea," (Matthew iii., 1,) and "he came into all the country about Jordan." (Verse 3.) From his earliest childhood he had been brought up, as the angel had intimated to his father he should be, as a Nazarite. (Numbers, vi.) But he was no religious zealot either by nature or by training. He was "filled with the Holy Ghost," and led by Him, even from his birth. "The wilderness" was where he had grown up, in "the hill country of Judah," or not far from it. It was the most natural and convenient place in which to begin his ministry, and his going there was no withdrawal from the world because he hated the world, but because he loved God, and was His prophet.

JOHN AS A PREACHER.

Being the son of Zacharias, John, by birth, belonged to the priesthood, and when he reached the age of thirty years, as required by the law, (Numbers iv., 2, 3, 22, 23, 32-35,) he entered upon his public ministry. But he wore no priestly robes and claimed no priestly authority. He "had his raiment of camel's hair and a leathern girdle about his loins." (Matthew, iii., 4.) It probably was the dress worn by Elijah and other prophets, but it was not worn by him or by them as any token of their office. It was the common dress of poor men, worn because it was most serviceable and inexpensive. In some parts of the East it is so worn to-day. His diet was as simple as his clothing, for "his meat was locusts and wild honey," such food as could easily be obtained in that "wilderness," or thinly settled region.

That region was a favorite resort for earnest men, who sought the quiet of its caves and ravines for religious contemplation and the mortifying of the flesh. To them John probably first addressed himself, and to them his preaching must have been very attractive. It met the great craving of their souls. As they came and went, they soon carried the fame of his eloquence and zeal in every direction and to far distant places. So great crowds flocked to hear him from "Jerusalem, and all Judea, all the region about Jordan," (Matthew, iii., 5.) Pharisees, Sadducees, Publicans, Roman soldiers, common fishermen—men of every class and occupation—came to him from every city, town, and village, even as far north as the Sea of Galilee. His appearance was so commanding, his life was so self-denying and austere, his character was so holy, his arguments were so Scriptural, his preaching was so bold and radical, and his call was so urgent that it soon began to be whispered about that he must indeed be the long-expected Messiah.

The great Council of the nation, the Sanhedrin, heard his reports, and they sent a deputation of priests and Levites to inquire as to who he was. (John, i., 19.) Every one who heard him, or who heard of him, was stirred up with new thoughts. He spoke directly to the consciences of men. He brought them face to face with the law of God, and they trembled in view of "the wrath to come," for his one, great, penetrating cry was, "Repent ye, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." (Matthew, iii., 2.)

In his audiences were men of all shades of character, moved by all kinds of motives. But he seemed to be able to read the inmost thoughts of each one. The proud Pharisees who stood before him resting in the plea, "We have Abraham to our father," (Matthew, iii., 9,) and the infidel Sadducees who denied that there was any hereafter, he charged alike with being cunning, deceitful, "vipers," which creep stealthily through the grass, and suddenly "biteth the horse heels, so that his rider shall fall backward." (Genesis, xlix., 17.) In ringing tones he demanded, "Who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" His baptism was no mere form by which they could deceive men. They must change the whole spirit of their lives, and "bring forth fruit meet for repentance."

So with every other shade of character that came to be baptized. He made no exceptions. Form was nothing, but "fruit unto holiness" (Romans, vi., 22) was everything. This was demanded of each and of all.

THE MORAL AWAKENING.

As on the day of Pentecost, when Peter preached, the people "were pricked in their hearts," (Acts ii., 37,) so they were when John preached, and from every side there arose the cry, "What shall we do then?" This is always the first question of an awakened mind; it would set itself right with God, and with the world, and with God, and by doing something that it has never done before. The very question is a frank confession that all that has been done before is deficient either in value or in volume; it will not satisfy the soul when it stands face to face with God.

So it was with the rich young ruler who asked, "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" He had kept all the law from his youth up, he said, but for "eternal life" he felt that he must "do" something more; "What lack I yet?" was his anxious inquiry. (Matthew, xix., 16-20.) So it was also with Saul of Tarsus. Although he was "an Hebrew of the Hebrews," and as "touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless," (Philippians, iii., 5, 6,) yet when the great light of heaven shined into his soul, he immediately asked, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" (Acts, ix., 6.) So it is with all men. No holiness of man can satisfy the conscience when the man stands at the bar of God.

The record which St. Luke gives us in this lesson of John's ministry is probably not that of any one special occasion, but the general summary of all occasions. The great body of the people belonged either to the Pharisees or Sadducees. So, Luke says, he characterized "the multitude" (Verse 2) by the same title—"vipers"—that St. Matthew says he applied to the sects. As a body, they were proud, self-satisfied, illiberal, and selfish. So when they asked, "What shall we do, then?" He told them plainly, "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; and him that hath meat, let him do likewise." (Verses 10 and 11.) Selfishness must give place to large-hearted charity.

But, besides Pharisees and Sadducees, there were many "publicans" among John's hearers. As a class, they were utterly rejected by every self-respecting Jew, and their very name was synonymous with "sinner" of the very lowest caste. For sordid gain, they were willing to accept the office of collecting taxes from their fellow-citizens, for the benefit of their Roman masters. Very often they used their position to enforce unjust exactions for their own personal profit. But even they were touched by John, and turned to him with the anxious inquiry, "Master, what shall we do?" "Do?" he said. "Exact no more than that which is appointed you." (Verses 12 and 13.) Be honest and upright in all of your dealings with your fellowmen.

There was still another class, however, who were "pricked in heart." They were Roman soldiers. They were found in all the large cities and in many of the smaller towns, in garrisons, to overawe and keep the people in subjection. But they were far from their own homes, and, as a class, had no interest in those about them. Their lives were spent for the most part in idleness, and, as a consequence, they were always dissatisfied and complaining—ready for any excitement—and quick to assert their power with or without provocation. So when they turned to John with the question, "And what shall we do?" we hear him at once replying, "Do violence to no man; neither accuse any falsely, and be content with your wages." (Verse 14.) Live in peace and fellowship with others, and in contentment with your lot.

Thus John demanded from every class an entire change of life, and that not a merely superficial change which would satisfy men, but such a change as required a radical renewal of their nature. For the law of God could not be satisfied with anything less than a perfect obedience. So he did not stop with this earnest exhortation to repentance, but at once told his hearers of Him who would baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire. (Verses 16, 17.))

The preaching of John the Baptist thus prepared men for the work of Jesus of Nazareth. John was the Elijah of the Old Testament; Jesus was the Elisha. As "El-i-jah" signifies "the Almighty God," and "El-i-sha," "the salvation of God," so Elijah came to declare God's wrath against sin, and Elisha God's grace toward the sinner. But in all of God's dealings with men, it is first, Elijah, then Elisha; first John, then Jesus; first, the Law, then the Gospel; first, repentance for sins, then remission of sins. But not the one without the other.

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

What is the inscription on the monument erected by History to the memory of John the Baptist, and what is said of it and of him?

Why does the history of John occupy an important place in the Gospel narrative?

What messages attended his birth, and what do they indicate concerning his work?

What characterized the times when John entered upon his ministry?

How had he been brought up, and what is said of his appearing "in the wilderness"?

What is said of his age, his dress, and of his food?

To whom did he first address himself, and what was the result?

What is said of his audiences, and of his demands?

What question did they ask, what is said of it, and how is it illustrated?

What is said of St. Luke's record, and of John's answer to "the multitude"?

What is said of the publicans, and of John's answer to them?

What is said of the Roman soldiers and of his answer to them?

To whom did he point his hearers, and why?

How does the summing up show the relation of repentance for sins to remission of sins?

The Rev. Charles M. Niles, D. D.

The Rev. Charles Martin Niles, D. D., who has received a call to the rectorship of St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, where he will preach to-morrow, was born in Pownall, Vt., July 24, 1859, was graduated from St. Stephen's College in the class of '86, and was educated for the ministry in the General Theological Seminary, New York.

In the second year of his seminary life he took charge of the few church people in Rockville Centre, L. I., where there was no church building. He secured the money and erected the Church of the Ascension, of which he became minister in charge. He was ordained priest by Bishop Littlejohn in 1889, and became curate of St. Andrew's, in Harlem, under Dr. Van De Water. He accepted the rectorship of Trinity Church, Rutland, Vt., in 1890, and during his six years' incumbency there practically rebuilt the church. While in that diocese he was one of the examining chaplains, a member of the Missionary Committee, and supplementary deputy to the General Convention.

Dr. Niles accepted his present charge, as rector of St. Paul's Church, Sing Sing, N. Y., in 1896, which during his rectorship has been entirely remodelled and become a most flourishing parish. He has been for three years special preacher in old Trinity, New York; St. Paul's, Zion, St. Timothy's, and other New York churches, and has been mentioned for the high office of a Bishop of the Church. He is at present a member of the Board of Managers of the Church Temperance Society and of the Parochial Mission Society.

In 1880 his Alma Mater conferred upon him the degree of M. A., and in 1892 the degree of B. D. In 1895 the Norwich University of Vermont gave him the degree of D. D.

In June, 1888, Dr. Niles was married to a daughter of the late Dr. Edward Hazen Parker and a great-grandniece of Daniel Webster. He is a Freemason, Odd Fellow, and a Past Regent in the Royal Arcanum.

As a pulpit orator Dr. Niles enjoys a high reputation, and his discourses have attracted large congregations wherever he has preached.

Church News and Notes.

Dr. Felix Adler, at Music Hall, will tomorrow morning talk on "False Views of Marriage and the Home."

Dr. Mackay will take for his topic to-morrow evening, in the Fifth Avenue Collegiate Church at Forty-eighth Street, "The Lost Sheep Brought Home."

Lester Severn, a missionary from Kangundo, British East Africa, will address the men's meeting at 4:30 o'clock at the Harlem Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association.

"A Student's Problem" will be the subject of the Rev. J. F. Carson's sermon, in the Central Presbyterian Church, Jefferson and Marcy Avenues, Brooklyn, to-morrow evening.

"Ethics of Triumph" will be the subject of Dr. Harris's sermon at the 10 o'clock service this morning, at Temple Israel of Harlem, Fifth Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street.

The Feast of the Holy Name of Jesus to-morrow will be celebrated at the monastery, in West Hoboken. At the high mass, at 10:30 A. M., the Very Rev. Fidelis Stone, C. P., will deliver the sermon.

The subject of the Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman's discourse, at 11:30 A. M. to-morrow, at Temple Emanu-El, Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street, will be "The Greatest Achievement of the Nineteenth Century."

The Rev. Charles A. Briggs, D. D., will preach on the Incarnation at the Church of the Holy Communion, Sixth Avenue and Twentieth Street, at 4 P. M., to-morrow, the subject being "As a Kenosis, or Self-Emptying."

"The Right to Labor" will be the subject of the Rev. Julian K. Smyth's sermon, at the Church of the New Jerusalem, East Thirty-fifth Street, near Park Avenue, to-morrow morning. This is the first of two special discourses by the pastor on "Labor" and "Ownership."

The Rev. Thomas C. Hall, D. D., will preach in Manhattan Congregational Church, Leslie Hall, Broadway and Eighty-third Street, at 11 A. M. to-morrow. Dr. Stimson, the pastor, preaching at Vassar College. The annual meeting of the church took place on Wednesday evening. Reports were presented from all departments, showing a flourishing condition and that 290 members have been received in the three years of the church's existence.

GERRY SOCIETY DECISION

How State Board of Charities Receives Justice O'Brien's Opinion.

Hundreds of Institutions Excluded from Visitation by the Board If Decision Prevails.

William Rhinelander Stewart, President of the State Board of Charities, declined yesterday to talk on the subject of the decision by Justice O'Brien of the Court of Appeals that the State Board of Charities has no jurisdiction of the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. "The Attorney General," said Mr. Stewart, "is my lawyer, and it is his business to talk."

The following review of the decision, while not official, was prepared by one identified with the State Board of Charities, and is vouched for as a correct presentation of fact:

"The more one examines the decision by Mr. Justice O'Brien of the Court of Appeals in the State ex rel. the State Board of Charities against the New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, the more evident it becomes that the question involved is very much more important than the right of the State Board of Charities to inspect the Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

"Under the revised Constitution, as also under the earlier statutes, the State Board of Charities has had the right to inspect all charitable institutions, whether under public or private management, and whether supported by public or private funds. The sufficient reason for such inspection was that the protecting arm of the State should be extended over all persons maintained in charitable institutions. While in the main well managed, there have been instances of gross abuses in institutions wholly under private control, and wholly supported by private funds.

"The State Board of Charities was therefore authorized to visit all hospitals, orphan asylums, homes for the aged, and other institutions, with the view of detecting abuses that might exist, and securing remedies for them. The language of the Constitution was as comprehensive as it could well be made; and until this decision no one has ever questioned its application to charitable institutions of all sorts.

"Justice O'Brien's decision states that the object of this whole scheme of inspection was not that of protecting the weak and the helpless, but that of safeguarding the expenditure of public moneys, and that therefore the only institutions subject to the visitation of the State Board of Charities are those receiving public money. This would exclude in one sweep hundreds of institutions.

"While there may be twenty Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children in the State, there are hundreds of societies and institutions which would be exempted from inspection if this view of Justice O'Brien's decision prevails. All orphan asylums, except those receiving public funds; all hospitals endowed or supported by private contributions or any source whatever, except public money; all homes for the aged not receiving public funds, all societies for the relief of the poor, supported by voluntary contributions, are at one sweep removed from the oversight and inspection of the State Board of Charities, without any such demand or expectation on their part.

"In Massachusetts at this very time a strong movement is on foot to extend the supervisory powers of the State Board of Charities, so as to exclude institutions under private control and supported by private funds. The Superintendent of one such institution in that State has recently been sentenced to imprisonment for six years for cruelty to the children in the institution.

"The question is not one of control by the State Board of Charities, but simply and purely that of the right of inspection. A greater calamity could hardly befall the charitable system of the State, as a whole, than to have all these institutions removed from the only effective public inspection which has been provided.

"This opinion is all the more surprising in view of the fact that in the case of the Institution for the Blind, decided in 1897, five of the seven Judges of the Court of Appeals decided that that institution was subject to inspection by the State Board of Charities, not only because it received public funds, but also because it received charitable donations. The wording of the decision is as follows:

"'The New York Institution for the Blind, an institution under private control, organized in 1831, Chapter 214, for the special education of the blind, is to be regarded as a charitable institution, so far as it clothes, educates, and maintains indigent pupils at public expense, or by donations from individuals, and as to such pupils it is subject to the supervision and rules of the State Board of Charities.'

"Another surprising passage in the decision is that which states that the right of visitation by the Supreme Court is exclusive of the right of visitation by the State Board of Charities. The Supreme Court has the right to appoint visitors to all incorporated institutions and societies, whether charitable or otherwise, and to hold that such inspection is exclusive of inspection by the State Board of Charities, would be to practically abolish that board so far as its supervisionary powers are concerned.

"The Constitution explicity declares that the State Board of Charities shall visit and inspect all institutions, whether State, county, municipal, incorporated or not incorporated, which are of a charitable, eleemosynary, correctional, or reformatory character, excepting those placed under the Prison and Lunacy Commissions."

LENZ'S MURDERERS ESCAPE.

Turkey Takes Little Pains to Avenge the Bicyclist's Death.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—It is said at the State Department that the attempt to secure some sort of reparation for the killing of Lenz, the bicyclist, in Turkey, is being steadily prosecuted. About two years ago the Turkish Government was addressed on this subject, and promised to punish the murderers. It appears, however, that the attempt to do this was perfunctory, and the guilty persons, even when arrested, were allowed to escape, and are now beyond the reach of the Turkish Government.

The attention of Mr. Straus, our Minister to Turkey, has again been attracted to the subject, and he will make renewed representations upon it to the Porte.

COLLEGE ROWING ASSOCIATOIN.

Big Universities, Except Yale and Harvard, to be Asked to Join It.

The Directors of the Inter-University Rowing Association, composed of Columbia, Cornell, and the University of Pennsylvania, have set plans on foot to form an American University Rowing Association, which will include most of the large universities interested in rowing. Wisconsin, Brown, Syracuse, Toronto, and Bowdoin have been asked to join the association, and other colleges may receive invitations in the near future.

Yale and Harvard will probably not be asked to join the association. Thus far they have held aloof from racing with other colleges, although last year they failed to make the time made in the inter-university races at Poughkeepsie.

There has been some endeavor to change the place of holding the inter-university races from Poughkeepsie to Onondaga Lake, but as yet the attempt has accomplished nothing. Under the present plans the Poughkeepsie regatta will be the principal rowing event of the year. 'Varsity eight-oared, freshmen eight-oared, 'varsity four-oared without coxswain, and double and single oared races will probably be held.

A Cross Presented by Miss Smyth.

A beautiful brass dross, the gift of Miss Smyth, daughter of Justice Smyth, was placed on the altar of the Mortuary Chapel of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, yesterday. It is about two feet in height, of plain design, with the letters I. H. S. engraved in relief at the intersection of the stem and cross-piece. D. Parker Morgan, the rector of the church, said in reference to the chapel that few persons outside of the parish knew that it existed. For years, however, it had served for a temporary resting place for the dead, principally for those who had died in hotels and boarding houses.

DECISION GIVEN TO McCOY.

Spectators Claimed, However, that His Knockout Blow Was a Foul and Nearly Broke Out Into a Riot.

Followers of boxing who went to the Broadway Athletic Club last night to see a boxing contest witnessed an exhibition in which there was not only one, but a couple of apparent knockouts. "Kid" McCoy, the conqueror of Peter Maher, and "Joe" Choynski, the California heavyweight, were to have fought twenty-five rounds, but they fought only three. In the second round McCoy sent a left jab to the Californian's face, but the latter was back at him like a flash, and with a left hook on the jaw, sent Maher's conqueror to the floor. "Johnny" White, the referee, began to count the ten seconds, but as he reached the tenth, McCoy was on his feet and Choynski hit him again. There were many who believed McCoy was down twelve seconds and that Choynski had won. "Joe" Dunn, the timekeeper for the club, was one of the latter, for he sounded the gong vigorously, as he usually does when a knockout has been scored. There was considerable confusion, and the men went to their corners, even though there was still a minute to be fought out in the round. They were ordered out again when the referee discovered the mistake.

The rules call for a minute rest after each round, but McCoy was badly used up, and two minutes passed before they were called to the centre again. Then there was a rush by both men, and they began to batter each other wildly, throwing all rules of boxing to the winds. When the bell to stop the round rung, Choynski stepped back and McCoy deliberately smashed him with his right on the point of the jaw and knocked him out. The blow appeared to be a foul, but Referee White says it was aimed before the gong sounded. The spectators howled themselves hoarse and called for McCoy to be disqualified, but they got no satisfaction.

The men were called to the centre for the fourth round, but the foul in the third round had settled Choynski and he was unable to come to time. McCoy was then declared the winner. When the announcement was made the crowd acted as if it would break out into a riot, but Capt. Chapman and his men succeeded in partially restoring order.

When the bout was announced some weeks ago, the club management stated that there would not be an advance in prices, but there was an advance. In spite of it the house was as crowded as it was on the night of the Dixon-McGovern fight.

IN THE BOWLING ALLEYS.

The crack Belvidere Club was beaten in the Columbia League last night by the Riverdales in one of the most exciting games of the tourney. There was only a difference of nine pins in the final score. McGRAW MAY QUIT THE LEAGUE.

Baltimore Player Threatens to Desert to the New Association.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 12.—John McGraw, manager of the Baltimore team, has made up his mind to join the new American Association, should the National League drop Baltimore. In this move he will receive the support of Joe Kelley, Capt. Robinson, Clarke, and Jennings.

McGraw said to-day that he has now the assurance of sufficient local capital to establish a strong club in Baltimore. Anson is expected here in a day or two for another conference on the new association problem.

Pitcher Phyle to be Dropped.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—Will Phyle, one of the Chicago Baseball Club's pitchers last year, will be dropped from the team this year. All the other old players have signed, with the exception of Tim Donahue and Lange. Donahue, it is understood, is holding off for a raise in salary, and he probably will gain the concession.

INTERNATIONAL LAWN TENNIS.

Cup Offered with a View to Establishing a Permanent Feature.

BOSTON, Jan. 12.—The Herald to-morrow will announce that an international lawn tennis competition, as a permanent feature, is assured by the offering of a perpetual challenge cup by one of America's foremost players. The Herald, however, at this time is not at liberty to announce the name of the donor.

The cup will be given first into the keeping of a committee appointed by the United States National Lawn Tennis Association.

The matter now rests with the National organization, and the next step will be taken at its annual meeting, Feb. 9.

Trotting Conference Ended.

The representatives of the American and National Trotting Associations who met in this city for a conference beginning Wednesday, completed their work yesterday afternoon and adjourned The last day of the conference was devoted to revising the rules of the two associations and making them as uniform as possible. The proceedings of the conference will be submitted to the congresses of the associations for approval. The National Trotting Association holds its congress in this city in February, while the congress of the American Trotting Association will be held in Chicago beginning May 3.

Indoor College Football.

College cheers, music, and songs enlivened the game of football last night between teams from the College of the City of New York and the College of Pharmacy, at Dickel's Riding Academy. It was an interesting contest, and was won rather easily by the former college by a score of 25 to 5. The boys of the College of the City of New York played a fine game, their interference starting and getting into motion quickly, and they rarely if ever failed to gain their ground.

Newport Golf Club's Green.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Jan. 12.—Arthur T. Kemp is here to consult with Commodore Fred P. Sands, both of whom are members of the Greens Committee of the Newport Golf Club, relative to improvements of the Newport links. John Yule has been appointed greens keeper of the club.

Wright Wins Bird Shooting Match.

T. C. Wright and J. P. Buryere, both of Paterson, were contestants in a twenty-five-bird match on the grounds of the Lyndhurst Shooting Association yesterday. The match, which was for $50 a side and the price of the birds, was won by Wright, with a score of 19 kills, his opponent failing to grass more than 17.

Major John B. Guthrie Dead.

BUFFALO, Jan. 12.—Major John B. Guthrie died suddenly in this city to-night. At the battle of San Juan Hill Capt. Guthrie of the Thirteenth Infantry was wounded while leading his regiment up the hill, after the commanding officer, Col. Worth, had been struck down. He was invalided home, appointed Major in the Fifteenth Infantry, and assigned to special duty, representing the War Department on the Board of Managers of the United States Government exhibit at the Pan-American Exposition. He was fifty-five years old, and leaves a wife, who was Miss Esther Bayard of Princeton, N. J. He will be buried at Princeton.

New Lake Yacht Harbor.

Special to The New York Times.

WAUKEGAN, Ill., Jan. 12.—A first-class yacht harbor, to cost about $50,000, is projected for Highland Park, Ill. The project is backed by F. W. Cushing and Chicago capitalists, who are building a Summer hotel there. The harbor is intended for the use of Chicago yachtsmen who may sail up to the resort.

Of course, you want to know why this absolutely pure cream of tartar baking powder is 8 cents a pound less than others. Because it is NOT made by a trust. If you want to pay 8 cents a pound more for your baking powder than you need to pay, that is your affair, but we don't think you want to—not even in these good times, for which we all are so thankful.

DIED TO ESCAPE PUNISHMENT.

Man Who Committed Suicide at the Eastern Hotel Was a Bigamist and Probably a Forger.

Bigamy and probably forgery were the crimes, from the punishment of which the man registered at the Eastern Hotel, in Whitehall Street, as E. J. Fuller, sought escape by committing suicide in his room Thursday afternoon. Two women appeared yesterday to claim the suicide as their husband. One believes that she is Mrs. Edward F. Sargent, having been married to the man under that name last November and deserted by him within twenty-four hours. The second, through her brother, John P. Lamerdin, a lawyer, at 100 Broadway, who lives at 17 Cooper Street, Brooklyn, says the man, under the name of Edward F. Fullerton, married her on Dec. 31, 1895, and deserted her soon after the birth of their child.

At about the same time Fullerton's employers, a drug firm in East Fourteenth Street, discovered that he had been forging their name to checks, and a warrant was issued for his arrest.

Mrs. Sargent and Mr. Lamerdin called at the Morgue together yesterday, and both identified the body. Mrs. Sargent, who is twenty years old, was employed as a cloak model in a Broadway store when she met the man last June. Her maiden name was Josephine Young, and her family live at Middletown, N. Y. The man she married was then known as Dr. Edward F. Sargent, and was employed as a druggist at the J. Hood Wright Memorial Hospital. The two were married on Nov. 21. A few hours after their marriage Sargent told her that she had better go to her home at Middletown until he could settle his business affairs, when he would send for her. This the girl did, but at Middletown no word came from her husband.

About a month ago she returned to New York, and after some inquiry found that Sargent had left the hospital and was employed at the Sailors' Snug Harbor, on Staten Island. They met several times by appointment, and last Monday Mrs. Sargent had him arraigned for desertion in the Yorkville Court. Sargent agreed to live with her, and the two left the courtroom apparently happy. According to Mrs. Sargent's story, they spent Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday together at a small hotel in Second Avenue. Sargent left her Thursday morning, telling her to wait for him. She next heard of his suicide.

Mr. Lamerdin called at Police Headquarters yesterday that the man's name was Edward Frank Fullerton. He said he first met Fullerton in May, 1895. The man was then employed in Zagat's drug store at Fourteenth Street and Avenue B. He said that Fullerton married his sister, Anna Grace Lamerdin, Dec. 31, 1895, and declared that he had the marriage certificate in his possession. A child, which is dead, was born to them in the following year. On Christmas Day, 1896, Mrs. Fullerton sent word to her family that she was sick and had been deserted by her husband. Soon after the warrant was issued against Fullerton for forgery, but he had disappeared.

Lamerdin afterward saw Fullerton in company with Miss Young, and had some correspondence with him with a view to obtaining a divorce for his sister.

Among the effects of the man were a number of letters and charms showing him to be a Mason in which the Monitor Lodge and St. John's Commandery were mentioned.

Mrs. Sargent declared yesterday that she has proof that the dead man's right name was Edward F. Sargent, and said she had seen a letter written to him by his mother, whose name she did not know, from Rochester, N. H. A dispatch received last night from Rochester, N. H., said that a Frank Sargent, sometimes called Edward F. Sargent, had lived there at one time, and that his mother, who is now Mrs. H. K. Sanborn, still lived in that city. The Frank Sargent of that place left Rochester when seventeen years old, and would be forty-nine years of age now. He was a pharmacist and had been regarded as being slightly deranged mentally. Mrs. Sanborn said she did not believe the suicide could be her son, as he had a wife and two children in the South.

SPOKE NO WORD FOR TEN YEARS.

Connecticut Pauper Dies After Maintaining a Long Silence.

NEW HAVEN, Jan. 12.—Frederick Richardson, aged sixty-two years, for twenty-one years a city charge, died this morning at the almshouse.

For over ten years he had refused to talk, and his keepers believe that during that period he had not uttered a syllable. He broke his long silence just before death.

PENNSYLVANIA FREIGHT WRECK

Thirty Cars Thrown Into a Pile Seventy Feet High.

WILMERDING, Penn., Jan. 12.—A great freight wreck occurred here this evening on the Pennsylvania Road. Freight No. 803, east-bound, with seventy-five cars, broke in two just when it reached this point, and thirty cars were derailed and piled high at the side of the track. All traffic is blocked on all tracks with the exception of the west-bound passenger track. The whole train was made up of merchandise cars, and to-night the wrecked cars are piled seventy-five feet high. It will take until morning to clear the track. All of the train crew have reported, but it is not yet known whether any one is under the wreck. The wreck occurred on but a slight grade, which probably prevented it from being more complete.

MINISTER ASKS FOR BUSINESS.

Promises Satisfactory Attention to Weddings and Christenings.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Jan. 12.—The Rev. Mr. Cooper has prepared for distribution cards announcing that he has located at Park Ridge and that he is ready to give prompt attention to weddings, funerals, and christenings. The cards have been prepared by him, he says, to call attention to his readiness for engagement of any kind. He says he has begun preaching at Park Ridge without pay, and that owing to church trouble there he has not as yet secured a full congregation.

He expects, he says, before long to have a church organized at the village, and then he will not have to send around for business, but that pending the coming of a church and a salary he must live and wants all the paying engagements he can get.

HIGH PRICES FOR STAMPS.

Largest Sum Ever Realized at Auction for One Specimen Paid at the Hunter Sale.

One postage stamp brought $1,710 last evening at the sale of the collection of F. W. Hunter of this city. This is the largest sum any stamp has ever brought in this country at auction. It was the gem of Mr. Hunter's collection—a specimen of the first issue of British Guiana in 1850. It is of the two-cent denomination, printed in black on a pink ground, and without perforations. Postmasters in the colony in these days having to separate one stamp from the others in a sheet with scissors.

The purchaser of the stamp was the Scott Stamp and Coin Company of this city, who represented an English collector whose name could not be learned. This specimen—a "blue rose" of philately—was bought by Mr. Hunter at the De Coppet sale several years ago for $1,010, so that he realized a good profit on his investment. It is said, however, that $2,500 was offered privately by a foreign collector for the stamp, of which only one other specimen is known to exist.

The Scott Stamp and Coin Company also secured the second most expensive lot sold in the evening, a British Guiana four-cent stamp of the issue of 1856. It is on the original cover, and was also bought by Mr. Hunter at the De Coppet sale. It brought $435 last evening.

Other big prices were $220 for a Confederate stamp of Greenwood of the ten-cent denomination, on the original cover; $105 for a Confederate Nashville ten-cent stamp, $120 for a proprietary five-dollar stamp of 1871, and $108 for a five-hundred-dollar revenue stamp of the second United States issue. A two-hundred-dollar stamp of the same issue was bought by Mr. Bishop for $64. A Confederate Spartanburg five-cent stamp brought $54, and a Tellico Plains five-cent stamp $60. A large number of other lots brought over $50 each, while the Scott Company paid $35 each for a set of four undivided British Guiana stamps of 1850, almost unique in that shape.

Among the large buyers were J. C. Bidwell, H. L. Calman, Henry Bruner, and Messrs. Pell, Tuttle, Perrin, and Dietz. The Scott Company, however, purchased by far the greater number of the lots offered, having received commissions to buy from collectors all over this country and Europe.

The sale will be continued next Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings at the same place, the Assembly Hall of the United Charities Building, Fourth Avenue and Twenty-second Street.

OBJECT TO AN ORPHAN ASYLUM.

The residents of the neighborhood of Sumner Avenue and Macon Street, Brooklyn, are excited over the proposal to establish a negro orphan asylum in a handsome dwelling house at the corner of the two thoroughfares mentioned.

A woman whose name is not known has provided the funds for converting the building into an orphan asylum. The work of fitting the building up for the reception of the children, it is said, will be begun soon. The neighborhood is one of the best in the borough, and much indignation is expressed by the residents.

MORE MONEY FOR MILITIA.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Jan. 12.—Col. E. C. Bleyer of Chicago, Secretary-Treasurer of the Inter-State National Guard Association, who was here to-day conferring with Adjt. Gen. Gore and Quartermaster Richardson in regard to plans for the meeting of the National Guard associations Jan. 23, said that Gov. Roosevelt of New York, Major A. L. Mills, Commandant of the National Military Academy at West Point, and George B. Davis, Deputy Judge Advocate General at West Point, would probably be here.

Col. Bleyer, who has made two or three trips to New York and to different parts of the country in the interest of the meeting, has also seen Secretary Root and Adjt. Gen. Corbin and laid his plans before them. It is understood that the Secretary of War favors the general plan of the Guardsmen, who desire Congress to make a larger appropriation for the maintenance of the National Guard. Now the National Guards of all the States receive an aggregate appropriation of $400,000. The meeting in this city will formulate requests that Congress pay National Guard soldiers while they are in the field, in camp, or on duty, at the same rate regular army men receive. It is understood that the Guardsmen think an appropriation of about $3,000,000 a year will put the Guard on a substantial footing.

The Inter-State National Guard Association has a membership of about 75,000, and the association of the Southern States has about 30,000.

CHILDREN ACCUSE TEACHER.

John Harmon, who is said to have a good record as a teacher in the public schools for thirty years, was suspended by the Richmond Borough School Board Thursday night pending an investigation of charges brought by his pupils, of Public School No. 21, in the Elm Park section of that borough, that he was intoxicated during school hours Thursday afternoon. It is alleged that he acted in a violent manner toward the children, and that he choked William Rowen, ten years old, so severely that finger marks were left on the boy's throat.

When the children carried the news of Mr. Harmon's alleged strange conduct home, many of the mothers hastened to the school house, excitedly besieging the teacher with demands for an explanation. He was finally compelled to telephone to the sub-precinct police station at West Brighton for a policeman, who cleared the school room of the excited women.

Deputy Superintendent of Public Schools George Hogan said last night that from the investigation he had made he believed Mr. Harmon had been under the influence of liquor.

Mr. Harmon could not be seen yesterday by reporters.

Fire in Newport Naval Storehouse.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., Jan. 12.—While the rain fell in torrents early this morning, and the wind blew in hurricane force, fire was discovered in the storehouse of the new barracks in course of construction at the training station for naval apprentices. An alarm was sounded and officers, marines, and apprentices were called to the scene. They extinguished the flames in less than an hour. The storehouse contained plumbing material for the new barracks and a quantity of lime. The wetting of the latter material is believed to have caused the fire. The material belonged to the contractor.

The Most Remarkable Glove Offer Ever Made

59c. to $5.00 instead of $1.25 to $10.

Gloves for Everybody—Men, Women and Children.

This is the most unusual and most interesting collection of gloves ever gotten together at one time. They are the entire sample line of one of the very best known English makers (according to our purchase we can't advertise the name), you will recognize them, though, the moment you see them—the name is on every pair. Gloves of all kinds for men, women and children, from the white for evening wear up to the gauntlets of the finest fur. And for the prices nothing in the past can compete with them. The variety is enormous. In the unlined mostly heavy weight, kid, suede, reindeer, Cape Hope sheep, goat and lamb skin. In the lined the assortment is particularly fine—the linings are varied, from wool to seamless cashmere and finest furs.

They are divided into three lots as follows:
AT 59c. INSTEAD OF $1.25 TO $2.25—Women's kid and cape skin, unlined.
AT $1.00 INSTEAD OF $2.00 TO $3.25—Men's unlined of various skins.
AT $1.00 TO $5.00 INSTEAD OF $2.00 to $10.00—Lined and fur Gloves for Men, Women and Children.

There's not a Glove in the lot that's not a worthy one, but of course the best will be picked out first.

DIES AT ELEVATED STATION.

Andrew Blake Stricken with Heart Disease at Columbus Avenue and One Hundred and Fourth Street.

Andrew Blake, sixty years old, a lawyer, with offices at 108 Fulton Street and living at 131 West Thirteenth Street, died suddenly of heart disease at 7:15 o'clock last night on the platform of the elevated railroad station at Columbus Avenue and One Hundred and Fourth Street.

The belief is that he was on his way to see his physician, Dr. Saram R. Ellison of 118 West One Hundred and Third Street, who was treating him for valvular heart trouble and kidney disease.

Mr. Blake got off the train and staggered to a bench. The ticket agent saw that he was ill, and ran to him. The sick man told him to go for Dr. Ellison, and gave the address. The man did so, and on his way told a policeman of the case and an ambulance was called from Rooseveit Hospital. Dr. Ellison reached the station first, however, but found the patient dead.

The body was taken to the West One Hundredth Street Police Station in the ambulance and later to an undertaking establishment in Carmine Street.

Dr. Ellison had warned Mr. Blake that he might die suddenly, and the sick man asked him if that happened to notify an intimate friend, William Postley, who can be found in the office of the Mount Hope Cemetery, at 360 Sixth Avenue.

Dr. Ellison said he did not know much of his patient's domestic affairs. He knew him to be a prominent Mason in Normal Lodge, F. and A. M., and Morton Commandery No. 4, Knights Templars. He understood also that he was the manager of some large estates.

When the body was searched $10 in money, a gold watch and chain, and some valuable papers were found.

MANY MINERS ARE DISCHARGED.

Over Two Hundred Lose Their Places for Attending a Funeral.

SHAMOKIN, Penn., Jan. 12.—One hundred and thirty additional miners employed in the collieries of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company were discharged to-day for failing to report for work on Wednesday. One hundred men were discharged yesterday for the same reason. All of the discharged miners attended the funeral of a miner who was killed in one of the collieries, and who was a member of two beneficial societies to which the discharged men belonged.

The miners had asked permission to lay off from work in order to attend the funeral, but their request was refused by the officials, and the men were told that if any of them failed to report for work, the offending men would be discharged. The mine officials state that they have no objection to the men going to funerals of employes killed at the mine where they are employed, but will not allow workmen from four collieries to cease work and thus cripple

COPPER ORE IN NORTH CAROLINA

Farmers Greatly Excited Over the Finding of Rich Deposits.

Great excitement prevails among the farmers of North Carolina, near the Virginia border, over the discovery of large deposits of copper ore.

Louis N. White of Colorado, for four years mining inspector in that State, is in the city after a visit to Virginia, N. C., near where some of the ore beds have been found.

"I was greatly surprised," said Mr. White to a TIMES reporter yesterday. "I had no idea there could be such rich copper fields in that part of the country. While there has been very little development, and the work has been of the most crude character, the results are astonishing.

"The farmers who have been raising corn and tobacco on the rocky land for 200 years have finally learned of the presence of the ore deposits. They are making investigations on their own account with negro labor, and the results have been such that one of the agriculturists refused $60,000 for a farm of 160 acres.

"Speculators are overrunning the country buying options right and left. The purchasers must treat directly with the owner of the land.

"I have been mining for years, and it would not surprise me if very remarkable results were soon forthcoming in the North Carolina copper fields."

TRAVELERS' MAY MOVE HERE.

President of Hartford Insurance Company Complains of Taxes.

HARTFORD, Conn., Jan. 12.—James G. Batterson, President of the Travelers' Insurance Company, to-day stated that his company is considering the advisability of removing to New York to escape "unjust taxation at the hands of Hartford and Connecticut."

Mr. Batterson said: "The system of taxation in vogue here is most outrageous. It is discriminating and unfair and makes it impossible to conduct the business successfully. We are doubly taxed, while other companies escape. There is now before the New York Legislature a new tax bill. We cannot tell definitely now whether we shall move to New York, but we are authorized by our stockholders to move if necessary, and we are corresponding on the matter."

The business of the company is indicated by the following figures presented in the last report of the State Insurance Department: Capital, $1,000,000; assets, $25,317,989; surplus, $3,106,816; total outstanding policies, $462,273,827.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

The Crown Life Assurance Company of Toronto, Canada, is in process of organization. A widely issued prospectus states that the proposed capital is $1,000,000.

The St. Petersburg Fire Insurance Company of Russia is contemplating the advisability of entering the United States for the purpose of transacting a reinsurance business, and, in the event of a favorable decision, will probably apply for permission to make its deposit in this State.

Members of the New York Fire Insurance Exchange have raised the question as to whether reinsurances effected now on business placed before the advance in rates on Wednesday, shall be taken at the old or the new rates. The question may be referred to the Arbitration Committee for a ruling. Complainuts are made that risks on the Sunnyside Distillery, near Harrisburg, Penn., are being offered in this city at less than the tariff rates.

The Massachusetts Supreme Court has decided in favor of the Magdeburg Fire Insurance Company of Germany in the friendly bill of equity filed by that company against the State Treasurer and the Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts for the recovery of the company's deposit of $200,000 made in that State in 1896. The action was brought because of the company's recent deposit of $500,000 in this State. Commissioner Cutting of the Massachusetts Insurance Department had ruled that he was not competent to permit the removal of the deposit in that State, unless authorized by a court decision.

News comes from Berlin to the effect that it is rumored there that the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York is to be readmitted to Prussia on condition that it will deposit with the local Government the full policy reserve on Prussian policies, the deposit to be made in Prussian securities. If this be done, the Prussian Government will waive the requirement which calls for the disposal of the company's stocks, amounting in the case of the Mutual Life to $30,000,000. The New York Life Insurance Company, which was recently admitted to Prussia, was not called upon to deposit the full reserve because it agreed to dispose of all of its stocks. Its deposit with the Government is therefore only half the amount required of the Mutual Life.

The insurance on the property, which was severely damaged in the fire at 213 to 217 Grand Street Thursday night, was distributed as follows: On the Fulton Stamp Works, Fireman's Fund, $1,500; Concordia, $1,500; Security, $1,000; Stuyvesant, $1,000; United Firemen's, $1,000; German of Freeport, $1,000; Firemen's of Newark, $1,000; British American of New York, $1,000; Citizens' of St. Louis, $1,000. On Julius Schwartz, Aetna, $1,000; New York Underwriters', $1,000; Hanover, $1,000; Scottish Union and National, $1,000; American of Philadelphia, $644; Western of Pittsburg, $644; Western of Toronto, $638; Citizens' of Pittsburg, $518; Milwaukee Mechanics', $500; Buffalo German, $500; Agricultural, $500; Erie, $500; Rockford, $500; British America, $500; Merchants' of Newark, $500; North American of Boston, $500; Spring Garden, $500; American Central, $500; Commercial Union, $500. On John De Julio, Western of Toronto, $500; Lancashire, $500. On the Star Photograph Engraving Company, Palatine, $600; Imperial, $600; Providence-Washington, $400. On K. Jacobson, National, $500; Firemen's of Baltimore, $500; Commercial Union, $500. Lyons, Stadholt & Co. will adjust the loss.

MARKET CONDITIONS.

Sugar Trust stock advanced about four points yesterday, it sold as low as 113 and as high as 118, closing within a fraction of the top point. Yesterday's transactions aggregated close to 100,000 shares, which, however, represents only about half the average aggregate of recent days.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit and Tobacco Trust and the local traction stocks were next to Sugar the most conspicuous features of yesterday's business, and all of them scored some gain, Tobacco's advance being nearly two points, while Metropolitan rose a point and a half and Brooklyn Rapid Transit a fraction. In all of these stocks there seemed to be substantial covering of short contracts.

***

Much is heard of what to-day's bank statement will show, most estimates giving changes for the better in all items. Surplus reserves are to increase largely, according to Wall Street expectations; and speculative interests paying attention to Clearing House figures were yesterday urging security market purchases, insisting that there is now assurance of the establishment of easy money rates here as well as abroad, and that the direct and immediate result of such change must be helpful to market values. Announcement yesterday of the reduction in the discount rate of the Bank of Germany, following the lead of the Bank of England and the Bank of France, is construed in Wall Street as significant of improving money market conditions throughout the world.

***

One development close at hand will disclose a change in the ownership of influential interests in important railway properties; and one of these will be in Southern Pacific, where Mr. C. P. Huntington will have the partnership and cooperation of interests prominent in the affairs of the Union Pacific. This is one incident in a long list of which in due course the public will learn—one incident in a long list having to do with the movement toward the concentration and unification of American railway control.

SUGAR'S PARTIAL RECOVERY.

After a day of much irregularity and no inconsiderable amount of trading, the total number of shares dealt in approximating 97,000, Sugar Trust common stock closed at 117¾, within a fraction of the highest price for the day, making a net gain of 3⅜ points.

It is rather difficult to determine whether the rally was due to what in the Street is sometimes called "good buying," or whether it was simply due to short covering and profit taking after the tremendous drop of the preceding days. There was neither good nor further depressing news about the company, though it seems to be agreed that the profits of the company are not what they once were.

The opening of the stock was rather noticeable, the tape recording it as "3,500 shares at from 113 to 114."

SOUTHERN PACIFIC'S ADVANCE.

After Sugar, Tobacco and Brooklyn Rapid Transit, Southern Pacific stocks were the most largely dealt in on the Exchange yesterday, more than 21,000 shares changing hands, with a net gain for the day of 1⅝ points.

The strength was largely due to the publication yesterday of the annual pamphlet report of the company for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1899. The figures show net earnings of $4,961,507, as compared with $4,599,131 in the previous year, an increase of $362,376. The surplus, after deducting moneys for additions and betterments, was $2,047,245.

Inasmuch as the earnings of the company in the first six months of the present fiscal year have been much greater in proportion than the earnings for the six months last year, the showing this year promises, it is said, to be an exceptionally good one.

BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT.

In the early trading yesterday, Brooklyn Rapid Transit was vigorously assailed by operators who, it is said, are acting for Consolidated Exchange houses. As a result the stock, which had opened up fractionally better and had then gone higher still, rapidly declined several points. At the decline, however, it found good support and was in the afternoon carried up until at the close of the day it showed a fractional net gain.

Shortly before the close of the market the earnings of the system for the first ten days of January were published, showing an increase of $81,700 over the same period last year.

LOCAL TRACTION STOCKS.

For a time yesterday Manhattan and Metropolitan stocks were weak, the former at one time falling as low as 92½, and the latter as low as 163⅛. In the afternoon, however, a rally came, with the result that the closing figure for Manhattan was 94½, a gain of 1⅝ points, and for Metropolitan 167, a gain of 1½ points.

During the day less than 1,300 shares of Third Avenue were traded in, with a net gain of lected depreciation in the valuation of the latter's office building by the elevated structure.

Heavy shipments of their manufactures to foreign countries made by the American Steel and Wire Company and the National Tube Company.

Reduction of half a cent in posted rates for both long and demand sterling.

Decrease of $25,490,006 in exports of domestic products for December, as compared with the same month in 1898, making a decrease of $77,635,490 for the year.

Reduction from 7 to 6 per cent. in the Imperial Bank of Germany's rate of discount.

Shipment of $1,000,000 gold to Buenos Ayres.

Name of Pullman Palace Car Company changed to the Pullman Company and the $20,000,000 additional capital stock, representing the merger of the Wagner Palace Car Company, admitted to dealings on the Stock Exchange, making the total amount listed $74,000,000.

Spanish 4s closed at 66⅜.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £65,000. The sum of £100,000 gold was transferred to the Indian currency account. Gold premiums: Buenos Ayres, 129.60; Madrid, 28; Lisbon, 44.50; Rome, 1.

Bar silver closed firmer at 27⅛d per ounce.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Jan. 12.—Prices became firm on the Bourse to-day, after a hesitating opening, due to the reduction in the German bank rate. Reports of Gen. Buller's advance in South Africa had a beneficial effect, stimulating London buying and hardening prices. International securities, particularly Spanish 4s and Brazilians, were in request. Kafirs recovered. Three per cent. rentes, 100f 7½c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f. 22c for checks. Spanish 4s, 67.55.

BERLIN, Jan. 12.—The Imperial Bank of Germany has reduced its rate of discount from 7 to 6 per cent. and its rate for advances to 7 per cent.

On the Boerse to-day prices hardened owing to the reduction in the bank rate and the favorable money situation. Subsequently they eased on vague rumors in regard to the South African situation, but closed firmer as a result of reports that Gen. Buller had gained a victory. Exchange on London, 20 marks 49½ pfennigs for checks.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 12.—On the Boerse to-day prices were firm and business was active owing to encouraging outside reports.

MADRID, Jan. 12.—Gold was quoted to-day at 28.25.

FINANCIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Dividends have been declared by the Colorado and Southern Railway Company, the Audit Company of New York, the International Steam Pump Company, and the United Traction Company.

Louis Grumbach, formerly Exchange manager of Credit Lyonnaise in London, has resigned that position to accept a similar one in the North American Trust Company, New York, and is now occupied with his new duties.

ALLEGED BUCKET SHOPS RAIDED.

Two Places Closed and Five Persons Arrested by the Police.

The police of the Old Slip Station made two raids on alleged bucket shops in New Street yesterday, and as a result arrested five persons, who were arraigned later in the Tombs Police Court.

The first raid was made at 51 New Street, which also runs through to the second floor of 40 Broadway. According to the police a shop has been running at this place for some time, and has issued circulars setting forth its connection with all the financial Exchanges of the city. Detective Walsh says that on Jan. 9, 1899, he bought five shares of Rapid Transit stock there at 74⅝, with a limit of 73⅞. He says the stock was never delivered.

In this place the police arrested Samuel Goodman, who says he lives at the Fifth Avenue Hotel; Henry Allen, a clerk, of 50 East Fifty-second Street, and Julius Price, who says he lives at the Holland House.

Magistrate Olmstead held the prisoners in bail of $500 each pending an examination in Jefferson Market Court on Jan. 30.

A little later two arrests were made in the place of Edward Percival, a dealer in sugar, in Rooms 21 and 22 at 46 New Street.

A few days ago, according to the police, Detectives Walsh and Creedon invested some money there and received no returns. The only persons in the office when the raid was made were a man who said he was Edward Percival, but who, when arraigned in court, said he was Thomas Jones of 480 Lexington Avenue, Brooklyn, and Thomas Murphy of 182 Wythe Avenue, Brooklyn. Their office was fitted up with a ticker, blackboard with quotations on it, and all the paraphernalia of a bucket shop.

Murphy and Jones were paroled in the custody of their counsel, George Jack, a partner of Vernon Davis, who appeared for the three other bucket-shop prisoners. Their examination will be held to-day.

Exports of Coin.

It is safe to say that exports of gold to London from this port are not likely to be in evidence in the near future, unless conditions change. The low rate of exchange and the Bank of England's discontinuance of concessions combine to discourage the export movement. Demand sterling closed yesterday at $4.86¼@$4.86⅜. Müller & Schall shipped $500,000 in gold, and George O. Gordon, for the London and Brazilian Bank, shipped $485,000 in gold to Buenos Ayres on the steamer Miramar, which also took some smaller amounts. Silver shipments to London on the Lucania to-day will aggregate 225,000 ounces, worth some $13,500,000. M. Guggenheim's Sons will ship 150,000 ounces of this amount, and Zimmermann & Forshay will ship the remaining 75,000 ounces.

North American Trust Company.

Louis Grumbach has recently become manager of the exchange department of the North American Trust Company. To take this position he vacated a similar position in the Crédit Lyonnaise of London.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Better demand for stocks appeared in the market for outside securities yesterday, and at the close a number of issues showed substantial improvement over Thursday's figures. Not only did prices improve, but the market was much more active and broadened considerably. Amalgamated Copper, General Carriage, and Bay State Gas were all traded in to a relatively large extent, the transactions in these three stocks aggregating about 6,000 shares, and a number of other issues being traded in in lesser amounts. Some few declines of importance were recorded, but these were outnumbered by the day's net gains. Favorable announcements in regard to particular stocks accounted for some of the day's net gains, but most of the advances were attributable merely to the generally better feeling that prevailed. The market remained less active than it was last week, and at the close of the year, but the increase over the transactions of the past few days was considerable.

AMALGAMATED COPPER, the tradings in which of late have been much below the average amount, was active to the extent of about 2,000 shares. The first sale was made at 83⅝, and from this price the stock advanced steadily to 85¼, the final sale. Closing at 85 bid, the stock showed a net gain of 1½ points. Buying of the stock was called good, and as no pressure to sell developed at the advancing prices, the rise in the stock was readily maintained. One or two of the other copper stocks were active, but, except in Amalgamated, no net gains were recorded in this group.

GENERAL CARRIAGE was favorably affected by the announcement of the plans of the company, in regard to the establishment at a very early date of the cheap cab service, which the company proposes to furnish in this city. Official announcement of the placing of orders for a large number of vehicles was had, and this did much to give assurance that the plans of the company were to be put in actual operation, and naturally this had a favorable influence upon the stock. It was traded in to the extent of something less than 1,500 shares, and the price advanced from 7 to 7¾, closing at 7½ bid, a net gain of half a point. Recent extraordinary manipulation of General Carriage led to the opinion on the part of many that the future of the stock was a most uncertain one, but these official announcements have given some reassurance. It would seem that the present plans of those interested in the management of the company are entirely apart from the efforts recently made to establish fabulous prices for the stock.

STANDARD OIL advanced sharply on transactions aggregating about 200 shares. Several ten-share lots sold as high as 495, and smaller lots changed hands at 493½. It reacted to 491½, but the final figures showed a recovery of 1 point and a net gain for the day of 5½ points.

CAST IRON PIPE common sold to the extent of 300 shares at 8½, and 8 was bid for the stock at the close, a net gain of half a point. Good demand for the preferred stock showed in bids somewhat above those made at the close on Thursday, but practically none of this issue was offered, and as far as reported no trades were made. It closed at 43 bid.

ELECTRIC AXLE closed at 5 bid, a fractional net gain, and during the day stock was readily taken at this figure. Present plans to reduce the capitalization of the company and to make its stock upon the payment of the second call of $5 due Feb. 15, full paid and non-assessable, seemed to be favorably received. Apprehension as to further calls on stocks of this class has been one of the chief causes affecting the prices of the stocks issued on a plan similar to that on which the Electric Axle Company was formed, and the fact that the stock will be made full paid will, it is thought, considerably improve the market for this issue.

NEW YORK TRANSPORTATION sold as low as 11, a half point recession from the previous day's sales. Trading was limited to a few hundred shares.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Jan. 12.—In the market to-day the tone was generally firmer. The trading, however, was very light, showing a lack of confidence in the situation, notwithinding the fact of easy money and bargain prices. The coppers were more than dull, but developed no weak spots. United States Oil held above Thursday's lowest on a better understanding of the company's position. Atchison preferred, Union Pacific preferred, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, and Fitchburg preferred were traded in moderately and fully held their own. There was enough demand for Planters' Compress to lift the stock to 27.

The money market continues to show unmistakable signs of a growing ease. Good loans are becoming scarce and lenders are seeking borrowers. At the Clearing House the rate between banks is still at 6 per cent., and this, too, notwithstanding that the outside rate is in many instances 1 per cent. under this figure. New York funds sold to-day at 10 cents discount and par. Closing bid and asked:

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 12.—The market was generally firm to-day, but advances were few and far between, and so were declines. In most stocks the net results were nil. Cambria Steel rose 1½ to 21⅞ on the declaration of a two-dollar dividend, which was accompanied by an assessment of $1.50 per share, thus making the net return for the stockholder 50 cents. United Gas advanced 2 points, to 136. Union Traction also was in demand at 37¾ to 38⅜. New York bought and bid up Electric Storage Battery from 75 to 79. Marsden does not seem to have been much benefited by its listing on the Pitsburg Exchange.

The market closed firm at these bid and asked prices:

BANK TELLER UNDER ARREST.

Fred. L. Newton Indicted for Larceny of $48,000 in Buffalo.

BUFFALO, Jan. 12.—Fred L. Newton, the defaulting paying teller of the Fidelity Trust and Guaranty Company, was to-day placed in a cell at Police Headquarters.

This afternoon the Grand Jury returned an indictment against Newton charging him with grand larceny, first degree, for the alleged theft of $48,000 of the funds of the bank. Newton was arraigned and pleaded not guilty.

OKLAHOMA BANKER KILLED.

Major J. P. Stone Shot by a Mortgagor About to Lose His Property.

GUTHRIE, Oklahoma, Jan. 12.—Major John F. Stone, one of the most widely known lawyers in Oklahoma, and President of the People's Bank of Kingfisher, was shot and killed at Crescent City, twelve miles west of here, yesterday, by J. E. Walcher, who afterward made his escape.

Walcher had mortgaged property to Stone to secure a loan, and later mortgaged the same property to the Capitol National Bank of this city, for which fraud he was arrested, and is still under bond. Major Stone foreclosed the mortgage, and to-day drove out from Kingfisher to take possession of the property. He was met by Walcher and shot to death.

Major Stone was United States Assistant Attorney for Oklahoma under President Harrison, and Major of the Oklahoma battalion of volunteers in the Spanish war. He leaves a wife and one son.

CHICAGO WOMAN ROBBED.

Seized and Carried Off in a Cab by Men Who Secured Her Diamonds.

CHICAGO, Jan. 12.—Mrs. John Corse, who lives in Dearborn Avenue, was seized by robbers shortly after midnight at Chestnut Street, near North Clark Street, thrust into a cab, and afterward robbed of diamonds valued at $600 and her pocketbook containing $5 in money and a draft for $250. She was brutally beaten, her hands lacerated, and her face bruised.

Mrs. Corse, who is twenty-six years of age, came to Chicago recently from San Francisco for the purpose of studying elocution. She attended an entertainment on the west side, returning to her apartments about midnight. She was feeling ill, and went to a drug store about two blocks from where she lived. This store, however, was closed, and Mrs. Corse started for home. She had not proceeded half a block when, according to the story told by the police, she was seized from behind by two men who drove up in a cab. They thrust her into the cab, stifling her cries, and drove away at a rapid gait.

The cab was driven to a resort near Clark and Division Streets. The woman was forced to enter the building, as being too ill and frightened to make an outcry she was partly carried and partly dragged. Here an effort was made to secure the diamonds she had worn to the entertainment in the evening, and which she still had on. The gems were set in rings and in a brooch. The brooch was secured, but the rings were tight, and could not easily be removed from the fingers. The robbers then procured a pair of pincers and wrenched the diamonds from the setting. After the robbery Mrs. Corse was again put in the cab, and, in response to her pleadings, she was taken to her boarding place, in Dearborn Avenue.

When the robbery was reported to the police the story was regarded as a strange one by the officers, but the victim repeated her assertions, and showed her lacerated hands and the rings with the empty settings to prove her statements. Detectives were detailed on the case.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Negotiating for Presbyterian Missions Property on Lower Fifth Avenue—Other Dealings.

Negotiations are pending for the sale of the property at the northeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Twelfth Street, belonging to the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church. Charles W. Hand, who is Treasurer of that board, and also the Secretary of a committee to which would be referred any matters relating to the property in question, said yesterday afternoon that no sale had yet been consummated.

The property consists of a plot 103.3 by 150, the longer dimension on Twelfth Street, together with 55 Fifth Avenue, adjoining, 28.3 by 100. The improvements are in the shape of three-story stone dwellings, which were occupied by the Mission Boards of the Presbyterian Church prior to their removal to the recently completed Presbyterian Building, at Fifth Avenue and Twentieth Street.

The large dwelling on the immediate corner of Fifth Avenue and Twelfth Street was formerly the mansion of the Lenox family, and the entire property was transferred on June 29, 1857, by Alexander Maitland and others, executors of the estate of Henrietta A. Lenox, to the Board of Home Missions and the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church for $250,000. The property has been in the market for some time, and has been held at between $500,000 and $600,000.

Jesse C. Bennett & Co. have sold for Alexander Walker to J. M. Tompkins the seven-story apartment house, known as the Thorens, at the northwest corner of Broadway and Eighty-first Street, 114 by 78, the longer dimension on Broadway. The price is reported at $400,000.

Horace S. Ely & Co. have sold the five-story building 98 Duane Street, south side, 23.6 feet west of Broadway, 21 by 47.9; also, in conjunction with Francis B. Robert, to Mayer S. Auerbach, the four-story dwelling 11 West Twentieth Street, 28.6 by 92.

The same firm has also sold for a client eight houses on Sackett Street, near Henry Street, Brooklyn; also two plots on Twelfth Street, Brooklyn, near Prospect Park West.

William A. White & Sons and Horace S. Ely & Co. have sold for Alphonse Montant and others to the North River Insurance Company, for $80,000, the four-story building 84 William Street, adjoining the corner of Maiden Lane. The purchase is made presumably for occupancy, the North River Insurance Company's lease on its present quarters, at 46 Cedar Street, expiring on May 1.

The Collins Company has sold for a Mr. Powers the five-story single flat 137 West One Hundred and Twelfth Street, 20.9 by 85 by 100; also, for L. E. Manoly, for $14,000, his property at Carlstadt, N. J., consisting of a dwelling and a tract of thirty-four lots.

Clarence F. James has sold for Joseph Hechinger the five-story double flat 2,485 Broadway, between Ninety-second and Ninety-third Streets, 27.4 by 90 by 100.

G. G. Tuoti & Co. have sold for Mrs. L. Mahler to Rocco Marasco and Domenico Abbate the six-story double tenement 123 Elizabeth Street, 25.5 by 80.

Charles Griffith, Moses & Brother have sold for the Ernst-Marx-Nathan Company to Thomas L. Reynolds the plot of seven lots at the northwest corner of Post Avenue and Emerson Street.

Cyrus Field Judson has sold for William Diller the five-story American basement dwelling 123 West Seventy-ninth Street, 25 by 99 by 100; also, for Samuel Freeman, his property at Morristown, N. J., a tract of forty-five acres.

Schrag & Richtberg have leased the southeast corner of Sixth Avenue and Twenty-second Street for a term of years to G. L. Morgenthau; also, the seven-story business building 148 and 150 West Twenty-third Street, to Krauss & Lederer, a Chicago wallpaper house.

John E. Marsh and another, executors, transferred yesterday to Frank Jay Gould the plot, 50 by 100, recently purchased by him on the north side of Fifty-seventh Street, between Seventh Avenue and Broadway. The consideration expressed in the deed was $108,000.

COTTON.—The volume of speculation in cotton was small, the scope of the variations being only a matter of 8 points for the session. Operators receded with timidity, as there were further rumors of contemplated manipulation, as a part of a recent inundation of the country with bearish telegrams. The market opened firm, however, at an advance of 2@3 points, which proved to be the highest level of the session. During the forenoon certain Wall Street concerns and Liverpool representatives competed a little with local shorts; but the demand for cotton was not active at any time, and business gradually tapered off. By noon most of the improvement had disappeared under liquidation, in the absence of outside support. The local contingent, while inclined to be a little bearish, on the apathy of the outside traders, were not at all confident in view of the strong statistical situation, the small movement of cotton at the ports, continued advices from the remote interior, indicating beggarly supplies in the original hands, and the firmness of holders of spot cotton in the more important markets of the South. During the afternoon cotton was quite neglected, with prices back to about yesterday's closing figures, with the market finally steady at a net gain of 2@7 points, having rallied in the last few minutes on a spurt of covering. Southern spot markets, middling quoted, were officially reported by wire as follows: New Orleans, 7 5-16c; Mobile, 7¼c; Savannah, 7 5-16c; Charleston, 7¼c; Norfolk, 7 7-16c; Baltimore, 7⅝c; Augusta, 7 7-16c; Memphis, 7⅛c; St. Louis, 7 7-16c.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—With fluctuations of only ½@⅝c all day the market yesterday offered but little attraction either to the outside operator or the local patron. Business throughout the entire session was of a scalping order. After showing at one time an advance of ⅝c over the previous night's prices, the market eased off a little in the last few minutes and closed ½c net lower at 73¾c for the May option. Its lowest point was 73⅜c, shortly after the opening, when heavy Argentine shipments and unsatisfactory Liverpool cable advices started a selling movement among local operators. Obeying an impulse to go short of the market in absence of stimulating news from any other quarter, local traders sold freely at the start and continued the operation until alarmed by positive strength in corn and provisions, which fact toward midday inspired a scare and elevated prices to the best point of the session. In the afternoon extreme dullness prevailed, the market paying little heed to a report that 500,000 bushels had been worked for export. In fact the market is so narrow and entirely featureless that bulls appear to be almost demoralized and make little vigorous attempt to do anything beyond an occasional strike at the short interest. Exports from the Argentine amounted to 1,218,000 bushels compared with 650,000 bushels last week, and the visible supply aggregated 2,760,000 bushels. It was also said that the harvest had been completed without developing any unfavorable feature.

COFFEE.—Great excitement continued to mark the course of the coffee market, which, while more or less irregular, was in the main strongly upward, the occasional reactions being due to periods of liquidation. The foundation of the further improvement continued to be, as heretofore, the great demand for spot supplies. Speculation has broadened considerably, until yesterday's total transactions in futures reached 70,500 bags. To-day sales on the opening call were 21,000 bags, and for the entire session 70,500 bags. The market opened irregular at an advance of 5@20 points. Throughout the forenoon a good deal of excitement prevailed. The buying came from all classes of operators and included a larger proportion of investment transactions that at any time since the upward movement set in. Foreign buying was also a feature. Noon found the general level of the market reduced to a net advance of about 5 points, however, as enormous liquidation set in with the reaction rapid in the face of strong cables, strong accounts from the open market for spot coffee, and the rest of the influences. In the afternoon the market was steady until near
